Renovations bill moves to Senate for consideration

Funding for renovation of Nichols Gymnasium, roof repairs and preliminary planning for renovation of Weber Hall, and preliminary planning for the chemistry-biochemistry building is halfway home.

Bill 2156 of the Kansas Legislature passed through the House on Monday and has been introduced to the Senate, although it had not been assigned to a committee on Tuesday, according to a legislative spokeswoman.

The bill concerns appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1984, 1985 and 1986. The appropriations are for the initiation and completion of capital improvements for K-State, the University of Kansas, Kansas Technical Institute, Department of Administration, Kansas State Penitentiary, the Youth Center at Topeka and Osawatomie State Hospital. Among appropriations to K-State are capital improvements for Nichols Gym, Weber Hall and a chemistry-biochemistry building to replace Willard Hall.

As written in the House Ways and Means Committee, the bill states that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1984, $1.5 million would be allocated for reconstruction and equipping of Nichols. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1985, $4.2 million would be allocated.

As amended, the bill also specifies that $125,000 be allocated for preliminary planning for the chemistry-biochemistry building, and that $112,000 be allocated for Weber Hall roof repairs. The amendment also allocates $113,000 for preliminary planning for Weber Hall renovation. The amend-

Senate approves funding for regents; University salaries fail to gain status

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Senate passed 37-2 and returned to the House a bill appropriating $420.8 million total spending for the seven Regents' institutions in the next fiscal year, including $206.8 million from the state general fund.

The measure is about $178.5 million less in the total recommended by Carlin, but it is missing all money the Democratic governor suggested for faculty, student and state employee salaries.

K-State University would receive $61.9 million state aid under the Senate version of the bill. The largest allotment of state dollars in the bill is for the University of Kansas, which would receive $64.8 million from the state general fund. Wichita State University would receive $28.1 million.

Of the three smaller state universities, Emporia State would get the largest chunk of state money at $13.8 million, while Pittsburg State is pencilled in at $13.5 million and Fort Hays State is budgetted $12.7 million.

Also included in the measure is the Kansas State University Veterinary Medical Center with state spending of $3.5 million, the Kansas Technical Institute at Salina which would receive $2.4 million, and the Board of Regents which would receive $5.1 million.

Several appropriations were questioned and numerous amendments were attempted, the most vigorous centering on allocations for development of high technology research.

Carlin had recommended $1.5 million for equipment and programs to intensify high tech research at state universities as Kansas tries to expand into the field and attract new business to the state.

The House deleted the money Carlin suggested be spent on high tech development, but the Senate committee restored the funds. However, the upper chamber budget committee decided to establish three "centers of excellence" K-State, KU and Wichita State, and recommended each school receive $150,000 to concentrate in key high technology areas. If the schools accept the money, it must be matched by private donations.

Also, K-State was given $298,300 to purchase high technology equipment. KU would receive $378,100 for equipment and Wichita State was allotted $194,750. Pittsburg State was cut in on the equipment purchase project, with $78,850 designated to expand its plastics technology area.

The absence of money to establish centers of excellence at any of the other state school prompted several senators to try and amend the bill to include similar allocations. Three attempts failed to add money for Emporia and Hays, each by just one vote.

A bill allocating $43.5 million for the Department of Revenue, including $22.5 million from the state general fund, passed and returned to the House.

The House-passed budget bill is minus $1.7 million for various items Gov. John Carlin had recommended, including all money for the 4 percent cost of living raises.

The bill will return to the House for con-

Death education increases, reflects changing attitudes

(Editor's note: This is the first of a three-part series dealing with changing attitudes toward death and dying.)

By BILL BIDWELL
Copy Editor

It did not seem an appropriate day to talk about death as the rays of the late-morning sun beamed through the window of a Justin Hall office.

But Joan McNeil was more than willing.

Outside, people were hurrying to lunch or to class. McNeil was not in a hurry. She didn't mind discussing a once-avoided topic.

"Life is full of beginnings and ends," said the assistant professor of family and child development.

And death is one of those ends which people should talk about, believes McNeil, who started what may have been one of the nation's first courses on the subject — Death and the Family.

McNeil's view is more than philosophical lip service. It is from the heart.

SHE STARTED THE COURSE, one of three she now teaches about death, "to help myself out of my own needs" after the death of her first husband, James Sistrunk, a K-State faculty member.

The other courses are Loss, Grief and Bereavement, a graduate course taught in the summer, and Children and Death.

The trend in death education has become more widespread in the past 20 years. Not only are there organized attempts to teach such courses on the high school and college levels, but bold new programs — such as Hospice — to offer help and understanding to the dying and to their families are making headway.

Attitudes toward death and dying are changing. They are not the taboo subjects they once were and should not be considered morbid, according to McNeil.

"Death is a normal part of the life cycle," McNeil said, "and we should treat it that way."

PERHAPS COURSES SUCH as McNeil's are one reason for new attitudes and approaches to the subjects. Her work and the teaching and counseling by others who share her views have been, at least, an important influence.

Nothing can eliminate the grief that death

County attorney to leave position at end of month

Riley County Attorney Robert Socolofsky has resigned, Mike Swenson, press secretary for Gov. John Carlin, said Tuesday.

"We received the letter this morning," he said. "The resignation becomes effective April 30."

Socolofsky, a Democrat, was elected to a four-year term in November 1980.

Swenson said the Riley County Democratic Central Committee will name Socolofsky's replacement and submit that name to the governor.

"All the governor will do is fill out the commission and approve it," he said.

Ruth Schrum, chairman of the committee, said the selection process will take approximately three weeks.

She said she is now in the process of contacting people who might be interested in being considered for the position.

Approximately 87 local precinct committee representatives will have the opportunity to vote on the candidates, she said.

The Kansas Board for Discipline of Attorneys recommended March 2 that Socolofsky be publicly censured because of his role in a mistrial last summer.

A disciplinary hearing on Nov. 1, 1982, concerned an allegation that Socolofsky had anonymously mailed photocopies of newspaper clippings to jurors who had acquitted a Manhattan man on charges of selling marijuana. The clippings reported that the defendant later pleaded guilty to another drug charge.

Several of the same jurors were later asked to serve in an unrelated drug trial. Then-presiding Riley County District Judge Ronald Innes declared a mistrial after being informed of the mailings by one of the jurors for the second trial.

Socolofsky admitted in a public statement June 17, 1982, that he had mailed the clippings, and apologized to the court.

Publication board names fall editor, advertising manager

Editor and advertising manager for the fall Collegian were chosen Tuesday by the Board of Student Publications.

Paul Hanson, senior in journalism and mass communications, was chosen fall editor of the Collegian. Hanson, who is currently managing editor of the paper, was the government editor last fall and a reporter during the spring 1982 semester.

John McGrath, junior in journalism and mass communications, was selected as advertising manager. McGrath is currently a reporter for the Collegian. He was an advertising representative during the spring 1982 and fall 1982 semesters.

Dean of home economics named; Michigan educator to fill vacancy

Barbara Spilker Stowe, a former Nebraskan who, since 1980, has been assistant director of 4-H programs for the Cooperative Extension Service of Michigan State University, has been named the new dean of the College of Home Economics.

Stowe will begin duties Oct. 1, according to President Duane Acker.

Stowe will succeed Ruth Hoeflin as dean of one of the pioneering home economics programs in the country. Acker said Hoeflin will take an 11-month sabbatical leave starting Oct. 1 and will return to the Department of Family and Child Development faculty.

Acker, referring to Stowe as a "distinguished educator," commended the work of the search committee in filling the vacancy.

"Dr. Stowe is a first-rate scholar and administrator with a record of achievement which places her among the elite in this field in the country," he said.

Stowe, a 1954 graduate of the University of Nebraska, received a master's degree in textiles and clothing from Michigan State University in 1957. She earned a doctorate in textiles in 1973 from the University of North Carolina and North Carolina State University.

Stowe was head of the Department of Consumer Affairs at Auburn University from 1973 to 1977 when she was named chairman of the Department of Human Environment and Design in the MSU College of Human Ecology.

She is a past national president of the Association of College Professors of Textiles and Clothing and has been active in the American Home Economics Association.

Her experience also includes a year as a high school homemaking teacher in Nebraska and seven years as an instructor of textiles and clothing at the University of Kentucky and MSU.

Stray shot after NCAA game kills Wichitan

WICHITA — A stray rifle shot fired Monday night by two men celebrating after watching the NCAA championship basketball game apparently killed a 30-year-old pregnant woman, police said.

Kathleen Cawley died of a single gunshot wound to the head about 10 p.m. She was found lying in the doorway of her house after neighbors heard a gunshot and called police.

Detective Capt. Mike Hill said a neighbor of the victim called police Tuesday and reported seeing two men with a rifle in a tavern parking lot near Cawley's home Monday night.

Investigators determined the men, who had watched the basketball game in the tavern, shot three or four times at a sign on a phone booth located on a direct line in front of Cawley's home, Hill said. The shot that killed her traveled about 325 yards, he said.

Cawley's two small children inside the home were not hurt, Hill said.

The men, ages 24 and 33, were arrested and held Tuesday pending the possible filing of formal charges, he said.

An autopsy showed Cawley was three-to-four months pregnant. Sedgwick County Assistant District Attorney David Moses said the shooting was ruled a single homicide because Deputy Coroner Bill Eckert said the fetus would have been incapable of living outside the womb.

Gunmen pull off $10.5 million London heist

LONDON — At least $10.5 million in unmarked bills was stolen in Britain's biggest cash holdup, pulled off by six hooded gunmen who swigged cheap wine while rifling the vaults of a security firm thought to be as impregnable as Fort Knox.

Lloyd's of London, which insured most of the money, posted a record $750,000 reward for information leading to the thieves' capture. Detectives who questioned the security firm's employees discounted the possibility of an inside job.

Scotland Yard's Flying Squad combed London's tough East End looking for the thieves. But police reported no immediate breakthroughs by the 200-man squad, called in after the raid Monday on the headquarters of Security Express.

The previous biggest cash heist in Britain was the 1963 Great Train Robbery when a London mob stole the then equivalent of $7.3 million from a mail train carrying old banknotes to London to be destroyed.

Biologists help second condor chick hatch

SAN DIEGO — A second California condor chick was hatched Tuesday at the San Diego Zoo when biologists freed it early from its shell because of complications.

It was the zoo's second successful captive hatching of the rare species within a week. But on Tuesday, Sisquoc, the older chick, appeared to be losing its pep and appetite, officials at the San Diego Wild Animal park said.

The newest chick was resting in an infant isolette and zoo officials were confident it would survive its premature arrival. The as-yet unnamed chick eventually will be transferred to the Wild Animal Park.

"It's a little smaller and not quite as active," said zoo spokesman Jeff Jouett, comparing the new chick with Sisquoc, "but the keeper says it looks good at this point and is sure it will be fine."

LOS ANGELES — The last three segments of ABC's "The Thorn Birds" took the top three places in the latest Nielsen ratings, giving the network a big victory over CBS for the week that ended April 3.

"The Thorn Birds" surpassed "The Winds of War," telecast by ABC in February. It now ranks second only to ABC's "Roots" as the highest-rated mini-series of all time. ABC officials said "The Thorn Birds" reached the highest number of homes of any mini-series in history — 34.9 million per average minute.

An estimated 110 million people watched the 10-hour, four-part mini-series, still short of the estimated audience of 135 million for "Roots" in January 1977.

Socialist mayor asks common people to 'fight'

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Bernard Sanders, Burlington's socialist mayor, began his second term by calling for common people to challenge the rich and powerful by taking part in government.

"The time is now that working people, poor people and all people of independent mind and spirit must stand up, make their demands clear and learn how to fight for what they are entitled to," Sanders told the 200 people gathered at his inaugural Monday.

His victory two years ago was considered a fluke by some but he proved them wrong this year by winning 52 percent of the vote in a three-way race.

If the working people and poor do not "stand up and fight" for a better quality of life, he said, "the future of this country is bleak."

Video funding deserves praise

A plan by the Association of Residence Halls to install video machines in Derby Food Center to provide money for a scholarship fund is an idea worthy of praise.

Installation of video games will provide revenue for scholarships and offer another entertainment alternative for residents in the complex.

While it's true that inconveniences such as noise and vandalism may occur from setting up the games, the benefits it would provide far outweigh the detriments.

Besides, why not let video games pay for scholarships? With too few scholarships available to college students, money which would most likely be spent off campus could now be channeled into a productive use for the University.

Also, few entertainment activities exist to relieve students' education costs. Helping to pay for tuition by offering scholarships through video game revenue is one funding option which deserves commendation.

Club section needed

Editor,

I would like to state a few comments on behalf of Ag Science Day club displays and the efforts of the horticultural therapy club.

Last year, we won first place in the Ag Science Day club display category and were not mentioned in the Collegian. This year, we won first place again and, as could be predicted, the Collegian left us out.

The reason I mention this is many students have worked hard this year to set up displays to demonstrate their knowledge to others and to attract potential students to K-State.

Granted, the Collegian can't cover all club news, but I think major achievements should be noted at least once a year. Many students are unaware that K-State has the finest program in horticultural therapy in the country.

Perhaps, in the future, the Collegian will note student group achievements on a wider scale than currently exists. A special section at the end of the semester might be a good way to show these achievements.

Police need technique

Editor,

Re: Brian La Rue's Tuesday editorial ("Illegal technique must be stopped") whining about cops who chase speeders.

La Rue said, "Law enforcement officials are not above the law..." True, but I rather think the job they do is way above anything anyone else does for fun or profit. Why make things more difficult for the cops? If cops can only speed down the highway with lights and sirens going, perhaps we ought to require speeders to use the same equipment so innocent motorists can get out of the way.

La Rue also mentions an old saw about it being better to let nine guilty men go rather than take the risk of imprisoning one innocent man. Maybe, but I'll take my chances. The odds are if I obey the rules, I will never be wronged by the law. At the same time, while an innocent man in prison can't harm the community, nine guilty ones at large almost certainly will.

The Friend of Your Youth

"The Friend of Your Youth is the only friend you will ever have, for he does not really see you. He sees in his mind a face which does not exist any more...which by some inane and doddering confusion of the universe is for the moment attached to a not too happily met and boring stranger. But he humors the drooling, doddering confusion of the universe and continues to address politely that dull stranger by the name which properly belongs to the boy face and to the time when the boy voice called..."

My copy of "All the King's Men" is not as tattered and dog-eared as some people's Bibles. Its corners are bent and its paperback covers ease open unless it is wedged between other books on a shelf. The spine is cracked and someone somewhere in a bookstore punched a hole in the front cover to prove it was a used book.

When I first began reading the book for a class last semester, it was just another book needing to be read. It was interesting, but not until I came to the passage used here did the book really sink in. For I had already met the Friend of My Youth but didn't know it.

The Friend of Your Youth is not the only friend you have but the one that when you remember, comes quickly to mind. When I remember, I think of the Friend of My Youth and a bicycle trip we took one summer.

Juniors in high school, we were allowed to wander for 10 days from one end of Minnesota to the other, supposedly following a carefully planned route. We did follow the route pretty closely, but still we were there on our own. With the risk of sounding maudlin, we had a great time and have some great stories.

But now we go to different universities and our lives have gone in different directions. There were attempts to do things together our first year of college — I went back for a big concert and he came up for the big games. But with different jobs, we didn't see much of each other the following summers.

This summer, he was unemployed and I had a few weeks to kill before I started work, so we took off on another bicycle trek, touring the northeast section of Kansas in six days. It wasn't the same, though.

The entire trip I was driven by some desire to be somewhere at a certain time — some town by noon for lunch or by nightfall to pitch camp. Three years ago, I wanted to stop at every small town cafe to drink up each one's flavor. This last time I found it very hard to shop in small town groceries or take a half hour to drink another Dr. Pepper.

Anything he did, I was ready to criticize and had to force myself not to. If something did not go as I thought it should, I was ready to explode. This was happening between two friends and to a person who bicycles to see the real world.

"...the Friend of Your Youth is your friend because he does not see you any more."

Now when we are both home together, we try to at least shoot a game of pool. But that is usually the extent of the night, shooting pool and conversing little. Conversations seem strained. The effort is there to communicate, but is somehow lost in each meeting's salutations. We make plans to meet again and probably secretly hope there is some reason the other can't be there or will forget.

When we do meet, I expect to meet the Friend of My Youth because that is how I remember him, not this new person. I try not to see him as he is, but as he was.

Our lives have gone in different directions and we have different tales to tell. We have new friends and plans and dreams have changed. I try not to live in the past, but that is where our friendship seems to be heading.

"...And perhaps he never saw you. What he saw was simply part of the furniture of the wonderful opening world. Friendship was something he suddenly discovered and had to give away as a recognition of and payment for the breathlessly opening world which momently divulged itself like a moonflower. It didn't matter a damn to whom he gave it, for the fact of giving was what mattered, and if you happened to be handy you were automatically endowed with all of the appropriate attributes of a friend and forever after your reality is irrevelvant. The Friend of Your Youth is the only friend you will ever have..."

Xerox donates reading machine to help blind

Gretchen Holden, director of Services for Students with Physical Limitations; Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries; and Virginia Quiring, associate dean of libraries, joined dignitaries from the University of Kansas and Wichita State University in Gov. John Carlin's office last Wednesday to accept the gift of a new reading machine for the blind.

The Xerox Corp. has donated a Kurzweil Reading Machine for the blind to each school. The machine enables a blind person to lay a printed document on the glass and listen while it reads and speaks.

"Several hours of training are required to be able to use the machine," Holden said, "but it is hoped that the machine will make reading much easier for students once they have learned to use it."

New scholarship honors long-time farm editor

The Director of Public Affairs for the Kansas City Board of Trade, Rod Turnbull, has been honored with the establishment of a scholarship in his name.

The Rod Turnbull Scholarship Fund will benefit upperclassmen in the College of Agriculture. Funds for the scholarship program have been given by friends and associates of Turnbull, long-time farm editor for the Kansas City Star, in honor of his outstanding career in agricultural business affairs and agricultural journalism.

Awards from the fund will be made to students who have completed at least 30 credit hours and who are majoring in agricultural journalism. Recommendations for recipients of the scholarships will be made by the Ag Journalism Scholarhip Committee to the University General Scholarship Committee.

Regional History Day scheduled for Friday

"Turning Points in History" is the theme for the first Regional History Day, scheduled to begin at 8 a.m. on Friday in Eisenhower Hall.

"The purpose of History Day is to foster an appreciation for history and to give recognition for good work done in the subject," Marion Gray, associate professor of history, said. The regional event is preliminary to a nationally sponsored program ending with a National History Day.

Gray said a competition will be held that "gives secondary school students an opportunity to do research and to gain recognition for their work."

The two best entries in the contest categories will advance to Kansas State History Day on May 14. From the state contest, the best entries will go on to the national convention.

Entries will be on display from 10:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. on the first floor of Eisenhower Hall.

Faculty cap, gown rental deadline is Friday

Faculty members can rent caps and gowns for Commencement in May at the Union Bookstore through Friday. Rental charges must be paid for when caps and gowns are ordered.

A late charge of $3 will be assessed after Friday. Rental apparel may be picked up at the Union between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. May 11-13. All rentals are to be returned to the bookstore by noon May 16.

Engineers honor two 'distinguished' graduates

Two University graduates received the College of Engineering's Distinguished Service Awards at the Engineering Open House Awards Banquet March 26.

The awards were presented to John W. Frazier, a partner in Finney & Turnipseed, Consulting Engineers, of Topeka, and to Gordon E. Goering, senior vice president of Phillips Petroleum Co., Bartlesville, Okla., for outstanding contributions to the engineering profession and to their alma mater.

"The Distinguished Service Awards are a means by which we may honor the fine achievements of our graduates," Donald E. Rathbone, engineering dean, said. "These graduates have excelled not only in engineering but in professional societies and community activities as well."

Frazier is a 1935 graduate in civil engineering and Goering is a 1945 graduate in chemical engineering. Goering became senior vice president of Phillips in June 1980 and is responsible for the company's worldwide petroleum productions operations. Frazier joined Finney & Turnipseed in 1946 after 11 years with the State Highway Commission and became a partner in the firm in 1964.

Foundation receives final part of Kramer gift

The University Foundation has received final distributions from the estate of long-time professor of home economics, Martha M. Kramer. The gift to the foundation amounted to more than $388,000 and consisted of cash and securities from her estate.

Proceeds from the distribution have been placed in the William and Mary Heaton Memorial Scholarship Fund, established by Kramer in the late 1960s. She was the granddaughter of the Heatons.

The Heaton fund was created to "provide aid to women students who were working their way through college," Less Longberg, foundation controller, said.

During the 1981-82 academic year, 110 women students received major gifts from the fund. Principal of the fund exceeds $1 million.

City commission gives first approval of parking zone on Fairchild Avenue

By LUCINDA ELLISON
Staff Writer

Parking. It can create problems for anyone, ranging from learning how to parallel park to simply finding a space. For students, spaces are diminishing.

In Manhattan City Commission action on Tuesday night, the first reading of an ordinance establishing a parking permit zone on Fairchild Avenue was approved. The ordinance, if given the final go-ahead, would prohibit street parking between 2 and 9 a.m. unless the vehicle has a special parking permit provided by the city.

In discussion, complaints and suggestions were heard from residents living on Fairchild Avenue, and concerned members of sororities situated along Fairchild Terrace.

Residents expressed concern with parking in excess of 48 hours or more, causing inadequate snow removal and street sweeping. One resident, Rosie Pettle, said her drive had been blocked by a student's car.

Mayor Eugene Klingler reminded those present the restriction is intended to guard against inconvenience to homeowners.

"It (the ordinance) has to do with property owners parking in front of their own home, not as discrimination against students," he said.

MEMBERS OF Alpha Xi Delta, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Delta Delta Delta sororities attended the meeting to air concerns. Questions about whether the zoning could later spread to Fairchild Terrace, location of the houses, were raised. According to sorority representatives, parking available at the greek houses now is only able to accommodate approximately half the number of spaces needed.

"With all respect, I do see both sides of the coin," Karin Hajinian, member of Delta Delta Delta and Panhellenic Council, said.

"We would be all for cooperating with the neighborhood. We have never really been approached with this directly," Hajinian added.

CURRENTLY, SIMILAR ZONING ordinances are in effect on three sides of campus.

"Whenever we discuss this part of town, it (the ordinance) comes down to a conflict between sororities and fraternities, and the community. I fail to see why this has to escalate to a conflict between two groups," Pettle said.

"I do know it works on three sides of campus. I believe it ought to work on the fourth side too," she added.

"This has become a real problem," Commissioner Dave Fiser, said, noting the city is "starting to ring the University."

Fiser added:

"I can see more requests coming. Every time we do one more of these (requests) we're pushing the parking into another neighborhood. I think we're just transferring the problem."

Jerry Petty, city engineer, said that under such an ordinance, property owners of any real estate next to streets under a parking zone ordinance are allowed two parking permits per dwelling unit and one guest permit.

ALTHOUGH UNIVERSITY living organizations in the areas are included in this allowance under ordinances currently in effect, considerations could be made.

"We're drawing up a special ordinance for each area here. There's no reason we have to draw them up in the same way," Klingler said.

In further business, the commission conducted a public hearing which resulted in the adoption of a resolution approving the city's 1983 Small Cities Community Development Block Grant Application.

The application, to be submitted to the Department of Housing and Urban Development, would total approximately $687,000. Manhattan is eligible for $1 million, Gary Stith, director of community development, said.

TWO PROJECTS ARE designated in the application. The first involves improvements of water mains in the south section of the city. Two-inch mains will be replaced by 10-inch water mains between Houston and Colorado streets, according to the plan. The existing water mains are considered to have inadequate water flow for fire fighting services and household use and for development expected to take place in the area, Stith said.

A developer has made a commitment for new residential units in the south part of the city, which would further create a need for an improved system.

This part of the application would cost approximately $225,000, Stith said.

After discussion, commissioners suggested the city provide $50,000 from local funds, which had already been designated for use in the city's water system.

"Any time you can show you're using local resources with block grant resources, it will strengthen your application," Stith said.

A second project included in the application would involve acquisition of land surrounding Fair Lane, converting it to an industrial area and eliminating substandard residential areas.

Costs of the improvement include $271,000 for acquisition, $131,000 for relocation, $15,000 for demolition and $1,000 for disposition, Stith said.

The commission also authorized money necessary to provide lighting for Frank Meyer Field, contingent on an inter-local agreement between city staff and the University. The agreement must also be approved by the commission once it is made.

Because Manhattan does not have an adequate baseball field, the commission chose to aid the University in supplying Frank Meyer Field with lighting, rather than build a new park.

Although cost of the project has not been determined, $50,000 was the estimate. The commission designated funds for the project to be taken from the available revenue sharing funds which have not been allocated.

Mann, Klingler, Lindamood win commission bids

A record number of voters turned out to elect Eugene Klingler, Suzanne Lindamood and Rick Mann to the City Commission in Tuesday's election.

Klingler and Mann were two of the three candidates supporting the proposed downtown mall. Russell Reitz, incumbent commissioner who also supported the mall proposal, lost his bid for re-election.

Voter turnout was heavy, despite the cold, rainy weather, Wanda Coder, Riley County clerk, said.

Three seats on the five-seat commission were up for re-election. Incumbents Klingler, Lindamood and Reitz were challenged by Jean Farrell, Tom Gray and Mann.

Coder had predicted a large turnout for the election because of the controversy over the proposed mall. A total of 47.3 percent of registered voters went to the polls on Tuesday.

Klingler, Mann and Reitz support the current downtown redevelopment plan. Farrell, Gray and Lindamood oppose it.

After all 31 precincts reported in, Lindamood received the most votes with 4,200, followed by Mann with 3,703 and Klingler with 3,680. Lindamood had been ahead the entire night. She also received the most votes in the March 1 primary.

Reitz received 3,451 votes, Gray 3,074 and Farrell 2,854.

Lindamood and the second-place finisher, Mann, will serve four-year terms and the third winner, Klingler, will serve a two-year term.

School board members for USD 383 were also selected in Tuesday's election. Six candidates competed for four positions.

Incumbents Bob Newsome, Charles Thompson, Frank Tillman and Barbara Withee overturned the challenge of Sherl Prawl and Beverly Wall. With all 41 precincts reporting, Withee received the most votes with 5,302, followed by Thompson with 4,566, Tillman with 4,557 and Newsome with 4,531.

National student housing prices rise

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

As energy prices rose over the last nine years, college housing costs rose with them. But as oil prices now decline, campus housing officials around the country report that what went up isn't necessarily going to come down for students.

Few schools have allowed their lower energy prices to interfere with their now-annual springtime announcements of higher housing prices for next fall.

"You'd expect that since higher oil prices brought housing costs up, then lower oil prices would bring them back down," Bob Sherman, Yale's director of utilities and energy conservation, said. "Realistically, it isn't likely to be that way."

ANY MONEY YALE SAVES from lower energy costs will go toward paying off the conservation hardware it has bought over the last few years.

It's happening that way at schools across the country.

"The volatile nature of energy prices practically guarantees that there will be no immediate reductions in housing costs," said Chris Crittenden, who heads the joint energy task force of three national college administrators' organizations.

He has found "students aren't likely to see the benefits of the oil slump unless they are at one of the schools that has been adding energy charges to the basic room rents."

But George Washington University (GWU), one the schools that tacked extra "energy surcharges" onto housing bills, dropped its surcharge two years ago.

Lower fuel costs, however, have saved the housing office there an extra $45,000 so far this year.

GWU DIRECTOR OF HOUSING David McElveen figured it amounts to about $100 per student in university housing, but residents shouldn't expect a refund.

"Unfortunately, because of the long lead time involved in planning the (housing) budget, students won't be getting a reduction in room rates," McElveen said. "Maybe we'll get our new furniture a little earlier than we expected."

Energy costs continue to decline

Paul Knapp, chief of the Association of Physical Plant Administrators of Universities and Colleges, pointed out "it's a little early to be jubilant over a drop in oil prices."

"It ought to relieve some of the pressure," he said, "but unless oil goes down faster than inflation drives everything else up, it won't help much. I don't think dorm rates would ever go down because of it."

Although OPEC's benchmark price recently tumbled 17 percent and the Reagan administration forecast an annual inflation rate of only 4.5 percent, the University of Nebraska is seemingly the only school prepared to pass the savings on to students directly.

"I THINK I CAN EXPECT a more moderate 3- to 5-percent increase in housing costs," NU Housing Director Douglas Zatechka said, "instead of the 8, 9, 11 and 18 percent increases that some schools have been seeing."

"It isn't an entirely altruistic motivation," he added. "I need to keep our halls filled, and to do that we must be financially attractive."

Zatechka, Knapp and the others credit conservation as much as oil price drops for lower campus energy costs, regardless of who ultimately benefits from them.

Knapp said he believes schools that installed dual-capacity systems — those that can burn different kinds of fuels — are "in the best position to take advantage of price cuts."

Washington State, Georgia, GWU and Yale are among those who have the systems.

"IF OIL BECOMES REALLY competitive here, we'll burn it," Ted Simon of Georgia's physical plant department, said. "Right now, coal is our cheapest option."

But not all conservation measures have paid off. Wesleyan University physical plant Director Peter Tveskov contended schools that stalled conservation measures now stand the best chance of getting federal funds to help them.

"Those of us that have been putting our own resources into conservation haven't had much luck getting federal funds because we can't show dramatic differences made by the projects," he said. "The work has already been done.

"In that sense, I think we've been punished for our foresight."

Tveskov said he also wonders if colleges will now forget about their energy conservation programs altogether.

"IN THE '70s, the conservation movement was as much ideological as economic," he observed. "It became primarily economic. Now, for some people, it isn't much of an issue at all."

"The oil slump hit at a time when many schools are considering multi-million dollar conversion projects," Crittenden added. "I suspect this situation is going to put the skids on those kinds of major capital investments."

Crittenden said he advises colleges to proceed even if "administrators are going to be tempted to build the new gym or the new arts building instead."

"Prices may go up six months down the road," he warned.

Most schools seem to have received the message already.

"We still have plenty of incentive to conserve," Jack Echols of the University of Alabama, said.

Local residence halls join trend, remain best bargain in Big Eight

Students living in residence halls next fall can plan on paying more for their housing, according to Thomas Frith, director of housing.

The cost of living in the residence halls and Jardine Terrace Apartments will increase $80, a 4.5 percent jump, for the 1983-84 school year.

Students now paying $870 per semester will pay $910 a semester for housing, Frith said.

Cost for students wanting to stay in residence halls during the summer term will also increase, he said.

The $40 increase will raise the summer cost to $440.

The increases were approved by the Kansas Board of Regents last November, he said, and were expected since there has been an increase every school year in the past to meet the high cost of operating the halls.

The extra income from the increases will go toward paying the cost of labor to run the halls and also for the increasing cost of meals, Frith said.

Increases at K-State, he said, are not as great as other Big Eight schools, such as Missouri, which is increasing its fee 13.1 percent for the next school year.

"For a Big Eight school, it's still the least expensive," he said.

Other universities in Kansas, such as the University of Kansas, will charge students $1,930 to live in residence halls next year, compared to $1,820 per year at K-State, Frith said.

Although prices are increasing each year, Frith said residence halls have still been filled to their full capacity every fall.

Government 'overstated' student loan defaults

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

The number of students who fail to repay federal loans may not be as high as U.S. Department of Education officials have been reporting, according to a new study by the American Council on Education (ACE).

Since 1975, the government has been releasing "inflated" default rates which reflect the number of students who initially default on their loans, but who may resume payments in response to collection efforts, the study indicated.

Most recently, the education department has asserted default rates of 15.4 percent on National Direct Student Loans (NDSLs) and 12.3 percent on Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs).

But the study shows the default rates drop significantly once collection efforts are made.

The after-collection default rate for NDSLs is 8 percent, while the percentage of GSL defaulters is actually 3.8 percent.

"I think it points out that the quoted default rates are, to say the least, an overstatement," ACE spokesman Elaine El-Khawas said.

"There are deadbeats in the student loan program, no doubt about it. But it's not as dramatic as the government figures have indicated," she said.

"THE 12.3 PERCENT default rate for GSLs is made up of cumulative default figures," an education department source conceded. "All it really tells you is the number of loans that have ever been defaulted on, and doesn't take into account repayments later on."

But the after-collections default rate "is also misleading because it does not take into account people who again default on their repayments. It simply assumes that once repayment begins, it will continue."

The real default rate is somewhere in between, the source said, "probably somewhere around 8 or 9 percent. But which figures you use depends on what the party involved wants to show."

"We don't like the idea of overstating the default rates, but we're stuck with two different systems, neither of which gives the real default rate," Robert Coates, head of the education department's college-based loan programs added.

BUT EL-KHAWAS and other officials suggested the government uses the pre-collection default rates to make the problem "appear worse than it really is," perhaps to make it easier to justify cutting the programs' budgets.

"I don't know their motives, and I don't think there's been any real conspiracy to deceive the public," El-Khawas said.

"But if you state a 12 percent default rate for GSLs, as the government does, it certainly makes it sound like there's a real default problem. The after-collections rate of 3.8 percent, while still representing some default problems, seems much more realistic and acceptable."

Spurred by perceived default problems, federal attorneys in a number of cities have launched spectacularly publicized efforts to track down deadbeats.

But the tight job market and other economic factors are the main reasons students default on their loans, El-Khawas pointed out.

"For the type of people we're loaning to, the default rate is really surprisingly low.

"After all," she said, "we're dealing with a segment of the population that has no track record of credit, and by its very nature would be considered as high-risk borrowers."

Crime of the week

CRIME STOPPERS 539-7777 CONFIDENTIALLY

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, Inc.

This week's Crime Stoppers crime-of-the-week involves the burglary of a Riley County residence.

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, a non-profit organization, provides details of an unsolved crime each week. Citizens are encouraged to provide information needed to assist police in solving this and other crimes. Informants, who will remain anonymous, can receive cash rewards of up to $1,000.

Between 7 and 11 p.m. on March 5, a person or persons unknown broke into a residence in southern Riley County and removed numerous items. The house is located approximately four miles southeast of the intersection of Deep Creek Road and Highway 177 South on Deep Creek Road.

The perpetrators pried open a back door to the residence. Once inside, the suspects ransacked the house and removed numerous items. Prior to leaving, it appeared that one suspect fell down the basement stairs, possibly injuring himself.

Property stolen included a Sharp Carousel microwave oven, RCA XL-100 13-inch color TV, Jensen stereo speaker, Akai CS-MO2 cassette deck, Akai AT-KO3-L stereo tuner, Akai AM-VO3 stereo amplifier, B-Fox double-barrel 20-gauge shotgun and Winchester 30-06 rifle with scope and sling.

Anyone with information on this crime, location of stolen property or information on any other crime should call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777.

Committee to review severance tax

TOPEKA (AP) — The severance tax bill went to a House-Senate conference committee late Tuesday, presumably just to tidy it up and remove any potential constitutional flaws.

However, Senate President Ross Doyen raised some eyebrows when he named two ardent severance tax opponents and a third senator who is less than an enthusiastic supporter as the three Senate members of the six-member committee.

Doyen picked Sens. Charlie Angell, a Republican from Plains; Jim Allen, an Ottawa Republican, and Joe Norvell, a Hays Democrat. Angell and Norvell have been at the forefront of the fight against the tax for three sessions.

Speaker Mike Hayden named himself and Reps. James Braden, R-Clay Center, and Robin Leach, D-Linwood. Braden is chairman and Leach ranking minority member of the House Assessment and Taxation Committee.

Norvell is not a member of the Senate tax committee, but Angell and Allen are.

Doyen's appointments appeared to be more posturing than any serious attempt to do material harm to the bill.

Doyen said the Senate members have been instructed "just to remove the warts," and Senate Democratic Leader Jack Steineger and Carlin's chief of staff, Bill Hoch, were not overly upset by the Doyen appointees.

"I believe the conferees will have their instructions to remove the constitutional warts and that's all," said Steineger, who said he conferred with Doyen about how to handle the bill and they agreed the measure should go to a conference committee to clean it up.

Steineger said he has an agreement with Doyen under which the bill will not be substantially changed and will retain the provisions which cause it to produce $103 million new revenue to the state next fiscal year.

"I think the public might be disturbed that three such distinguished opponents of the severance tax would all be sitting together in the same room to theoretically decide the fate of the bill," said Hoch.

"But I don't think the public ought to be too concerned, because a good severance tax bill is going to come out of the Legislature. They have been so recalcitrant that this is just one last fling."

Doyen confirmed the fact he made those three appointments to the conference committee did not carry great significance.

"That bill's going to come out of that committee, and there is no problem with it," he told reporters after announcing his choices.

"It's got a lot of warts on it, sort of like a toad, and we've got to remove them."

Asked why he picked Norvell, who has taken to the Senate floor several times this session to castigate Carlin for proposing and pushing the severance tax and the media for allegedly not reporting the issue fairly, Doyen said he always asks the Democratic Senate leadership for recommendations on conference committee appointments and usually accepts them.

"I asked yesterday for the minority party's recommendation," Doyen told newsmen. "The minority leader (Steineger) wasn't here, so I asked the assistant minority leader (Norvell) and he picked himself."

Steineger had not returned from a Colorado ski trip by Monday's session.

Asked if he thought members of the public who support the severance tax might view his appointees with a jaundiced eye, Doyen replied:

"No, I don't. I assured the minority leader we're going to work on the bill and get it out of there."

About the only more visible severance tax opponent Doyen might have picked is Sen. Frank Gaines, Augusta Democrat and a prominent oil producer. Gaines said he asked Doyen not to put him on the conference committee, but said he stands ready to advise its members on legal technicalities to clean it up. Gaines also is an attorney.

The potential constitutional problem involves how the House stripped another bill during floor debate Monday and amended the entire severance tax bill into it, and the fact Hayden forgot to call for a vote to take emergency action on it.

In legal theory, if the bill goes into the conference committee and other minor flaws are corrected, and then both houses vote on it again it will clear the potential constitutional infirmities.

The bill would impose an 8 percent tax on oil and natural gas production, but exempt certain new oil wells for two years and other two-barrel or less stripper wells. It would allow oil producers to deduct 3.5 percent of the tax as a credit for the local property taxes they pay and gas producers to deduct a 1 percent credit. It would take effect May 1.

Reagan stands firm on defense budget increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Tuesday rejected calls from key Republicans to reduce his record defense buildup plan or risk its defeat in the Senate's GOP-controlled Budget Committee.

Republican members of the committee, emerging from a nearly two-hour White House meeting with the president, said Reagan was adamant in pushing for approval of his spending plan, which calls for about a 10 percent annual increase, after adjusting for inflation.

"The president, as of today, is still asking that we consider his 10 percent increase in defense," said Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Budget Committee and a leading advocate for paring the president's spending proposal.

The president refused to back down even though Domenici and other committee members told him the panel would not approve the full spending request, the GOP senators reported outside the White House.

"There are not the votes, certainly for the president's figures," said Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan. "What sort of compromise we can achieve is what's being debated."

Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo., said Reagan's position on the defense budget represents his "strongest commitment to any issue that I have seen." Armstrong said it is possible the president may succeed in pushing his defense plan through the Budget Committee if he wages an all-out fight for it.

Although he showed no inclination for any radical alteration of his defense budget, Reagan did indicate that "it might be possible to find additional savings as a result of lower inflation and lower fuel costs," White House spokesman Larry Speakes said.

Speakes also said savings may result from the recommendations of a blue-ribbon panel that is proposing to deploy MX missiles in existing launch silos.

Altogether, the savings from lower inflation, lower fuel costs and the MX would total $8 billion to $10 billion over five years — a paltry sum compared with the more sizable cuts many Senate Republicans want.

Domenici said no specific dollar figures were discussed in the meeting, and declined to set a figure publicly other than to say that a House bill to increase defense spending by something under 3 percent a year, after adjusting for inflation, is too low.

Domenici would say only that he favored a "significant" reduction in Reagan's planned defense buildup.

Back on Capitol Hill, Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee told reporters that, despite the disagreement, the Senate eventually would approve a budget that Reagan "can live with."

Sources said Domenici used a 10-day congressional vacation to develop and submit to the White House a revised budget blueprint calling for defense spending increases averaging about 7 percent after inflation for the next five years.

The 7 percent figure is significantly above the 5 percent spending increase Domenici favored earlier in the year, but well below Reagan's original proposal, which called for about a 10 percent increase.

There were no precise estimates in advance of the meeting of how much Domenici's new proposal would trim Reagan's spending request. But based on recent statements from administration officials, it would fall far short of satisfying the president.

Students sing Christian message during Nooner

By BETH BAKER
Staff Writer

Two students, hoping their audience would hear and understand the message "Christ came to earth to give and not take," performed a Nooner in the Union Catskeller Tuesday.

Jason Lopez, senior in journalism and mass communications, and Dale Hawkinson, graduate in math, played acoustic guitars while singing mostly Christian songs.

Each performed alone and then combined talents on several songs.

Prior to the next-to-last song, "Hallelujah," Hawkinson said, "Life is more than just what you live for today." He talked for several minutes about his belief in God.

Review

While the pair's guitar skill and voices were good, the songs were enough to convey the Christian message. Each provoked one to think about individual goals and life's purpose. The songs' gentle messages were more effective than Hawkinson's short time of witnessing.

Lopez began the Nooner and sang several songs which didn't have an obvious Christian theme.

The first of these was "A Boy from the Country" by Michael Murphy. The boy is "the only one that sees the forest through the trees."

He also sang "The Grave" from Don McLean's "American Pie" album. "Ode to Bethlehem" by Joel Chernoff was Lopez's third song and the first with a religious message.

His best performance was during "Heart of Gold" by Neil Young. Lopez strapped a harmonica around his neck and did an excellent job of accompanying himself on the harmonica and guitar.

"The Tiller," which Lopez wrote and sang, was inspired by a painting of a farmer pushing his cart of tools in a field.

"The man not only had love for the soil but was doing something he was profiting from," Lopez explained.

This inspiration happens to most of us when we view a good painting and experience a feeling the artist intended to bring out in us, he said. Lopez's song, in turn, caused the listener to experience a moment of quiet gratitude for all he or she has.

The song, which depicts a farmer more typical of older days, conveyed the message of God's goodness to man by providing for him and the love the man had for God.

Hawkinson, who said he had not played for an audience for eight or nine years, began with a warm-up on his guitar. While his singing voice is good, Hawkinson's real talent lies in the guitar.

He played and sang two songs. The first, "Cast Your Cares Upon Him" by John Michael Talbot, relayed the message "only when you die are you free to live."

"Love You So" by Paul Clark was his second selection and also a Christian one. In straining for a high note, Hawkinson apologized for not quite hitting the note. The apology wasn't necessary because the rest of the song was done well and his emotion was evident to the audience.

While the audience may not have exactly embraced the message the pair wanted to convey, the two — by performing their Christian songs well — provoked the listener to think.

Working with wheat

Steve Curran, instructor in grain science, works amongst the tubes and filters of the mill in Shellenberger Hall. The mill occupies parts of five floors in the hall and can produce up to 30,000 pounds of flour in a 24-hour period.

Kansas State's Department of Grain Science and Industry, the only department of its kind in the world, takes clean wheat, processes it into flour and bakes bread to test the quality of the wheat.

Those involved with the Department of Grain Science and Industry have a right to brag about being the best. As a matter of fact, they can also brag about being unique — they have the only such program around.

"It's the only one in the world — in the galaxy," said Dale Eustace, professor of grain science.

At K-State, students and researchers work in every phase of developing, growing and processing the wheat kernel.

Whether experimenting to produce new varieties of wheat or grinding the kernels into a powdery flour for making doughnuts and breads, those working with wheat at K-State strive for a better product and perpetuate Kansas' reputation as the wheat state.

The uniqueness of the grain science program stems from the fact that it is the only such program associated with and integrated into a university.

"There are a number of milling schools around the world, but they are more trade schools," said Professor Emeritus John Shellenberger. He added that Pennsylvania State University offered milling engineering, but it was discontinued. More recently, the University of Minnesota had a five-year milling program under the school of engineering, but it was also discontinued.

'The wheat quality in Kansas is as good as it is anywhere. The hard red winter wheat for breads is the best there is anywhere in the world.'

Steve Curran
instructor of grain science

"We'll always be the only milling school," Eugene Farrell, professor emeritus of grain science, said. "It is too expensive to start a full four-year college of this kind."

THE PRIMARY FUNCTION of the grain science department is teaching, Farrell said, although its prestige is largely a result of research in milling of wheat varieties.

This research will be aided by the new $1.5 million mill which is housed on the recently constructed third floor of Shellenberger Hall.

It will allow for milling of such crops as grain sorghum, corn and rye. Experimental plans include testing products such as sorghum flour and corn grits for palatability.

Construction on the building is expected to be completed in May and the equipment is scheduled to be installed this summer.

FUNDS FOR THE additions have been supplied by businesses in the milling industry. Equipment is manufactured by the Allied Trade Industry, a company which specializes in making milling equipment.

Arlin Ward, professor of grain science, said equipment worth $1.5 million has been donated to the department from all over the world. These include gifts from private flour milling equipment companies from countries such as Germany and Italy, he said.

Despite looking like a conglomeration of metal, each piece of equipment serves a purpose.

Other equipment includes purifiers, associated pneumatic lifts (to draw the ground product from under the grinding roll and pass it to the sifters), scales, mixers, packaging machines and ingredient feeders (to add things such as enrichments and malt to the flour).

WHEAT MILLED at K-State comes from local suppliers, Steve Curran, instructor of grain science, said. Farmers, local cooperatives and the K-State agronomy farm are sources of wheat.

The wheat is milled in a gradual reduction process, Curran said. This is in contrast to early milling processes used, in which stones were used to grind wheat, pulverizing kernels in one pass.

The gradual reduction process involves grinding wheat in several passes or stages. The stages gently open and remove the inner part of the kernel, called the endosperm, and separate it from the bran coat.

In the process, wheat is sent through four to five break passages. Each break separates the bran from the endosperm. Fine endosperm is sent on through the process to be ground on smooth rollers.

THE COARSEST material is sent back to the break rollers, where more of the bran material is sifted out.

The break system is one of about six different systems used in the milling process, Curran said. Other systems purify and size the wheat and further reduce the particle size.

Specialty flours are sold at Wednesday bake sales sponsored by the Bakery Science Club. Flour is sold in 50-pound bags to walk-in customers. The majority of the flour is sold to residence hall food services, Curran said.

Testing of several varieties of hard red winter wheat and soft winter wheat is also done by the grain science department. The testing is done in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture and the Wheat Quality Council.

NEW WHEAT varieties are developed by state or private breeders and the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station for possible release, Curran said.

The varieties are sent to the department where they are milled and checked for milling quality. The flour is then sent to 35 mills and bakeries throughout the United States for evaluation under their specific laboratory conditions.

Products are baked from the test flour and evaluated for characteristics such as grain and texture, outside crust, baking quality and volume.

Results are sent back to K-State and are considered jointly by growers, millers, bakers, grain companies and state wheat breeders, Curran said. No variety is released on the market unless it is equal to or better than current varieties.

"Every year we try to upgrade protein quantity and quality," Curran said. "It has worked well. The wheat quality in Kansas is as good as it is anywhere. The hard red winter wheat for breads is the best there is anywhere in the world."

Reef Allen, senior in food science, checks the temperature of an oven before baking loaves of bread. After baking, the loaves go through a variety of tests.

RESULTS ARE ALSO sent to commercial companies such as General Mills and Pillsbury, large baking companies, other research labs and institutions and the Department of Agriculture.

The department has also tested wheat varieties for governments and private industry of other nations.

Farrell said that in addition to performing research, many department faculty and staff work abroad and teach short courses to visiting milling groups from such countries as Japan, India and Eastern European countries.

Production and marketing research is done by faculty and staff in the feed science curriculum.

"We collaborate with the animal science department in that we will run tests and make feeds for them," Shellenberger said.

RESEARCH IS NOT complete without education. "When I was department head I always stressed the ability of professors to meet their students, which come first (before research)," Shellenberger said.

A pilot feed mill is used by students for research in labs. They conduct experiments on particle sizing and heat treatments.

"We train by hands-on experience — theory as well as practical," Ward said. "At K-State we train basic chemistry and math. A person is retrained an average of five times before he retires because of the changing technology. We teach why to do things, not necessarily how."

Within the grain science department are three curricula: milling science and management, bakery science and management, and feed science and management. The milling science curriculum has the largest enrollment of the three with 94 students.

An average starting salary for grain science graduates is $18,000 to $24,000.

"The graduate has a rough life for three to five years," Curran said.

The mills are in operation continuously, so employees work at odd hours until they are promoted, he explained.

Lengthy winter may bring delay, disease to crops

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The cold, rainy weather of recent weeks could mean bad news for wheat farmers in Kansas and Missouri.

Chilly, soggy conditions have slowed the growth of the winter wheat crop in the two states and increased the chance of damage from several major wheat diseases, authorities say.

The weather also has increased the threat of extensive soil erosion on hilly land, delayed field work and planting in southern areas of Kansas and Missouri, and slowed the weight-gain progress of livestock at feedlots.

There already has been an increase in speckled leaf blotch and tan spot, two cold weather wheat diseases, said Bill Willis, extension plant pathologist at Kansas State University.

"If it warms up a little, those two diseases can really go to town and work their way up the plant as it grows," said Willis. "They do the greatest damage on flag leaves."

Willis said the two diseases could potentially reduce the yields by 10 percent to 15 percent.

"The wheat crop was a week or more ahead of schedule due to the warm weather we had in late winter, especially along the Kansas-Oklahoma border," said Dale Fjell of Hutchinson, a KSU soil and crop specialist.

"But the cold has taken away all the advantage. Now even if it turns warm, it's more likely behind than on schedule."

Willis said delayed maturity increases the wheat crop's vulnerability to leaf and stem rust and late-season wheat diseases. Delayed growth also increases the chance that the crop will be subjected to hot, drying winds that would shrivel kernels and lower its test weight, Fjell said.

The threat of erosion is also greatly increased because soil throughout Missouri is "supersaturated," said Paul Larson of the USDA Soil Conservation Service.

"The last two years we've had heavy erosion, more than in the previous five years," Larson said. "We have all the water the ground will hold. If we get heavy thunderstorms we could have heavy soil erosion."

KAPE unit moves toward negotiations

By ALAN STOLFUS
News Editor

The University office and clerical workers unit of the Kansas Association of Public Employees (KAPE) won a skirmish Friday in its effort to negotiate a contract with the University.

A motion before the Public Employees Relations Board (PERB) in Topeka to dismiss a charge of bad faith negotiating the unit had filed against the University negotiating team in October was overruled. A hearing is tentatively scheduled sometime within the next month for PERB representatives to hear both sides of the charge.

"We have the opportunity now to present our side of the problem as we see it," said Carol Knepper, the unit's vice president, who is a pre-design professions department secretary.

The PERB ruled the complaint involves more than dependent-related sick leave — a major point why a settlement has not been reached between the two groups. The board also decided in favor of KAPE because a memorandum of agreement has not been signed with the University and negotiations can still be carried out.

The October complaint charged the University/State of Kansas team was not sincere in its efforts to negotiate the contract with the KAPE unit.

The University team, represented by Dick Seaton, University attorney, said the bad faith charge is moot because the charge was filed in October and the two groups reached a tentative agreement Dec. 9. It was a waste of the PERB's time, he said, to continue pursuing this one issue.

The unit contended its objection to the dismissal proposal contained more than just a simple disagreement over the contract. Knepper said the University negotiating team, which is ultimately under the direction of Kansas Secretary of Administration Patrick Hurley, was not sincere in negotiating the sick leave clause.

"They were just surface bargaining," Knepper said. "They are not willing to negotiate anything that changes an existing law or civil service rule or regulation."

The unit argues it has the right to negotiate sick leave under PERB laws, but Hurley holds that sick leave must be negotiated according to civil service regulations. Civil service regulations call for sick leave to be coordinated statewide and not by individual units.

Lee Ruggles, director of employee relations and a PERB member who stepped down during the hearing, said the additional hearing should occur within the next 60 to 90 days and a ruling could be reached about a week after the hearing.

The scheduled hearing will be in courtroom style, Knepper said, in that both sides will present evidence and witnesses, and will be able to cross examine the other party's witnesses. Jerry Powell, PERB director, will be the hearing examiner.

Negotiations between the two groups has continued for more than two years and now hinge on two points.

The first is trying to establish a policy of dependent related sick leave. Currently, office and clerical workers must use personal sick leave for family-related illnesses.

In a Sept. 22 Collegian story, Knepper was quoted as saying that, because the KAPE unit is 99 percent women, the sick leave proposal is of particular interest because "nine times out of 10" it is a woman's responsibility to look after the family.

The second point is a savings clause which would allow this contract to be exempt from future civil service regulation changes, Knepper said. All civil service contracts include a clause which allows the contract to be affected by future changes. A future change could overrule an established contract clause, she said.

Senators question U.S. involvement in Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Democratic senators charged Tuesday that the Reagan administration may be violating U.S. law and a 1948 international agreement by supporting anti-Sandinista guerrillas in Nicaragua.

"What we are dealing with here is not a partisan issue of whether the administration's Central America policy is right or wrong," Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., told the Senate. "The question is whether it is within the letter and the spirit of the law."

Leahy and Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said the administration may be violating legislation restricting covert activities in Nicaragua.

The Intelligence Committee, of which Leahy is a member, has heard testimony behind closed doors on U.S. involvement in the Central American country. Moynihan said the committee would take the matter up again April 12.

Moynihan said such involvement by the United States also would violate a 1948 agreement establishing the Organization of American States. The signatories agreed not to interfere in each other's internal affairs.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes refused Tuesday to discuss the nature of U.S. involvement in Nicaragua but maintained that "we're complying with the law."

Asked about reports that U.S. military advisers are training anti-government insurgents, Speakes said: "We just don't get into denying or confirming allegations of this type ... We're just not commenting beyond the fact that whatever we're doing is consistent with the law."

Moynihan said the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua also is violating the 1948 agreement by supplying arms to rebels in neighboring El Salvador but this "should come as no surprise to any of us who have seen its degeneration into a Marxist-Leninist state."

The Nicaraguan government's action, he added, "does not absolve any other government from its obligations" under the agreement.

Leahy, who visited several Central American countries in January, said he submitted a highly classified report to the Intelligence Committee that "bears materially on the question of whether the executive branch is complying" with the congressional legislation.

Allegations have appeared recently that forces fighting the leftist Sandinista government have been largely financed, armed and trained by the United States, or by nations with close ties to Washington, chiefly Honduras and Argentina.

There have been no indications that Americans are actually in Nicaragua, but American advisers in neighboring Honduras are said to have helped train insurgents at bases there.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., told reporters, "There is a great concern" about Nicaragua in Congress. Baker said he planned to talk with leaders of the Intelligence Committee to find out "what is going on, what they know about it and what the circumstances are."

Space shuttle's satellite encounters mishap

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The world's biggest and costliest communications satellite, launched with fanfare from the space shuttle Challenger, traveled a misshapen orbit Tuesday as experts on the ground sought ways to salvage it. They voiced some hope for success.

The new shuttle, meanwhile, was coasting like a seasoned traveler around the Earth. Its astronauts, quietly busy with metals processing and other scientific experiments, wondered if they had anything to do with the satellite's problems.

"We don't really have a story for you," said Mission Control. "We'll probably be talking a lot about that post-flight."

Plans were to use the satellite's nozzles and the fuel it carries for small course corrections, to propel the satellite into its proper 22,300-mile-high orbit.

A lot was riding on the ability to overcome the problems with the 2½-ton, $200 million Tracking and Data Relay Satellite, which is needed urgently both for defense purposes and future missions of the shuttle. Without TDRS, a spacelab flight in September is practically an impossibility.

Challenger commander Paul J. Weitz and his crewmen, pilot Karol J. Bobko and mission specialists Story Musgrave and Donald H. Peterson, who had ejected the satellite from their cargo bay late Monday, were asleep when the trouble began. They were in the second day of the ship's five-day inaugural flight.

"The Challenger is operating near flawlessly," said flight director Randy Stone. "The crew is feeling fine."

There was no indication the crew suffered from the space sickness that beset astronauts on the five flights of the first shuttle.

Musgrave was eager to get on with the day's work. "We're going to come out of the chute running hard," he said.

Weitz and his crew members had a relatively light schedule Tuesday, devoted mainly to metals processing, scientific and medical experiments. They also were to make the first of four course-changing maneuvers to meet a phantom target in space. The exercise was a rehearsal for later flights when astronauts will chase down satellites to service or repair them.

The astronauts' next big day is Thursday when Musgrave and Peterson climb into space suits and walk out into the airless void of the open cargo bay.

Death

creates, but proper attitudes can build greater understanding and more ability to cope with the situation. It may be easier to understand and accept the deaths of older people who have been ill, she said.

When Everett Hamilton, 72, died last summer in a Dodge City veterans home, his immediate family considered it a "blessing."

And after Barney Clark, the world's first and only recipient of a permanent artificial heart, died recently at Salt Lake City, his wife expressed a feeling of "relief."

WHAT HAMILTON'S and Clark's families — though widely separated — have indicated reflects the changing attitude and the willingness to talk about death.

It doesn't mean there is less sorrow and fewer tears.

"But we cried for ourselves as much as anything," said Herbert Hartley, graduate in journalism and mass communications, who spoke of Hamilton's (his step-father's) death as a "desirable release."

And Una Loy Clark said in an interview after the death of her husband, Barney, "I was very relieved — and I felt he was at peace."

Hartley said he believes mourners at a funeral shed more tears for themselves than they do for the deceased.

Hamilton, who had been confined to the Dodge City facility for seven years, was the only grandfather Hartley's four children could remember. He had suffered a series of strokes and had been bedfast, unable to control his body functions, for the last 2½ years of his life.

HARTLEY SAID HE and his wife took this approach in preparing their family.

"We had talked about grandpa — how sick he was and how he was going to die — and how there was no cure," Hartley recalled.

Tom Hartley, 6, the youngest member of the family, "was crying for himself, only because he had never seen his grandfather."

The elder Hartley said he believes his son's apparent understanding of the family's attitude toward and preparation for a loved-one's death was important.

"He accepted our word, and more important, our family attitude that this (Hamilton's death) was a desirable release," Hartley said. "As far as the rest of the family was concerned, 'Grandpa Ham's' death had been so long coming that it was not a sad situation for the family. Rather, we were grateful his ordeal was over."

TALKING ABOUT DEATH was not avoided in Hartley family discussions. But it also was not glossed over by substituting euphemisms, like "Grandpa climbed a tree to heaven."

People are coming to more realistic terms about death and dying and dealing with the grief that follows, according to modern authorities on the topic.

One of these is McNeil, whose own jarring experience led her to start the course here in 1973.

Her first husband died in the summer of 1969. Sistrunk, who taught in the College of Agriculture at K-State, had finished work for his doctorate that spring. Sistrunk was blind the last two years of his life, but taught after listening to his lecture notes on tape.

"I was left with four children. Looking back, I'm afraid I didn't handle it well," McNeil said. "But I had a lot of love and support."

MCNEIL SAID ONE of her mistakes, which is commonly made, was "telling your 11-year-old son, 'Now, you are the man of the family'."

He wasn't ready for that, she said, recalling the shock, despair and uncertainty that prevailed after Sistrunk's death.

Mistakes in dealing with children are frequent, McNeil said she believes, and courses like hers can be of help to students who have faced or will encounter such problems after becoming parents.

In fact, death education for children is one of McNeil's prime focuses. Her research project before she received her doctorate was "How Do Parents Talk to Their Kids About Death?"

"We need to look at how we talk about death — how we handle it with children," McNeil said.

HER RESEARCH INVOLVED three months of interviewing 100 mothers of young children in a five-county area.

Many parents are afraid to talk about death, McNeil said. "Many of those young mothers I inteviewed said something like, 'Well, we never talked about it'."

Or the mothers of the 5- to 7-year-old children would "use a euphemism to cover up and make it (death) look nice," McNeil said. "People are nervous about the topic...adults think they are protecting kids."

Not only parents, but teachers need to know how to teach about death, according to McNeil. Some nursery school teachers who do know are often invited to McNeil's class to share their experiences.

McNeil said she heard of a disturbing case in a grade school after a boy's mother died. "Nobody said anything to him," she said, indicating the subject was avoided.

TEACHING ABOUT DEATH can begin in simple terms in a pre-school situation, McNeil said. "Maybe they have a gerbil in the classroom — and maybe the gerbil died. The children ask 'Why is he so stiff, why isn't he breathing?' Maybe they'll have a funeral," McNeil said.

Children aren't the only focus of McNeil's courses, however. The classes attract a wide range of students and ages, including secondary-major gerontology students.

Discussion about death has grown through mass media presentations, including magazine articles and a lood of television shows, McNeil said. "Most of those doctor shows always had someone dying."

But she recalled there was a certain insulation from death before World War II.

"We were really protected for a long time because institutions took care of it — and we trusted them. In big cities, there was no chance that people were on friendly neighborhood terms with a mortician," she said.

MCNEIL'S STUDENTS visit funeral homes and cemeteries on field trips. Discussions include such topics as "how you refer to the graveyard," she said.

Death education, according to McNeil, is part of a growing field that has emerged over the past two decades. "I'm so interested in this because there is a need," she said.

McNeil, a 1951 K-State journalism graduate, received her master's degree in counseling in 1956 from the University of Minnesota. She worked for a New York publishing company and later taught in a settlement school at Gatlinburg, Tenn., before returning to Manhattan.

She is currently president of the Forum for Death Education and Counseling and the fourth to hold that office.

McNeil's philosophy:

"If we don't think about our end, then we need to feel comfortable with our own mortality. We have to come to terms with that in our lives."

"It is truly the rare person who is adventuresome enough to explore his inner domain."

Wolfpack returns to Raleigh with 'great basketball team'

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State basketball coach Jim Valvano led his NCAA champion Wolfpack home Tuesday to the cheers of a standing-room-only crowd of 15,500 at Reynolds Coliseum.

Hoisting a bottle of champagne given to him by a fan, Valvano wasted little time giving the crowd a part of what it wanted.

"You've heard of Phi Slama Jama," Valvano said. "Let me introduce you to Phi Pack Attacka."

Phi Slama Jama was the name Houston had given its "fraternity" of dunkers in honor of its practice of dunking shots, hard and often. But in Monday's 54-52 Wolfpack victory, the Cougar fraternity had only one dunk.

"What time is it?" Valvano asked, then lifting his arm and tugging at his sleeve. "Let's look at our championship watches."

One by one the players made their way to the microphone, each greeted hysterically by the crowd. For the most part, the speeches were short, but left little doubt how the Wolfpack felt.

"Everybody talked about the way we got to where we are now," said Wolfpack forward Thurl Bailey, one of the squad's four seniors. "First, they said we were lucky. Then they said it was destiny. Then they called us a Cinderella team. They tried to find any way but the right way — that we are a great basketball team," Bailey said.

"After Houston played Louisville they took the championship trophy home, but Monday we made 'em bring it back," guard Dereck Whittenburg said, shaking his red sneaker in the air. "They didn't know it, but we had on our Cinderella shoes.

"I don't know how serious I can be because we're going to party all year long," he said. "We had a slump, but you fans stayed with us. Everybody said if we stick together, good things will happen. Now, a whole lot of good things are happening."

The crowd started gathering long before the Wolfpack's flight from Albuquerque and the Final Four had landed at Raleigh-Durham Airport, nearly 20 miles from Reynolds Coliseum. By 4 p.m., officials estimated 12,000 were on hand.

Cheerleaders and a band kept the crowd busy most of that time, and the curious had several banners to read. Once, when the band struck up "The Stripper," a student in a box high above the floor began taking off clothes, stopping at his underwear.

The gathering was peaceful and organized, unlike Monday night's celebration when 25,000 people partied from the Brickyard, an area in the center of the campus, out into Hillsborough Street.

Fourteen people were then arrested on charges ranging from vandalism for spray-painting slogans on buildings to carrying a concealed weapon and assaulting a police officer, police said.

One student was seriously injured when he was struck by a car and dragged about 30 feet. Norfleet Richard Hoggard was listed in critical condition at Rex Hospital with leg and head injuries.

Another reveler was taken to Rex Hospital after his leg was broken during a fight on Hillsborough Street that began when one man threw beer in another man's face.

But Tuesday was a day to celebrate the Wolfpack's first national title since David Thompson led the team to the 1974 crown.

The Wolfpack's insatiable desire to win had finally been satisfied, and there was a poster listing teams N.C. State had defeated en route to the title to tell how that had occurred. It read: "Wake Forest, (North) Carolina, Virginia, Pepperdine, UNLV, Utah, Virginia, Georgia, Houston — The Breakfast of Champions."

K-State teams take to wheelchairs for annual benefit basketball night

A former K-State football standout who now plays for the Kansas City Chiefs — Gary Spani — will take on a different kind of sport when the fifth annual Wheelchair Basketball Classic gets under way at 7:30 p.m. on Friday in Ahearn Field House.

Spani, a player-coach for the nationally-acclaimed Kansas City Purples, will lead the team against the K-State men's and women's varsity squads.

The contest will feature the Wildcats challenging the Purples in the first half, with the Lady 'Cats playing the second half.

The Wildcats and Lady 'Cats will engage in their familiar sport, but in a different way: they must play sitting in wheelchairs according to official wheelchair basketball rules.

"Willie the Wildcat," the K-State cheerleaders and KSU pep band will provide entertainment and cheer the teams on. Celebrity coaches and halftime entertainment will be announced later.

Students for Handicapped Concerns, a K-State student group, is sponsoring the benefit game. Proceeds will help fund the K-State shuttle service and other programs for physically limited students.

Past attendance at wheelchair games has been low, according to Gretchen Holden, director of Services for Students with Physical Limitations. She said she hopes this year's attendance will be better because "the year we don't break even may be the year we have to quit."

Joe Greve, co-founder and player-coach for the Purples, agreed with Holden's assessment.

"My one regret about the game is that spectator attendance has been low. I wish more people would attend so that they would become aware of the handicapped community."

Holden added that "students who have not been around individuals with physical limitations have the opportunity to mix it up and get comfortable with their fellow students who do have physical limitations."

Admission is $2.50 for adults, $2 for students, and 50 cents for children under 12. Tickets are being sold at the Ahearn ticket office and in Holton 101, and may be purchased at Ahearn on game night.

Gloomy weather dampens baseball spirit

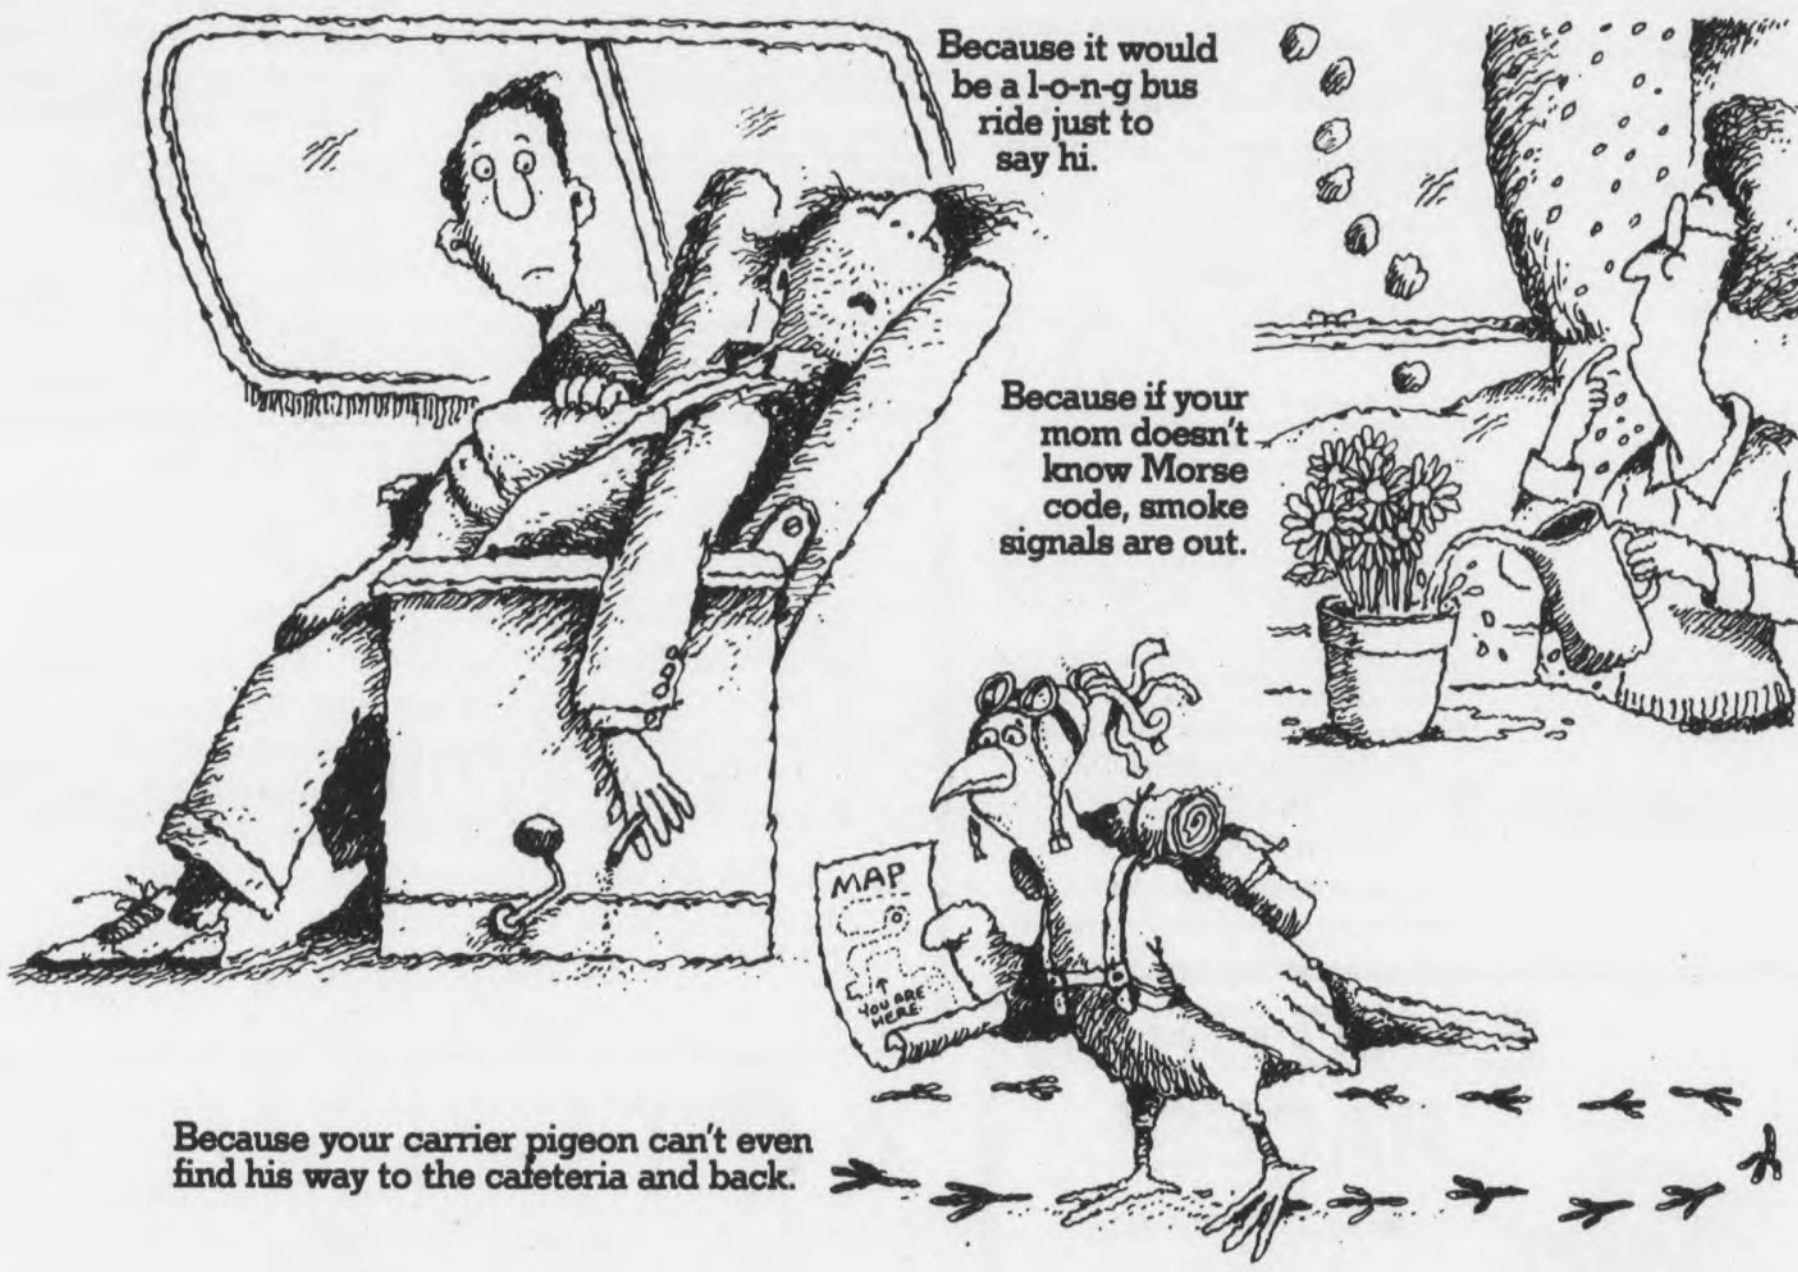
Heavy spring rain and show have put a damper on K-State's baseball season in more ways than one.

The 16-7 Wildcats have had more games cancelled than played. Before Saturday's double-header against Oklahoma State, K-State had lost 26 games to the weather while having played only 23 contests. The 'Cats have even played one game in the football stadium, creating an automatic single section in the right field student section.

"It has hurt our consistency," Wildcat coach Dave Baker said. "We can't do anything until the field dries up, so we have to keep working inside while the weather is bad. We'll try to get it going again when we get back outside."

The slop has tightened the clamps on Baker's bid for a bit of baseball history. The 39-year-old Manhattan native needs only four victories to become the winningest baseball coach in school history. Baker's teams have won 135 games the past six seasons, approaching the mark of 138 wins generated by Coach Phil Wilson from 1973-77.

The rain has not dampened the performance of senior first baseman Cary Colbert, who was second nationally in batting according to the latest NCAA statistics. Colbert is hitting .508 with four homers and 18 RBIs, and is the school's fifth all-time leading home run hitter with 15 in only a year-and-a-half. He has also committed only one error in 153 chances for a fielding percentage of .993.



Shortstop Mark Teague has not had his spikes slowed either, having stolen eight bases in as many attempts to move into third place on K-State's career steals chart with 30.

House bill benefits elderly, outlaws age discrimination

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas House, responding to calls for help from the elderly, passed a bill Tuesday to prohibit job discrimination because of a person's age.

The bill, which would establish the "Kansas Age Discrimination Act," is aimed at assisting the elderly and would apply only to persons over age 40. It passed 120-3, and goes to the Senate for consideration.

Also the House approved, 110-9, a resolution urging the state and the Kansas Public Employees Retirement System not to invest public funds in corporations or banks that operate in or support South Africa.

The age discrimination bill now goes to the Senate for its consideration, and it is doubtful that the upper legislative chamber will have time to act on the measure this session. In general, the proposal would prohibit employers from discriminating against a person because of age in hiring, salary, promotions or other work conditions.

The measure also would apply to labor unions so they could not exclude persons from membership because of age, or an employment agency, making it unlawful for them to refuse to refer a person for a job because of age.

Rep. Sandy Duncan, R-Wichita, said that 45 other states, as well as the federal government, have laws prohibiting age discrimination. He noted that Kansas' discrimination laws does not protect the elderly.

The Kansas Civil Rights Commission would be responsible for enforcing the law and investigating any complaints. Any person found guilty of age discrimination could be punished by a $500 fine and up to one year in jail.

Rep. Norman Justice, D-Kansas City, Kan., sponsored the South Africa resolution, saying it is to protest that country's policies of apartheid. A resolution has no power of law and is not binding.

In an emotional speech to the House, Justice said the black majority in South Africa, some 27 million people, was being held "captive in its own homeland" by a white minority. He described the black majority as victims of "racism, slavery and dehumanization."

"These people in the nation of South Africa need your support," said Justice.

There are more than 500 U.S. companies that operate or have holdings in South Africa, according to the United Methodist Office for the United Nations.

Justice, who has testified before a U.N. panel against American investments in South Africa, said KPERS has about $96 million invested in the common stock of companies that operate in South Africa. An additional $37 million is invested in corporate bonds of companies operating in South Africa.

Currently some 24 states have proposals under consideration which would prohibit investment of public monies in South Africa.

The measure also allows $119.5 million for the Kansas Public Employees Retirement System, of which $49.1 million comes from the state general fund.

Another budget bill to pass the Senate allocates $60.5 million in state money to a variety of state agencies, departments and offices, about $1 million less than Carlin suggested for the offices.

Included are appropriations of $40.3 million in state money for the state treasurer's office; $4.6 million for the attorney general's office and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation; $1.1 for the governor's office; $3.4 million for the insurance department and $2.3 million fo rthe Department of Human Resources.

Included in the Senate amendments to the House-passed bill is a $250,000 grant-in-aid for the Agricultural Hall of Fame in Bonner Springs. The hall is facing a $500,000 debt with no hopes for paying it off. Officials of the hall pleaded last summer with lawmakers to bail them out and give them a chance to become self sufficient.

The money approved by the Senate would be about half what is needed to pay off the mortgage and private funds will be needed to raise the other half. The bill now returns to the House for consideration of amendments.

Magazine vendors may have used illegal tactics

By ANN SANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

Approximately 25 residents of Goodnow Hall believe they may have recently been deceived by representatives of a company offering magazine subscriptions.

Two representatives of Rocky Mountain Circulation, based in Estes Park, Colo., entered Goodnow and said they were trying to earn a cruise aboard the Love Boat, using a system in which they would accumulate points through sales of magazine subscriptions.

According to persons who placed subscription orders with the two representatives, the sellers said Rocky Mountain Circulation had chosen one person from each state to represent it, and those people were covering 12 states in as many weeks. They said while in Manhattan they were staying at the University Ramada Inn, 17th Street and Anderson Avenue.

One of the representatives said she was from San Antonio, Texas, and gave her address and phone number there.

A woman who placed an order said a wide selection of magazines was offered and if the vendors won the cruise, they promised persons placing orders a free postcard and T-shirt. A three-day cancellation clause was also offered.

STUDENTS PLACING ORDERS could take advantage of the clause, the vendors said, and cancel subscriptions within the next three business days to receive a total refund. The vendors would still receive the needed points for the cruise even if the orders were canceled.

Some of the hall residents placed orders to help the two Rocky Mountain representatives win the cruise. Three of the residents each ordered two two-year subscriptions which cost $23 apiece.

The buyers wanted to write one check, but, at the vendors' request, wrote separate checks for each magazine.

AFTER THE SALE, the vendors said they were going to Aggieville, and "ran out of the dorm," one student involved said.

After the vendors left, the residents questioned why they had to write separate checks and why the vendors had left so quickly.

Upon closer examination of the contract, the students realized the cancellation clause was only good for orders above $25. Their orders were slightly below that amount.

"They (the sellers) were talking really fast and were pushing us because they said they only had 10 minutes," one student said.

Kathy Lungren, student attorney, said the vendors misrepresented the contract to their customers if they told the buyers any order could be canceled within three days.

"By representing that they have the right to cancel within three days, that's clearly

Doctor provides support for terminally ill

(Editor's note: This is the second of a three-part series dealing with changing attitudes toward death and dying.)

By BILL BIDWELL
Copy Editor

Dr. George Bascom has been described as a "gentle giant."

The Manhattan surgeon, who seems to radiate warmth, caring and understanding, was doing Hospice-like work long before such an organization existed here.

Hospice Care Inc., organized in Manhattan in 1979, is designed to help terminally ill people live, perhaps easier, with approaching death. Hospice is not a place, but an idea. Its purpose is to provide care to enhance the quality of the remaining life for those who face terminal illness.

Bascom is also one of the resource people who speaks to classes in death education, such as Joan McNeil's K-State courses.

"I have guest speakers, including doctors and nurses. And then there is Dr. Bascom — I save him for dessert," McNeil, assistant professor of family and child development, said, indicating Bascom discusses the work of Hospice.

"He shares his ideas about life and death and leaves people uplifted."

BASCOM SAID HE believes in home care for a dying patient when the patient prefers it to a hospital "if there is pain control and there are resources for bedridden patients, and if the family is capable of providing home care."

He said he believes "it is a nice thing" for a patient to be in his own home.

There are cases where dying people are avoided by some friends and family members.

"I think we should never abandon people," Bascom said. He was one of the people instrumental in organizing Hospice in Manhattan.

His attitude toward home care stems from the late 1930s and early '40s when he accompanied his father, Dr. K.F. Bascom, on house calls in the Manhattan area.

"It had been a custom. Dad did it. I rode around with him on house calls. That was how I learned to drive," Bascom said. "On some occasions, I'd go in. I think that was where I picked up the flavor of home calls."

THE ELDER BASCOM practiced from 1936 to 1965. He died of cancer in 1974.

George Bascom is a man sensitive to the needs of people who are dying. Doctors frequently deal with death and sometimes look at it as their failure. Bascom said he believes dealing honestly with the patient and helping people to cope with death are essentials.

Committee raises regents funding, operations budget

TOPEKA (AP) — A joint Senate-House conference committee agreed late Wednesday to funnel $1 million to the state Board of Regents institutions next fiscal year to bolster Kansas' high technology research.

It also agreed to a 6.5 percent increase in the universities' operating budgets for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The conference committee did not finish all work on the bill, but will resume work on it Thursday.

The only hangup at this stage is how to distribute the $1 million among the universities. House members agreed to the $1 million expenditure if a distribution plan can be agreed upon.

The $1 million high technology fund, which was agreed upon only after several hours of wrangling among House and Senate members, was a compromise between the $1.4 million sought by the Senate and $975,000 backed by the House.

An added sweetener in the high-tech proposal was a decision to have every $1 of state money matched by $1.50 of contributions from private sources. With the private pool included, the package would allocate $2.5 million to the regents' schools.

Before arriving at the $1 million agreement, there was considerable jousting between the chairmen of the two Ways and Means Committees, Sen. Paul Hess of Wichita and Bill Bunten of Topeka. Every proposal by Hess, a vocal proponent of trying to lure high technology industry of the computer age to Kansas, was countered by Bunten, who argued for austerity because of the state's fiscal problems.

"We're doing nothing in this state (about developing high techology industry), and if we don't get our heads out of the sand we are going to be in trouble," said Hess.

He charged that the regents' institution budgets have been shortchanged in prior years when budgets had to be reduced and said the universities deserve these high-tech funds.

"This is the toughest year they (the regents) have ever had since I have been here, except for my first year. But

California congressman to be featured speaker at next convocation

Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., is scheduled to speak at an All-University Convocation at 10:30 a.m. on April 15 in McCain Auditorium.

Philip Kirmser, chairman of the convocations committee, said Dellums will speak on the "Military Budget — Fantasy or Reality."

Dellums , 47, is chairman of the House Armed Services sub-committee on military installations and facilities.

He was originally scheduled to appear April 1, but was out of the country on congressional business.

Dellums was against the Vietnam War and has introduced amendments to prohibit funding of the MX and Pershing II missile systems.

A question-and-answer session is scheduled for 1 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre after the convocation.

Lack of funding postpones amphitheater construction

The building of an amphitheater, proposed by the Union in January 1982, has been put on hold, Walt Smith, director of the Union, said.

The amphitheater was to have been built on the east side of the Union at a cost of $80,000. It would have seated approximately 150 to 200 people, he said.

"It has been put on hold because of income. Business has not been quite as good as in the past," Smith said.

The idea is on the docket for review each year, he said.

"We know that it will cost more in the long run, but we just do not have the money," Smith said.

The amphitheater would be used in the spring, summer and fall, weather permitting. Any type of event could be scheduled for the theater.

"K-State players and the people who speak between the Union and Seaton could use the facility," he said.

Currently, money the Union Fund has received is being used to improve restrooms and for maintenance of the building.

Another proposal introduced about two or three years ago was a mall between the Union and Seaton Hall.

"I would like to see both of them be built at the same time," Smith said.

As for the future of the projects, Smith was unsure when they would get under way. "I think that there will be cuts in the budget for the next two or three years. We haven't given up."

Regents

this is an area we want to make a priority," Hess said.

However, Bunten scoffed at contentions that high technology alone could cure the state's economic ills.

"Every state in the union has this catchy word 'high-tech,' and they automatically expect to have another Silicon Valley," Bunten said. "But I have seen figures that show the maximum growth of high tech will be 22 percent between now and 1990. Why don't you give it a chance to work before taking all this money from the general fund in these difficult times?"

The conference committee also gave the Kansas Department of Economic Development more financial support in its drive to attract high-tech firms to the state. Conference committee members agreed to award KDED $213,000 of state general fund money to heighten its efforts to expand the state's industrial base.

The committee also agreed to allow KDED to absorb $75,000 of federal funds to assist in public relations efforts.

Before House members agreed to the 6.5 percent increase in universities' operating budgets, a $50,000 fund for scholarships for students of osteopathic medicine and $30,000 for Kansas State University were eliminated.

The House supported a 5.5 percent hike in operating budgets, while the Senate supported a 7 percent increase. The 6.5 percent amounts to $408,000 more than the House voted and $204,000 less than the Senate approved.

Six Kansas counties declared disaster areas

TOPEKA — Almost a year after spring and summer storms caused severe flooding over much of eastern Kansas, six counties have been declared natural disaster areas by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Washington, D.C.

Gov. John Carlin announced Wednesday he received word from U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block that Atchison, Franklin, Leavenworth, Miami, Osage and Wyandotte counties have received the disaster declaration. All counties are along the eastern border of the state and the declaration covers flooding which occurred last spring and summer.

Carlin requested the disaster declaration in September but USDA guidelines require a full harvest year be completed before damage estimates are made and the declaration be made.

Although no dollar estimates are available on the damage, USDA estimated 5,042 farmers in the six counties lost more than 40 percent of their total possible production. Those farmers will now be eligible for low interest emergency loans from the Farmers Home Administration for any loss of crops, cattle or damage to farm buildings.

The loans apply to agricultural damage only, and FHA officials will send representatives into the counties next week to begin taking applications for the loans.

Watt dumps Beach Boys for Wayne Newton

WASHINGTON — Interior Secretary James Watt says the capital's annual Fourth of July celebration is being despoiled by "rock bands attracting the wrong element."

He didn't name names, but the Beach Boys have headlined the show for the past three years — and high elements of the Reagan administration disagreed with Watt Wednesday for knocking the popular musicians known for their "surfin' sound."

The Beach Boys' music has been banned in favor of "patriotic and family-oriented" Wayne Newton, the king of the Las Vegas casinos.

The secretary's decision drew support for the Beach Boys from President George Bush, a personal protest from Michael K. Deaver, the deputy chief of staff and one of President Reagan's closest advisers, and a fortissimo "same to you" retort from the "surfin' sound" musicians themselves.

Herschel Walker weds in quiet ceremony

SOUTH HACKENSACK, N.J. — Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker, who left college to accept the highest paying contract in professional football history, has confirmed that he married his girlfriend of three years in a quiet ceremony last week.

The New Jersey Generals' running back married his University of Georgia girlfriend, Cindy DeAngelis, in a ceremony performed Thursday by Bloomingdale Mayor Vincent Sabio.

The 21-year-old Walker denied marriage reports over the weekend while in Arizona with the Generals for a United States Football League contest with the Wranglers.

But at a news conference Tuesday announcing he signed a long-term agreement to endorse accessories for Franklin Sports Industries Inc., he confirmed he had been married last week, Generals spokesman Kevin MacConnell said.

Soviets may deploy new long-range missile

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union has developed a new, long-range land attack cruise missile which it may deploy on mobile launchers as a fresh threat to Western Europe, U.S. intelligence sources said Wednesday.

The missile, designated by intelligence officials as the SSCX-4, is said to have a range of nearly 1,900 miles, more than the American cruise, the GLCM, scheduled for deployment in Europe late this year.

U.S. reconnaissance satellites recently detected what analysts believe is a possible mobile launcher for the SSCX-4 at a test center in the Soviet Union. It was described as a wheeled tractor-trailer vehicle big enough to launch four missiles.

Intelligence analysts, speaking only on condition that they remain anonymous, said the Soviets might be able to move such missiles around relatively rapidly over long distances.

Tax to be placed on Arizona drug dealers

PHOENIX, Ariz. — A state House panel has voted to license and tax drug dealers, but having a tax stamp won't buy protection from police.

The bill, passed unanimously Tuesday by the House Ways and Means Committee, would require anyone dealing in marijuana or controlled substances to buy a $100 license from the Department of Revenue and pay luxury taxes of $10 to $125 per ounce on drugs in their possession.

To keep the law from being thrown out as an unconstitutional violation of the right against self-incrimination, the tax men would be barred from turning over information about license-holders to police. But the license would not prevent officers from using current laws to arrest those caught with drugs.

City election vote offers no mandate

Now that the Manhattan City Commission election is over, it is time to pause, take a deep breath and analyze the implications of the results.

Prior to the election on Tuesday, criteria for selecting city comissioners centered around the proposed downtown mall. However, the outcome of the election, which split the mall's pro-con coalitions, showed more than downtown redevelopment was on the minds of city voters.

This is a statement — a firm statement — showing the actual issue dominating voters at the polls was not actually the mall, but the people's right to vote on an issue directly affecting them.

Voters had the opportunity to elect either coalition to city commission, but instead they chose to vote their conscience.

Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood led the returns with 4,200 votes which reveals her philosophy, let the people vote, is overwhelmingly popular.

Lindamood supports general obligation bond financing, which requires a public vote, for the proposed mall.

The other two elected commissioners, Eugene Klingler (with 3,680 votes) and newcomer Rick Mann (with 3,703), favor tax increment financing, which would not require a public vote.

Three candidates — Klingler, Mann and Russell Reitz — were for the mall and three candidates — Lindamood, Jean Farrell and Tom Gray — were against the mall.

After being saturated with political advertisements saying the election was a vote on the mall, the people showed they could push that single-issue philosophy aside and make intelligent choices.

Whether the addition of Mann, who unseated Reitz, will make any difference in the long run, remains to be seen.

What is foreseeable is the prolongation of getting the downtown redevelopment plan off the ground.

Common sense: the best defense

Spring time means fraud time.

Ann Sanderson's story about the recent magazine selling incident at Goodnow Hall is but another example of college students possibly being defrauded by those looking to make a quick buck.

Not only did the "vendors" break residence hall policy in regard to solicitation, but they also may have broken Kansas law.

The big losers in the whole mess are the students who willingly handed over checks for a deal that may have been "too good to be true."

As summer approaches, some students begin the never-ending quest for a summer job. With the economy in poor shape, many "earn big money" advertisements may appear to be "too good to be true." They could possibly be.

If you think you've been defrauded, call your local law enforcement agency.

In any case, remember these key words: caveat emptor — buyer beware. If an offer sounds "too good to be true," it probably is.

What's in a name?

People are speaking and writing less and less English these days — and the trend is scary.

They don't call a spade a spade. They call it an excavation enhancing device or excavation enhancer.

This is an age when people use euphemisms to disguise sometimes-harsh reality or insert a $25 word when a 10-center will do, just to cloud the issue.

There's the city animal control officer whose job is to round up all those stray dogs and cats. Whatever happened to the old-fashioned dog catcher?

A nail is a nail — until our government makes it "simple." As the story goes, government officials gave the lowly nail a new name — we don't remember what — in an attempt to reclassify supplies in a government warehouse some years ago.

Used car salesmen like to call their products "previously-owned" vehicles. People don't die — they pass away. Effluent is sewage. Electronic surveillance is wiretapping and stonewalling is lying.

The list goes on, often resulting in more fog than understanding.

Substituting bureaucratese for English, this old gem from Stuart Chase's "The Power of Words" is noteworthy:

"A New York plumber wrote the Bureau of Standards in Washington that he had found hydrochloric acid fine for cleaning drains, and asked if it was harmless.

"WASHINGTON REPLIED: 'The efficacy of hydrochloric acid is indisputable, but the chlorine residue is incompatible with metallic permanence.'

"The plumber wrote back that he was mighty glad the Bureau agreed with him.

"The Bureau replied with a note of alarm: 'We cannot assume responsibility for the production of toxic and noxious residues with hydrochloric acid, and suggest that you use an alternate procedure.

"The plumber wrote back that he was happy to learn that the Bureau still agreed with him.

"Whereupon Washington exploded: 'Don't use hydrochloric acid; it eats hell out of the pipes!'"

But the gobbledygook doesn't stop there.

People don't go to school anymore. They go to attendance centers.

And the police tell us they have two subjects in custody as suspects in a robbery case. Kings have subjects. Police do not.

Or they report that so-and-so saw a "suspicious car" in the vicinity of the robbery. Since when can a car be suspicious?

This is police blotter language, but it doesn't belong in public.

Or why is it that government officials tell us we can expect an "adjustment" in our taxes next year? Are they afraid to tell us taxes are going up — again? Utilities never raise prices, either. They adjust rates.

THERE IS SO MUCH word fog that affronts us in this high-tech age, and it isn't enlightening.

Euphemisms or other terms that distract from real meaning are used frequently by people who work in government, big business and schools. A one- or two-syllable word is not as classy as a three- or four-syllable word. Three or four words are better than one in this type of logic.

There's the school official (he insists that he be called an educator) who announces his school is going to "implement" a new high-tech program. Does he mean "start"?

He says other programs in the school will be "impacted" by the new program. (The writer once suffered from an impacted tooth.) Perhaps he means the new program will have an impact on other programs, but it's only a guess.

People are sensitive about their jobs to the extent they like to use more important-sounding terms.

Newspaper and television reporters like to say they are "media people" and call their institutions "the media." Whatever happened to the press? Morticians or undertakers are funeral directors, garbage men are sanitation engineers, housewives are domestic engineers and bailiffs are court service officers.

And there is the county weed director. He has an important job, but the title can be questioned. Can't you just see that artistic fellow out in a field directing noxious weeds in a wind-driven symphony?

Illegal practice jeopardizes lives...

Editor,

Stephen M. Hoffman's Wednesday letter, "Police need technique," concerning the illegal technique of hot pursuit without sirens and flashers is very disturbing. He mentions, "Why make things more difficult for the cops?" I will counter with: Is it OK to jeopardize not only the public, but also the police officer's life, just to ensure a speeding violator gets a ticket, or for the even feebler reason of making life a little easier on the cops?

The media reports on this incident have missed the point, and the trial of the officer seems to have missed the point. The overriding issue here should be there is no justification for endangering lives for the sake of a "possible" advantage such as hot pursuit without warning equipment on. This is especially true when it concerns a minor offense, such as chasing a speeding violator.

The enforcement of speeding violations is at the policeman's discretion. This is exemplified every time an officer lets one speeder go by, then, the next time someone speeds, he decides to give chase. Where is the justification for hot pursuit regardless of the safety of others? The real motivator for this behavior is the desire to "win." This policy of the policeman "winning" regardless of cost has no place in responsible police work and this should be actively stressed in police training programs; this should have been the main point made by the prosecution at the recent trial.

...officers' duty should be safety

Editor,

Re: Stephen M. Hoffman's Wednesday letter to the editor, "Police need technique."

The question here is not whether police are justified in breaking the law to make arrests, but the obligation of police (under law) not to endanger others.

This issue has become confused with Officer Mel Meier's defense making forecasts of a "timid and diffident" law enforcement and irrelevant information regarding the volume of Scott Mayfield's radio.

This state has laws regarding the procedures of law enforcement to protect both the officer and the public. When an officer violates these laws, then he or she is responsible for the consequences.

Anti-bike attitude needs changing

Editor,

Originally, after my bicycle was confiscated (or stolen) from the University Learning Network office in Holton Hall and abused by the campus police force last Friday evening, I was going to write an emotionally charged nasty letter directed at the indignant and rude cops who I was forced to deal with while liberating my bike to the tune of $5.

I'll not go into detail about the verbal exchange of our basic philosophies on the subject, nor will I waste my time writing about the mysterious and little-known bicycle laws cleverly hidden in the back of the K-State traffic manual. It's not, I realize, the law I broke that needs addressing here, but an administrative attitude that prevails here at K-State and in Manhattan concerning bicycles.

Of course, attitudes aren't as easy, nor as fun to write about (and read about), as bad laws and surly cops. But it is these attitudes, or ethics, against cycling which convey the basic lack of logic behind the poor bikeway system design, archaic bike laws and lack of adequate facilities which accompany them.

It seems to me the need to create an efficient means of transportation for an ever-increasing population, which will minimize noise, congestion and air pollution, is obvious. But the attitude displayed by the present administration when the "bike freaks" ask for better bikeways is to cut bicyclists' requests in half, put the police on their duffs and just generally make life even more miserable.

The necessity to develop alternative modes of transportation in terms of inevitable environmental consequences, and to deal with the present inadequacies of our street system for handling bicycles, cannot be overemphasized and must be understood.

I could go on and on about poorly designed bike racks better suited for horses (no offense, boys — I love horses) and an intimidating campus police force, but such complaints will only defeat the purpose.

Instead, I urge the community and students to become more involved, to create a new attitude through public awareness and education about issues concerning cyclists and bike clubs by attending Student Senate, city commission and other public organizational meetings which may influence or change this prevailing anti-bike attitude.

Not only is cycling a recreation which enhances physical, environmental and economic well-being, but it is a practical, clean and real alternate mode of transportation for now and in the future. Manhattan is an ideal place to cycle — let's make it fun.

Students' attorney resigns, plans private practice

By LARRY BOYD
Collegian Reporter

After working for more than two years as K-State students' attorney, Kathy Lungren will be leaving to go into private law practice.

Lungren, who has been the students' attorney since August 1980, plans to vacate the position by May 1 and begin her new job in August.

Lungren's job involves providing legal advice to students with problems which have included speeding ticket fines, landlord disputes and sexual crimes, she said.

The Students' Attorney Search Committee, which will select Lungren's replacement, has received 23 applications for the position, said Sally Rousten, coordinator of student activities.

However, Routsen said she anticipates that some applicants will withdraw from the running for the position once the salary is determined.

The salary is determined by allocations from Student Senate.

Looking back on her work at K-State, Lungren said her experiences will help her in the future.

"THIS JOB HAS helped me a lot. It's so diverse, and every day there is something new that I learn and experience.

"Students have unique and special problems because of their age and inexperience. It's fun to help someone solve a problem."

She described herjob as one which requires letting the students make their own decisions but presenting them with all the alternatives.

"I try to lay all the cards on the table," she said. "My job is to give them the legal advice and groundwork required to make the decisions."

There are times, however, when Lungren is unable to help a student.

"If there is an area I don't feel confident with, I'll usually recommend to the student a handful of lawyers," she said.

LUNGREN, WHO graduated from K-State with a political science degree in 1976 and from Washburn University in 1979, stressed the importance of students talking personally with various attorneys because of the many different types of attorneys.

Unless the decision will affect the student body in future cases, Lungren said she is unable to represent the student in court.

She said her job is important because many students wouldn't have anywhere else to go for legal advice.

"I help a lot of students who plan to defend themselves," Lungren said. "They're in a situation where there would be nobody else to help them.

"This program is as good as any anywhere," she said. K-State was one of the first programs in the nation to aid students in legal matters.

Lungren said the students' attorney position, which was established in 1971 by senate, is demanding.

"IT'S DEMANDING because I'm dealing with a university setting. Some people may abuse a free service and don't appreciate it."

Lungren used as an example a student who may demand a lot of her time. As a result of this, she has learned to give priority to her time spent with each student.

On the other hand, she said, some students want a quick answer.

"Some students want an answer to their problem in 30 minutes and don't realize they have to take things more slowly in areas where they lack experience."

Lungren said the job can be frustrating because there are not enough hours in the day for one person to assist everybody that needs legal help.

"A lot of times, when I can't help a student, it gets frustrating. But when I get someone out of a jam, that's great," she said.

Senate to begin budget allocations tonight

Student Senate is scheduled to begin tentative allocations tonight with the consideration of the Union budget.

According to Lori Leu, senate chairwoman, tentative allocations will begin in full next week, but in order to acquaint new senators with allocations procedure, the Union budget will be considered this week.

Leu said the Union budget is drawn up by professionals and is very clearly detailed, thus making it easier to follow.

According to Mark Terril, finance committee chairman, senate will be operating with $50,000 less than it did last year.

The tentative allocations process involves the recommendation by the Finance Committee of the amount to be allocated to each organization requesting funding from senate. These recommendations will take place over the next four to five weeks.

Once senate hears all the recommendations, a final bill comprised of all tentative allocations will be voted on. Final allocations are voted on in the fall, and funding amounts may change due to a drop in enrollment, Terril said.

In other legislation, senate is scheduled to hear first reading on a bill that would call for senate support of the Soloman amendment.

The amendment states that any student who refuses to comply with the Selective Service Act will be denied federal financial assistance.

The Associated Students of Kansas has asked that its member student governments take a position on this issue in order to provide the student lobbying organization with a better idea of how its constituents feel.

Senate is scheduled to approve the appointment of Marilyn Rudolph, sophomore in arts and sciences, to the position of assistant coordinator of FONE, a campus counseling service.

Consideration of a commendation to the All-University Open House Committee for its work during the recent Open House activities is also scheduled.

Votes scheduled for tonight include the constitutional revision for the student body president's cabinet and the funding for the National Society of Architectural Engineers national conference.

As the constitution is written, the campus director of ASK is a member of the student body president's cabinet. If the revision is passed by senate, the campus director would be replaced by a Kansas State Board of Directors member.

According to Jerry Katlin, student body president, the Kansas State Board of Directors member would be better suited for the cabinet position because he would serve more at the will of the student body president.

The National Society of Architectural Engineers has requested $182.01 from senate for partial funding for a conference they are sponsoring Aug. 12-14. Senate is scheduled to vote pending a recommendation from the Finance Committee.

Former football great Grier lectures on love for Christ

By JANICE CARLTON
Collegian Reporter

Rosey Grier, introduced as a "man-mountain of gentleness and love," spoke of his commitment to Jesus before approximately 200 people in the Union Ballroom on Wednesday.

"For a long time, I was searching for a way to be happy," he said. "I thought football would make me happy, but it didn't. When I got into the scripture myself, that is when I learned."

Grier's appearance was sponsored by Maranatha Campus Ministries, an organization he said he is not affiliated with.

Grier spoke about the responsibility of each individual to find God and told the story of how he became a Christian.

"God's word is the most important thing you can learn," he said. "It took me 45 years to find that answer."

Grier said one event that brought him to Christianity was the assassination of Robert Kennedy, a close friend. Grier recalled the night Kennedy was shot.

"It was the most awesome thing to see a friend shot. The hatred that would move a person to do something like that. We have to stop hatred."

GRIER SAID the assassination caused him to retreat into himself.

"I was tired of it. As I began to retreat more and more into myself, I realized I was hiding from something I had to face."

Grier said several friends suggested he study the Bible and since then he said his life has been changed.

"I kept saying to myself, 'Rosey, you've done all these great things, why aren't you excited about life?'. I found that we must seek God. If you seek God, he will reveal himself to you."

Before his speech, Grier appointed an audience member to be in charge of audience response.

"If you don't all say amen, I'm going to have to talk to this guy right here," Grier said, laughing and pointing to the person he appointed. The audience was very responsive.

"IT DOESN'T MATTER where you go to church, as long as you know who your savior is," Grier emphasized.

Speaking about the importance of setting a good Christian example for others, he said God wanted everyone to succeed in life.

"Be an example. Be a light in a world that's dark. Serve God with all your heart, all your soul and spirit."

During a prayer, Grier asked for anyone with bitterness in his heart to raise his hands and Grier said "praise God" for each raised hand.

"It is such a beautiful life when we begin to yield ourselves to God's will," he said.

Toward the end of his speech, Grier asked members of the audience to kneel and pray for Jesus to enter their lives. The crowd responded with several people breaking into spontaneous prayer, lifting their hands into the air while Grier prayed softly into the microphone.

"We may learn to cope with it," he said. "Absolute honesty is what we owe the patient."

Bascom put himself in the place of a hypothetical patient.

"If I heard today that I was going to die, there would be a number of loose ends I'd want to take care of," he said. "I would sure want to know if my time was limited. I'd write letters to thank people and I'd take care of wills and property."

COPING WITH death is not new to him.

"I've had my own heart broken," Bascom said. "Our 16-year-old son took his own life in 1970."

Bascom described Hospice as "wonderful support."

McNeil agreed. "People are still alive while dying. We should treat them like people, not a thing," she said.

Bascom said he sometimes had felt inadequate in talking to a dying patient. "I walked away sometimes feeling just sick, not knowing really where to turn. There was no model."

Hospice helped, and Bascom was quick to credit others with setting up the local group. He said Lila McCosh, a nurse, and Barbara Carakostas, who was a receptionist in his office, were valuable resources.

"OUR FIRST OFFICIAL patient was Alice Hoyt, a wonderful lady, who died at home. Her husband, Don Hoyt, is now president of Hospice," Bascom said.

Part of the stimulus for Carakostas' interest in Hospice was Anna Hurlburt, an early patient Carakostas "had become close to," Bascom noted. Hurlburt, a K-State professor of veterinary medicine, died several years ago.

Bascom described Joyce Delahanty as another "enthusiastic member" of Hospice. Delahanty's husband, John, a University faculty member, died in 1978.

"A cancer patient who is hopeless is likely to die sooner than other patients. The terrible fear is 'I'm going to die from it.' The hope is 'I might be cured,'" Bascom said.

"There is remission, then hope the patient will be cared about and he won't have to endure IVs, that if he wants to stay home he will be allowed to do so," Bascom said. "Hopes change, but hope remains with steadfast friends, including those in the medical profession."

Hospice likes to make home care possible, he said, but when it isn't possible, Hospice care continues for the patient in the hospital or nursing home — in addition to care provided by the institution's staff work.

Hospice Care Inc. has more than 100 trained volunteers, including 30 nurses, "and all of them have been through a fine training course," Bascom said.

"There has been a wonderful continuation of interest and support that has made it possible for us to maintain an all-volunteer character in the work," he said.

INTERSESSION

INTERSESSION—SPRINGTIME AT K-STATE

Stay an additional three weeks—or, if you're not now a K-State student, come to campus for three weeks this spring. The Spring Intersession is a terrific time to be on campus and an enjoyable way to earn up to three credits in a course. Intersession is open to the public. It allows students to pursue one course topic in depth, without the interruptions and demands of other courses and other campus activities. During Intersession there are no crowds, parking is easy (and free), and the weather should be good. It's a pleasant time to be here.

This spring's Intersession program offers over 30 credit courses, representing many departments and all colleges of KSU. Fees and registration are explained in this brochure, which also lists all courses and their descriptions. If this publication doesn't answer all your questions about Intersession, please call the Division of Continuing Education at 532-5566 (toll-free in Kansas 800-432-8222 for out-of-towners). Questions about specific course content or requirements should be directed to the instructors themselves.

REGISTRATION

Intersession is open to KSU students and to the public. Prior enrollment at KSU is not necessary and registration is a simple one-step process.

Intersession registration will take place in the BASEMENT OF FARRELL LIBRARY (not in the Union, where we've been in previous years); registration dates are May 2-4 and the registration staff will be available from 8:30 to 11:50 a.m. and 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. those three days. Additional registrations will be accepted during regular office hours at 317 Umberger Hall from May 5th through May 16th. Course fees are due at the time of enrollment. The decision as to which courses will "go" will be based on the number of registrations recorded during the first week of registration, and the go/drop list will be posted near the Information Desk at the K-State Union on Monday, May 7th. Go/drop information will also be available from the Continuing Education Registrar's office (317 Umberger, 532-5566).

Students are asked to check with their advisors to ensure that the Intersession class will meet degree requirements.

BE PROMPT!!

Although registrations in "go" classes will be accepted until the first day of Intersession, students are encouraged to register during the May 2-4 registration period at Farrell Library. The "go/drop" decision is based on enrollments collected during that period. Delays in student registration could result in a course being cancelled: students interested in Intersession classes should register early to be sure their preferred classes have a good chance of going as scheduled.

LATE FEE

Students enrolling after the third class meeting but before the close of Intersession will be charged a late fee of $10 and must have written permission from the instructor. Students attempting to enroll after an Intersession class is finished may do so with written permission from the instructor, and they will be charged a late fee of $20.

COSTS

Costs are $24 per undergraduate ("UG") credit hour and $37 per graduate ("G") credit hour; these costs are the same for Kansas residents and for non-residents. Some classes will require lab fees, materials fees, or other costs, and these are indicated in the course listing. The lab and materials fees will be collected by the Continuing Education Registrar at registration or by the instructor at the first class meeting. Lab fees collected by Continuing Education are non-refundable after the go/drop decision has been made (May 7th), except for courses which have been cancelled. Travel arrangements, for courses requiring them, must be made with the instructors as early as possible.

CREDIT

Classes are offered for from one or three resident credit hours. This reflects a deans' ruling of one credit maximum per 15-hour week of Intersession instruction. The maximum credit allowed is four (4) hours per student. Anyone wishing to enroll in more than four credit hours must have written approval from his or her academic dean at the time of registration. STUDENTS SHOULD SIGN UP FOR COURSES ON AN A-PASS-FAIL BASIS AT THE TIME OF REGISTRATION, BEFORE ONE-THIRD OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED. Intersession grades count with G.P.A.

CANCELLED CLASSES

No individual notification about cancelled classes will be made. Students who enrolled in a cancelled class have the option of registering in another class or obtaining a full refund. The student must report to 317 Umberger Hall to officially DROP or ADD.

REFUNDS

A full refund is made if the withdrawal request is received before the second class meeting, or if the class is cancelled. One-half of the fee is refunded if the withdrawal request is received after the second class meeting, but before one-third of the class meetings have elapsed. No refund is permitted if the withdrawal request is received after one-third of the class meetings. All refund requests must be made in person or in writing to the Registrar, Continuing Education (not to the instructor). No refunds will be given after the class begins, for those taking the course for non-credit. Those lab and materials fees collected at Registration will not be refunded after May 7th except for courses which have been cancelled.

BOOKS

Textbooks (required or recommended) have been ordered for some classes and will be available at Varney's at the start of Intersession. Information about textbooks is available from the instructor or from Varney's. Classes for which textbooks have been ordered are indicated with the letters TB at the end of the course description in this listing.

Horse-tales for kids

Arley Rawlinson is 14 years old and in pursuit of his horse, stolen from him by smugglers planning to use the animal in their next operation.

If this sounds like fiction, there's a good reason. Arley and his horse, Tug, are characters in a book recently written by Peter Cohen, assistant professor of English. The book is the eighth published by this author for children.

"I don't write them particularly for children, but that's the way it comes out.

"I guess I see it (a situation) as a child would see it," Cohen said.

Cohen's recent success, "Calm Horse, Wild Night," published by Atheneum publishing company of New York, tells the story of a young boy who is faced with a moral decision.

Arley, in pursuit of Tug, must aid the culprits in order to regain possession of his horse and save the animal's life. The action-packed book takes the reader through the timber and milling areas of the north.

"I don't know when the idea came," Cohen said.

"You know a lot about the 'cowboy horse'. The timber horse you don't hear about," he said. According to Cohen, horses were once used in timber country to aid in transporting lumber down mountains. Cohen wrote the story in the present setting, although by now, modern methods have replaced these animals.

"I wanted to do a book about a timber horse. I like to work in the present, so I had to bring him into the modern era. He's a modern, old-fashioned timber horse," Cohen said.

Since 1980, Cohen has spent his summers in Minnesota, near the "head waters," or the Mississippi River. There Cohen has found information for five of his eight books, the first of which was published in 1969.

"It's (the area) got a lot of history. I go up there every summer gathering material. I talk and hike and poke around. There's wild country up there and I find better stories in wild country," he said.

According to Cohen, most of his characters, although all are fictional, are created from conversations with people. During his summer excursions, Cohen also finds story ideas.

"The biggest problem I have is translating an idea to a story. I have a lot of ideas that don't ever start stories," he said.

Currently, Cohen is occupied with a book set in New Mexico.

Being more at ease with nature settings, Cohen usually sets his books and the character's conflicts in a natural area. All eight of the author's books have animals incorporated into the story, four of which are books about horses.

"I take a problem and I set the problem in a wilderness setting because I'm more comfortable. I organize the story by finding an animal," Cohen said. "The minute you put an animal in a story you've got sidelines (boundaries). You've got to find sidelines for the story at some point. If you use only people anything can happen.

"I started a novel. I got lost in it. But I changed all the characters to dogs, and I knew who the characters were — not everyone would follow that pattern," he added.

Video craze 'not a problem' for local students

By SEAN REILLY
Collegian Reporter

Although the video game craze has swept across the nation causing worry among parents concerned that the machines distract from school work, Manhattan school officials said there doesn't seem to be a problem here.

"No I don't believe video games are affecting the students here," Dan Yunk, assistant principal at Manhattan High School (MHS), said. "With the older kids I don't think it holds as big a fascination as it did when they were younger. When I drive by those arcades all I really see are bicycles."

Yunk can recall only one instance when students had skipped school for a day to play video games.

"One problem that may exist with the age of video games is the interest in computers as a whole," Yunk said. "Some students may not want to study their English or some of their other classes because they are so interested in computers."

Younger Manhattan students have also missed the video bug.

"As a whole I don't think we noticed any real change" in students, Jay Hooper, counselor at Manhattan Middle School, said.

"There has always been a problem with the TV. I think the ones that have gone to video games, have probably substituted the video games for TV watching," Hooper said.

According to Harold Whiteside, assistant professor of curriculum and instruction, problems caused by video games have not been researched.

"There has not been a lot of hard research done in this area," Whiteside said, adding schools and municipalities in some areas of the country have restricted arcade hours.

"There are the situations where students are missing school and (committing) minor petty thefts," he added.

Although it is only a small problem at Manhattan Middle School, some students do steal money from their peers, Hooper said, adding there wasn't a sudden increase in thefts with the introduction of video games.

Parents seem to be supplying children with money to spend on video games, Hooper said, which helps to keep the theft rate down.

"The atmosphere around some of the game places are what parents should be aware of," Hooper said. "The atmosphere can deteriorate the environment of the student. Drinking and rough play often occur at video game parlors.

"Adolescents aged 12-15 are easily led astray," he added. "That is why it is essential for parents to keep an eye on these video arcade places."

New games requiring more thinking may be to the children's advantage, he said, adding some students might be better off playing video games than watching television.

"Some of today's shows contain material which is considered objectionable. Maybe it is better to have them play videos rather than watch TV," he said.

Babysitting and a paper route are how Chris and Matt Cinderich, MHS students, pay for their video games.

"With one quarter you can make the game last a long time," Chris said. "It takes just a little while to improve to the point where you can last a long time."

Both brothers play about one hour a week each spending about $1. Video games do not hold their interest as much as other activities such as sports and studies, they said.

"The problems of beer and rough play at the arcades actually exist," Chris said, adding "a certain crowd causes the problems," and he and Matt are not there at those times.

But not all places have these problems, they said.

'The Outsiders' lacks 'human characters'

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

"The Outsiders" director, Francis Coppola, refers to his film as an art film for kids. This idea is quite evident in the film's style with each shot masterfully arranged and photographed. Lighting is used dramatically to illuminate each actor's face.

Review

Moreover, the film's pacing is exclusively for kids — rarely slowing down long enough to give full explanation for the characters' actions, though rendering them carefully enough so one can still sympathized with them.

Flaws develop in the film because style is emphasized to the point that content is neglected. The character development may be enough for many teen-age filmgoers, but in order for the film to cross over to a larger audience, the characters' actions need to be explained more clearly.

For the most part the film is enjoyable to watch unfold, but emotional links from one scene to the next are often missing. A character will suddenly say something totally unexpected. The sympathetic treatment of the main characters makes the film lack quite severely for a more sophisticated audience.

"The Outsiders" is set is Tulsa, Okla., in the mid-1960s. Two youth gangs struggle against one another in order to reaffirm social barriers. The Greasers are working class kids who wear leather jackets and their hair slicked back. The Socs are society kids who drive souped-up Mustangs and wear the latest fashions.

Dallas (Matt Dillon) helps the two Greasers hide out from the law. He sends them to an abandoned church in the country for a few days. On their return home, they happen by a building consumed in flames. By helping a group of children escape from the building, they become heroes.

In the process though, Johnny receives third-degree burns over the majority of his body. When he dies because of the burns, Dallas takes out his frustrations on the Tulsa police force, using an unloaded gun.

'Cats' middle distance runner also 'making tracks'

Staff/John Sleezer

Mike Bradley... holds school records in the 600-yard run, mile relay team, outdoor 400-meter run, and on Jan. 22 added to this list a time of 47.7 seconds in the 400-meter indoor run.

By JUDI WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

Runners to your marks...get set...go!

At the beginning of a race, Mike Bradley, listens intently to these words as he prepares to run toward a first-place finish.

For Bradley, these words will probably be forever embedded in his memory because of the track involvement in his life.

The peak of Bradley's career at K-State has brought him several school records, which proves his ability to run.

Besides records in the indoor 600-yard run, the mile relay team and the oudoor 400-meter run, Bradley also holds the school record in the indoor 400-meter run.

SOME ATHLETES do certain activities to prepare themselves mentally for an event. This is also true of Bradley.

The night before a race, he takes an "ice bath" until he's shivering and can't stand it.

"It (the ice bath) is a lot of a mental game," Bradley said. "It doesn't make me do any better, but it makes me think I can."

According to Bradley, an important part in his strategy for a race is support. His No. 1 fan and main source of support is his wife, Janet.

"She encourages me a lot," he said. "It helps that Janet is behind me and cares."

Steve Miller, head track coach, said Bradley is not a "classic runner but instead a power runner."

"I'm not a smooth runner, just a runner," Bradley said. "I see myself as running with 80 percent guts and 20 percent ability."

BRADLEY'S INTERESTS in running didn't develop overnight. They stemmed from his sister and his father.

His sister was a state high school champion in the 440-yard dash. His father was also active in high school sports.

"I wasn't pressured," he said. "I just wanted to run."

Before K-State, running wasn't the only sport in which Bradley excelled.

During his career at Wetmore High School, Bradley received honors in football and basketball. He was also named to the all-state teams two years in both sports.

But Bradley's main feats came with track. He was state champion in the 440 his junior year in high school and champion in the 100, 200 and 400-yard runs his senior year.

After graduating, Bradley was recruited in football, basketball and track by Coffeyville Community College.

As a freshman at Coffeyville, he received All-Conference honors as a wide receiver. He was also a starter on the basketball team and averaged 13 points a game.

Bradley chose to come to K-State from Coffeyville to run track for several reasons.

"I knew a lot of people on the track team and I knew K-State was trying to rebuild the program," he said. "I liked the idea of coming to help rebuild it."

While at K-State, Bradley has seen the program change. He said he believes the main change came two years ago when Miller arrived as head track coach.

"Coach Miller is a super motivator. When he's through talking to you, you want to compete," Bradley said.

K-State hurdler calls 'education' key to successful athletic performance

By TRACY ALLEN
Assistant Sports Editor

Being a student-athlete can sometimes be a difficult task. Traveling from game to game and attending classes, many athletes simply are not able to put the two together. But, for K-State track member Julius Mercer, academics and athletics can go hand in hand.

Considered by college coaches as an excellent basketball player, Mercer gave up his love for the game in order to excel in a sport which he did not participate in until his senior-year in high school.

After receiving basketball offers from such powers as the University of Iowa and various small colleges, Mercer, upon the encouragement of brothers, Mike and Fred, and a neighborhood coach, decided to use his athletic abilities beyond that of the hardwood courts.

"I had a few offers to go play basketball at a couple of small schools and large colleges," Mercer said. "But I decided to wait until the track season and see if anyone was interested in me. Besides, I figured that the odds of playing pro basketball were not as good as they were with running."

MERCER IS UNLIKE many of today's athletes in that he has a strong belief in education. "Once an athlete develops a taste for academics, he will mature as a person and will become more responsible," Mercer said. "Until he's able to recognize that academics are important in a person's development, then he will live a lonely life."

For Mercer, academics did not mean nearly as much when he first started out in track as it does now. "When I got out of high school, I had no direction as to what to do with my future," he said. "I would go to school just so I could remain eligible to run.

"When I was in junior college, I majored more in eligibility than a course of study. Even though I was a physical education major, I was blind in that I didn't know how important my education really is."

Julius Mercer

UPON ENTERING K-State, Mercer immediately developed into a quality athlete. In the 1982 season, the senior from Park Forest, Ill., won all honors as one of the 'Cats premier hurdlers. During last season, Mercer proved to coaches that he was the kind of material needed to win championships as he finished sixth in the league in the 400 intermediate hurdles, sixth at the Big Eight Indoor in the 60 high hurdles, third and fourth in both events at the University of Kansas Relays and second at the Big Eight Outdoor Championships.

According to track coach Steve Miller, Mercer continues to give the 'Cats an added punch. "He has come into his own," Miller said. "Last year he had a mediocre year until the conference outdoor meet. Since then, he has gained a lot of confidence. He's come to the point where he realizes that he can be competitive."

Mercer said that "Miller is a great motivator. He has a great sense and knowledge for track. He's a critic, but he's a positive motivator. He tells you like it is — he lays out the facts of life for you."

Miller said he believes that Mercer has gained a lot of maturity since his inaugural performance. "Julius has changed both on the track and in class," Miller said. "He has a better perspective on life than what he used to have."

Mercer agreed. "I feel that I'm way ahead physically and mentally. I feel more competent, responsible and more prepared for life."

(Regarding the editorial, "Who are the real Hypocrites?" in Tuesday's Collegian)

Dear Iranian Moslems' Association,

Due to the Collegian's infinite editing widsom, I am forced to pay $8.25 for a rebuttal to my own article. The last paragraph should have read:

As long as the Khomeini regime and its followers continue to act irresponsibly, Iran will get no respect from the world community. IMA, you're correct in being upset about people, "including some University officials and professors," blaming Iranians for the Landon Lecture disturbance March 28. We all know the majority of Iranians are good people. Officials should have blamed you (The Iranian Moslems' Association) and your "Lackies."

Astronauts test protective suits for space walk

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Two astronauts who will take the first U.S. space walk in nine years tested their space suits Wednesday and pronounced them fit for the next day's adventure in the shuttle Challenger's open cargo bay.

Mission specialists Story Musgrave and Don Peterson were so eager to get ready that they had completed many of the tests by the time they were supposed to start them.

At White Sands, N.M., meanwhile, engineers firmed up plans to correct the orbit of the huge communications satellite that went astray after being ejected from Challenger on Monday. They ran into trouble with the errant satellite again — and got out of it, again.

The astronauts' practice session involved putting on the bulky space suits and pressurizing the airlock, everything short of actually leaving the spaceship, and checking the suits' pressure and communications.

"The checkout ... was totally normal," Musgrave reported.

The excursion into the ship's 60-foot long cargo bay will have one element not planned before the flight. Mission Control told Musgrave to photograph nylon covering flapping loose on the ship's tail.

Musgrave and Peterson will be tethered by 50-foot cables. One flight director said Musgrave may "kind of hop up" to aim his camera over a maneuvering engine toward the nylon.

Whether both astronauts' helmets will be working at capacity was a question. Each helmet has four batteries to power a headlight and TV camera. The astronauts reported Wednesday that only four of the eight batteries were working. There were four spares still to be checked.

misrepresentation. They don't have the right to cancel within three days if the order is less than $25. It states that right on the application," Lungren said.

"BY MAKING THEM break down the order into two checks or three checks, less than $25, I don't think that would keep it out of the Kansas Consumer Protection Act," she said. "All the circumstances show that it was one order."

The Kansas Consumer Protection Act states all buyers have the right to cancel their orders within three business days if the purchase is over $25.

Students who placed orders with the company were advised by Lungren to cancel their checks. One student who placed an order was charged $38 by her bank to cancel four checks she had written for subscriptions.

According to Colette Robinson, president of Rocky Mountain Circulation, the name one of the sellers gave to Goodnow residents is listed as an independent dealer for the company. But Robinson said she wasn't aware of the sales tactics this particular person was using.

Lungren said a person is not exempt from committing fraud or misrepresentation even though the individual is listed as a representative of an organization.

"THEY WERE in the residence hall and in violation of residence hall policy," Lungren said. "There is a policy against solicitation in the residence hall, and I don't know how they got past that."

Robinson said her company tries to be as careful as possible with the selection of its dealers and has never received any complaints about this representative before, adding that no points toward the cruise would be given if the orders were canceled.

The Ramada Inn desk clerk the night the sales took place said no one with the name the sellers gave or anyone from Rocky Mountain Circulation was registered there.

The telephone number in San Antonio given to the students was the San Antonio Building Trades Council and no one by the name given to the students was employed there.

Robinson said she is not responsible for the company's dealers, adding that she did not know why the vendors would give a false telephone number in San Antonio or why they said they were staying at the Ramada Inn when they weren't registered.

She said her job is to ensure the magazine subscription orders are filled, and verified that the orders taken at Goodnow were turned in to her.

Spokesman Dave Hamil, of the Kansas Attorney General's office, said it has received no complaints with this particular magazine solicitation company.

THE DENVER BETTER BUSINESS Bureau said Rocky Mountain Circulation was formed in August 1982. Bureau officials suggested that prospective customers, because of lack of available information, call the different magazines offered through Rocky Mountain Circulation to verify the company's authenticity.

A representative of Camera Arts, one magazine offered by the vendors, said Rocky Mountain Circulation was not authorized to sell the magazine.

Rocky Mountain Circulation is not currently authorized to sell another publication that was purchased by Goodnow residents — INC. Magazine, a representative for INC. said, adding the authorization may have been granted recently and is not on record yet.

He explained if an unauthorized company sent in subscription orders, the company would either be given the needed authorization or the orders would be returned without being filled.

The Topeka, Wichita and Kansas City, Mo., Better Business Bureaus have no file on Rocky Mountain Circulation, and an official at Topeka said that if any complaints had come in about the company, a file would have been created.

Lungren said if Rocky Mountain Circulation is not authorized to sell the magazines it offers, a form of misrepresentation is taking place.

"By stating that they are authorized, by presenting an order blank and representing that you can order these magazines through this company, to me, implies that they are authorized to sell you subscriptions to the magazines. Which if they are not, that's clearly misrepresentation.

"Now, we won't know what comes of it. If they (the buyers) get their magazines, we don't have quite the same issue that we would have if they don't get the magazines. And even if they would, that doesn't necessarily mean that they (the vendors) weren't committing fraud and deceit in the ordering of it," Lungren said.

pond to the film the character development is enough for them. The girls seem quite content if just allowed to see Matt Dillon bare his chest every few scenes.

"E.T." and "The Black Stallion" were able to find larger audiences because in those movies, character development wasn't nearly as important as developing the plot. In "The Outsiders," the characters are much more important than the plot and thus need to be more fully realized in order to appeal to an adult audience.

"The Outsiders" tries to develop its characters a la "The Black Stallion" — by photographing them against pretty backgrounds. Unfortunately, it takes much more to develop human characters than it does a horse.

Education, counseling ease fears

Death — no longer a taboo subject

(Editor's note: This is the last of a three-part series dealing with changing attitudes toward death and dying.)

By BILL BIDWELL
Copy Editor

Death, like sex, is no longer a taboo topic, but older people are more likely to avoid discussion about it than are children.

That is the opinion of Lenard L. Miller, senior partner in Manhattan's Parkview Funeral Home. Young people, particularly children, are "curious — they want to know," Miller said. "It's older people who have the hangups."

Others who are aware of more relaxed discussion about death have noted there are almost as many jokes about death as there are about sex. What has broken the ice and why are attitudes changing?

"Perhaps it's (because of) the ethic of the generation of the '60s or emergence of the civil rights movement," said Albert N. Hamscher, associate professor of history, who teaches the course Death and Dying in History.

Hamscher, whose history course is more concerned with earlier issues and old taboos regarding death, said he is only suggesting possible reasons for new attitudes.

At the same time, Hamscher noted there may be an increasing orientation toward what he termed "humanitarian death."

The mass media have contributed to death education, according to Joan McNeil, assistant professor of family and child development.

She said one example is the growing number of books about the subject. "Did you know there are literally hundreds of books being written for children, including preteens and teens, about death?" she asked.

RESEARCH IN DEATH education is also increasing, but it's not empirical, she said. "I'm so interested in this because there is a need."

McNeil teaches Death and the Family and two other courses about death and dying. Students often visit with her outside class. A young man whose mother died wanted to talk. "I just listened," McNeil said. She said the student told her, "I can't talk to my friends. They don't know what to say."

Of Hamscher's course, Joel Mayfield, senior in radio and television, said the class has helped him since the death of his brother in a car crash.

"I had a problem with people giving me all sorts of advice, and it was often contradictory," Mayfield said, indicating the course gives him a historical basis for understanding why people give certain advice and how beliefs about death evolved.

"MY REASON for taking the class was that everybody kept shoving religious literature down my throat. I wanted to know why they felt this way — historically," Mayfield added.

Another of Hamscher's students, Frances Brennan, senior in journalism and mass communications, said the Death and Dying in History course has helped her since the death of her father.

Brennan said her father, James Brennan, was allowed to die a humanitarian death at his home in St. Marys in May 1982. She said she believes it is wrong to hospitalize a terminally ill patient — "to put him in the hospital and let him die."

Her father had Lou Gehrig's Disease.

"He said he didn't want to be in a hospital with machines keeping him alive," she recalled.

Brennan's wife took him to the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minn. Doctors there diagnosed the disease and told him he had two or three years to live. He died in less than a year at age 59.

BUT THERE WAS time to take care of certain necessities, including planning his own funeral, his daughter said. "He was able to sell his business and take care of other things," Brennan said.

She is thankful that her father was allowed to die at home. "I think it was a lot easier...it happened the way he wanted," she said.

Sport-a-Thon dancers help MD cause

By KIMBERLY GRACY
Collegian Reporter

Students are joining together to "Beat It."

The title from Michael Jackson's latest hit song explains the participants' attitudes in their effort to help beat muscular dystrophy during this year's Sport-A-Thon at the Sports Fan-attic.

Beat it. Just beat it. No one wants to be defeated.

The Sport-A-Thon has replaced the muscular dystrophy bump-a-thon which began in 1974. The three-day event ends tonight. Dancing is still the major activity, but sports-related contests and an auction are also featured.

Fred Lechner, owner of the Sports Fan-attic, said $110,000 has been raised in the charity over the past eight years and more than $9,000 was given last year.

Senate approves full allocation to K-State Union

An amendment to reduce the line item amount funded to the K-State Union next year from $12 to $11.75 per full-time student and from $6 to $5.90 per part-time student was introduced and failed after discussion at Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

Brian O'Neill, graduate in radio and television and sponsor of the amendment, said that since it was predicted there would be less money available for the funding of campus organizations this year, "the way to get this money for other groups" is to reduce the amount provided to the Union.

O'Neill, who estimated $7,500 would be made available to other groups seeking funding by the proposed reduction in the Union allocation, said he "would be the first to commend the importance of the Union. It's a showcase for the University, but at the same time, it's a business." He added that other groups seeking funding don't have the same capability to generate the kind of revenue the Union has.

The last time the Union received an increase in student funding was in the 1977-78 fiscal year, when the $7 allocation was increased to its current $12.

In other senate action, a resolution calling for senate support of the Soloman amendment, which states that "compliance with the Selective Service Act be a prerequisite for students to receive federal financial assistance," was heard.

John Kohler, senior in pre-law and campus director of Associated Students of Kansas, sponsored the bill following a request at the last ASK Legislative Assembly for campus directors to determine opinions on their respective campuses concerning the law and present them at the assembly April 15-16.

Another resolution, calling for a commendation to the All-University Open House Committee for "an excellent job in planning and promoting Open House," was passed in special orders after its first reading.

In new business, senate passed a constitutional revision calling for the member of the ASK State Board of Directors to replace the ASK campus director on the student body president's cabinet.

Voting was postponed until next Thursday's meeting on a bill to allocate $182.01 to the National Society of Architectural Engineers for partial funding of its national conference at K-State August 12-14.

More than 25 events are scheduled for next week when the Hispano Americano Festival begins its third annual celebration of the Hispanic culture.

The week-long festival will officially begin at 2 p.m. Saturday with Spanish language films and will conclude the following Saturday with the Sixth Annual Mexican-American Alumni Scholarship Awards Banquet in the Union Flint Hills Room.

"We feel like every year is getting better and naturally this will be the best one," said Raul Guevara, Minority Affairs Outreach specialist and coordinator of the festival.

The festival will feature many events, including a $75,000 art display in Farrell Library. The display is on loan from the Mexican Cultural Institute in San Antonio, Texas.

Jose A. Rivera, vice chairman of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and Jesus Chavarria, an editor and publisher of Hispanic Business, will speak on the topic "Our Dues Are Paid" at 10 a.m. Monday in Forum Hall. An arts and crafts display in the Union Courtyard will follow.

The Union cafeteria will serve a Central and South American breakfast on Wednesday, followed by a Mexican Lunch and a Puerto Rican Dinner. A magic show, by the "Puerto Rican Prince of Magic" Shamriguez will be presented at noon in the courtyard.

"We are trying to emphasize culture, education, political participation and economic development, as well as all the many contributions Hispanics have made in this society," Guevara said. "Hispanics are in just about every aspect of life and society."

In an attempt to involve high school students in Hispanic culture, a contest featuring Spanish poem recital and essays is scheduled for Friday morning prior to the keynote address by Congressman Baltazar Corrada of Puerto Rico.

Corrada graduated from the University of Puerto Rico with a law degree in 1959. He has served in the U.S. Congress for six years, according to Andres Calvo, president of Puerto Rican Student Organization.

The festival has been expanded from four days in previous years to a full week this year and includes several new attractions, Guevara said.

For the first time, a Spanish Mass will be said during the festival. Mass will be celebrated between 6 and 10 p.m. April 11 by the Rev. Ramond Gaitan of Kansas City. It will be followed by a potluck dinner at the International Student Center.

Dance concert features work of professors

In the dance spotlight this weekend are original works by K-State faculty. Dance Concert '83 features choreography by Luke Kahlich and Susan Warden, assistant professors in health, physical education and recreation.

Kahlich's newest work, "Alice in Ragtime," highlights the program. It is an adaptation of Lewis Carrol's book "Alice in Wonderland" and premiered Feb. 16 at Texas Tech University.

In return, Kent Parham of Texas Tech will appear as a guest choreographer along with Linda Kohl of New York City. Kohl has performed and choreographed with her own company and the Washington Square Repertory Dance Company as well as taught dance in several states.

K-State students and faculty will perform Kohl's "Alien Terrain," a work which has received good reviews.

The performance is scheduled for 8 tonight and Saturday night in McCain Auditorium. Tickets are $3.50 for faculty, staff and students.

Severance tax compromise eludes committee

TOPEKA — The House-Senate conference committee trying to reach compromise on the severance tax bill met for more than two hours late Thursday without agreeing on anything new, leading Speaker Mike Hayden to speculate the Legislature might not reach first adjournment as scheduled Friday night.

The panel agreed to reconvene at 9 a.m. Friday, when both sides will make new proposals on credits for producers, exemptions on some production and whether to make the tax permanent — the three major sticking points.

The only things the six-member committee has agreed on so far are the tax should raise $104 million, of which between $97 million and $98 million would go to the state general fund; oil, natural gas, coal and salt should be taxed, and the tax should go into effect May 1, with the revenue starting to flow into the state treasury by late September.

No rate of tax, exemption or credit system had been thoroughly discussed on coal and salt, which the House members agreed to add to the bill at the insistence of the Senate members.

"At first, it was a strange bedfellow," William Anderson said of his newly placed hand. "But now it's become a friend."

Anderson was injured by a Revolutionary War cannon in 1977 during a Memorial Day ceremony at a cemetery in suburban Concord. Black powder ignited as he rammed the charge into the cannon.

The blast tore off his left hand, leaving only a thumb. He also lost the thumb of his right hand.

Washington (Kansas, that is) wants Beach Boys

WASHINGTON, Kan. — If Washington, D.C., doesn't want the Beach Boys for a Fourth of July celebration, tiny Washington, Kan., would be delighted to have the rock group.

Paul Smith, a member of the Chamber of Commerce in this town of 1,700 in northeastern Kansas, said his group will ask the Beach Boys to perform at the town's annual Fourth of July celebration, which normally features country and western music.

"Trying to get the Beach Boys is a thousand-to-one shot," Smith said, adding he doubted the city and Chamber of Commerce could come up with the money to pay the group.

U.S. Interior Secretary James Watt dropped the Beach Boys from the capital's celebration, saying they were a hard-rock group that did not attract the kind of crowd the government wants around the capital, and replaced the group on the program with crooner Wayne Newton. Watt came under fire for his decision and relented Thursday, saying the Beach Boys would be invited to the capital at another time

Asked about the possibility of attracting undesirable elements and illegal drugs and drinking to Washington, Kan., Smith said: "We've had weed pickers before." He said city officials have told him they were not overly concerned about it.

Virus linked to toxic shock syndrome

NEW YORK — A new study of toxic shock syndrome provides tantalizing evidence that it is caused by a virus that preys upon bacteria, researchers said Thursday.

The discovery could "permit the identification of those who have the disease, those who are susceptible to it, and perhaps lead to the means of treating and preventing it," said Dr. Steven Schutzer of Rockefeller University in New York. He is one of the discoverers of the virus.

Toxic shock syndrome, identified in 1980, is a rapidly progressing illness marked by fever, rash and a collapse of blood pressure. It has been associated with tampon use, and has occurred primarily, but not exclusively, in young, menstruating women. Its cause has eluded investigators.

Fizzling 'Kong' deflates publicity stunt

NEW YORK — A publicity stunt recalling a 50-year-old movie went bananas Thursday when an 84-foot inflated King Kong got tangled in its tethers and sprang a leak atop the Empire State Building, where a cinema Kong once raged at circling warplanes.

The movie Kong died fighting, but the airbag simian had to be deflated and untangled. Its manufacturer estimated it would be 24 hours before his men repaired the 3,000-pound Kong atop the 102-story building.

"I have a goal and that goal is not going to be accomplished if King Kong is upside down or sideways," said Robert Vicino, president of Robert Keith & Co. of San Diego, which built the balloon as a publicity stunt.

There was no shooting, no damsel in distress and Kong was silent and deflated.

Weather

The jet stream is up to its old tricks again — and it's not nice. Would you believe snow is likely today? The high will be in the 30s and low in the 20s.

Protecting morals not Watt's priority

I applaud you, James Watt. Anytime you insist on making yourself look ridiculous is fine with me.

The so-called protector of our land is now protecting our minds against the vile evils of "rock bands," namely the Beach Boys. Watt wants to replace the Beach Boys and The Grass Roots with Wayne Newton and the U.S. Army Blues Band for the Fourth of July celebration in Washington, D.C. He proposed to do this to provide American citizens with something more "patriotic and family-oriented."

Besides showing his ignorance of what is rock and what is not, he is calling Las Vegas showman Newton "family-oriented."

However, what might be even more amusing is how the Beach Boys have become the new political "issue" in Washington with Nancy Reagan, George Bush and Bob Dole among others coming to the band's rescue. It's suddenly politically "right" to befriend the singers of surf and sand.

The Beach Boys said "same to you" to our environmental friend with a faux pas, but I would ask Mr. Watt when it will be patriotic and family-centered to save our national forests?

Budget cuts harmful

Editor,

"Schools cope with cuts by removing pillows." This was a headline in the Collegian on Oct. 27, 1982. The story which followed said Michigan State University's residence hall residents now must pay extra for a good night's sleep. The university had stopped supplying residence halls with feather pillows as part of an on-going effort to save money.

I ask you, K-State students, are you worried about pillows or are you worried about your education? The quality of education at K-State is decreasing, and we as students are not getting as much for our money as we did even a year ago. The University has been and will continue to push to make ends meet. This push is called budget cuts.

These cuts have affected the University in many ways and have taken a toll on every department. We see it in our classrooms and labs with lack of equipment, in our physical plant's lack of a preventive maintenance program and in our losing good teachers because of department cutbacks and low salaries.

Students, I say look beyond this letter and your frustrations and ask why. I recommend the budget be made more accessible to the student body. This can be done by publishing it in the Collegian at the beginning of each fiscal year. I propose that this publication of the budget be done so we, the students, are aware of where the cuts are being made.

Where does our education fit into this budget? The budget, like the Collegian, should serve the students and if it doesn't, we should ask why. Our need is education. Is our present budget set up to povide the best education?

Infamous 'firsts'

Would you let a sharp knife hang by a single thread above your head?

If this knife were already hanging by a dangerously thin thread, wouldn't it make sense to try and remove the knife?

This is exactly what we have been doing. Nuclear arms are like knives suspended directly over our heads. Every missile built breaks a strand of that thread.

Americans placed the first threat upon the head of the world when the first atomic weapons were created and used on civilian populations in Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Time and time again, we have added heavier and heavier knives to a strand of thread which is perilously close to breaking.

Americans were the first to begin mass production and deployment of Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles — ICBMs. America was the first to develop the hydrogen bomb. Americans were also the first to experiment with the neutron bomb.

AMERICA HAS BEEN a leader in hanging a knife above the head of the world.

Because of our role as a leader in the arms race, we have a responsibility for the horrifying predicament we are in now. Perhaps, our responsibility is greater than the responsibilities of any other nation.

As a nation where all people have a voice in what goes on, all people have a responsibility to use that voice. In other nations where voices are silenced, the responsibility does not fall to the individual as it does here. If we truly believe we are leaders in the free world, we have a greater job in front of us.

Americans were the first nation to usher in this nuclear lunacy and should be the first nation to usher it out.

We should be the first nation to remove these knives, because the thread on which they are hanging is dangerously close to breaking.

THE TESTIMONY of knowledgeable people is undeniable. Some of the greatest minds in recent history have spoken out against America's role in the arms race.

Ever since the invention of dynamite by Alfred Nobel in 1867, we have been obsessed with the idea of trying to create a more powerful weapon.

In the past 116 years, we have moved from the invention of dynamite to the creation of a single bomb which contains more firepower than was used in all of World War II.

Where will we be in the next 116 years? Can we afford to find out?

The issue needs to be settled and this stupidity halted in a most urgent manner. It is an overwhelming issue. The immense nature of the problem can cause despair and discourage even the most avid activist.

But, things are being done. All around the world the people are saying "no" to nuclear weapons. Governments are becoming aware of the fact that their own people want the issue to be resolved.

PEOPLE, WHO HAVE ACTED as individuals as well as in groups, have started to make a difference in the way people think. There is an increased awareness of the issue. More is being learned every day and support for the freeze is growing stronger.

April has been dedicated as Ground Zero Month. Our representatives need to hear from the people who elected them to office before the issue is to be considered.

Results of new protests 'boring,' but effective

Editor,

K-State students, you blew it! The young men in particular really blew it. You were given the perfect opportunity to follow the traditions of students a half generation ago. A campus issue has finally arrived which warranted student action: to require 18- to 22-year-old men to register with the draft before receiving financial aid was perfect. Here was your chance to relive the '60s and '70s with protest, rioting and even confrontation with the National Guard and police.

How well I remember the good ol' days when I turned 18 and registered for the draft back in 1970. I never burned my draft card, but the times we had: hippies, long hair and "hell no we won't go."

Just look at what you have missed, K-State. Writing letters to government officials and such to change a law. One group in Minnesota has even filed suit to have this law repealed. Boring!

Now I know times have changed, but our methods worked. Why in less than 12 years, we were out of Vietnam. I read that your letters and lawyers have succeeded in getting this registration law changed in three months. Beginners luck, I say. OK, I'll concede that now we have bike paths, field house funding and lots more from "modern protest," but give me a chance. Old habits are hard to break.

Maybe I should give this letter writing a shot and write to Department of Education Secretary T. H. Bell or Selective Service System Director T.K. Turnage and give them my views on this financial aid requirement and see what happens. After all, I'm still open to try a new and radical idea.

Reflections

It has been an interesting, exciting, instructive, and bothersome last few days. Kirkpatrick Sale came to town on a Monday morning and began to share his vision of a more appropriate future. His idea of bioregional sections determined by nature's patterns, which would be self-sufficient and ecologically conscious, pointed toward a future which will be sustainable, creative, and in much better balance environmentally.

Yet other personages were in town, too, and we went to listen to Sheikh Yamani, only to experience the frustration of a protest, and a greater frustration of a somewhat hostile response as people applauded at the protesters being carried out and yelled "Send the bastards home!" and "Get the bastards out of here!" We were saddened by the response and wondered about the issue of free speech, its limitations, its responsibilities.

WE SPOKE of several sides to most issues (rarely just two) and wondered what could be done to give the protesters a brief few moments — so that indeed the University could be a place of exchange of ideas, then proceed with the scheduled lecture. But our ideas may not have helped and the result could have been the same, or worse. Yet, we still wondered, since most hold so dear that we are a free and friendly country, why there was so quickly so much angry unfriendliness. Our sensitivities hurt for all sides.

Then, two days later, we spent most of the day at an experimental land use situation. There they struggle with sustainable land management and how to plan, experiment, research and evaluate land use that is ecologically conscious and caring. These people care deeply about the future and how we can survive with some measure of mutuality of people and planet.

THAT SAME EVENING, a number of us went to see "Gandhi," not just a magnificent film, but an experience in the reality of the power of assertive non-violence in the face of injustice. The essence of that "Mahatma" (great soul) will long live, and is needed again in our troubling times. The willingness to die for justice, without violence against the perpetrators of injustice, (which, of course, betrays the stand for justice) demonstrates an incredible power, evokes a deep response of respect and a fervent wish to live that same way. And it returned us to the events of that Monday, and we pondered the seeming absence of such a spirit.

And, of course, all these days occurred during spring (not that the weather shows it), which at K-State means we are subjected to the top-of-lung "evangelizing" of whatever traveling "preaching" type happens to be coming through, unless, of course, one of our "home-grown" variety is not already doing so.

On behalf of a faith that should know better, an apology is in order to those of you who are tired of this. As has been said before, they have a right to be here, we have a right not to participate. For those few who find it meaningful in some nonunderstandable way, an apology of a different sort is in order.

Perhaps comment about "bastards" was correct, it just didn't go far enough, for as Will Campbell has said, "We are all bastards, but God loves us anyway."

Astronauts float on leashes in first space walk since '70s

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Tied to 50-foot leashes, two astronauts made the first U.S. space walk in nearly a decade Thursday, floating joyously around Challenger's open cargo bay to practice repair jobs for future shuttle missions.

Astronaut Story Musgrave nearly swung himself over the side of the space ship, doing a handstand on the rail, restrained by his tether. At times, television showed the Earth spinning 176 miles below them.

"It's so bright out here," said Musgrave, the first out. Astronaut Don Peterson followed a minute later, each tying his tether to slide wires that run the length of the 60-foot-long cargo bay.

Mission Control asked how the real thing compared with the training in a large swimming tank.

"It's a little deeper pool than I'm used to working in," said Musgrave.

Peterson immediately went to a box and removed tools specially built for space use. Both astronauts flexed their arms and moved their legs to evaluate the mobility of the new $2.1 million suits.

Musgrave also climbed up the side of the rear bulkhead to take a look at the material that is flapping loose behind one engine.

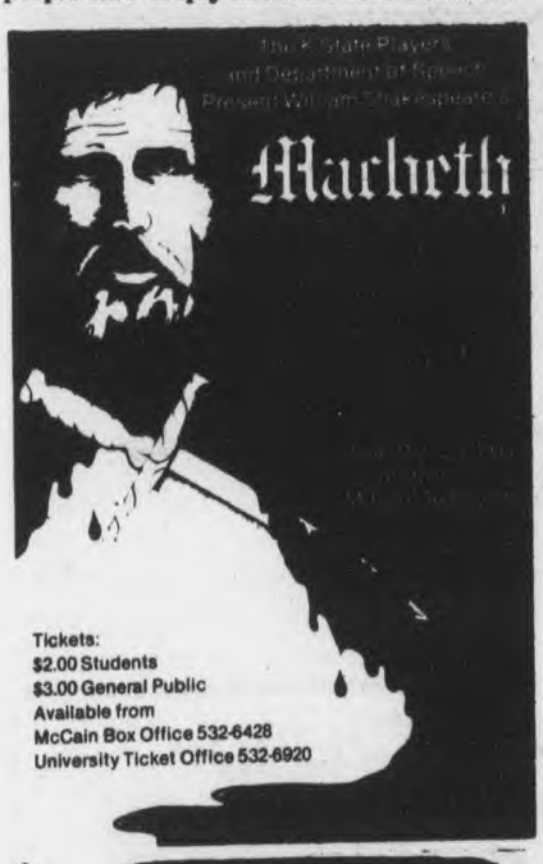
The astronauts, protected from the hostile environment only by their spacesuits, planned to spend 3½ hours at their tasks.

About a half an hour before they ventured out, President Reagan placed a radiotelephone call to Commander Paul J. Weitz. He told Weitz he didn't envy the astronauts. Asked why, later, by reporters in the Oval Office, Reagan replied: "I don't know, maybe a little claustrophobia."

The mission, Reagan told Weitz, "serves as a symbol, I think, of our commitment to maintain America's leadership in space." It couldn't be done without without men like those aboard Challenger."

"We appreciate that," Weitz responded. "I know that it's an old and well used song, but we just get the glory, we really get to stand on the shoulders of giants to participate in this program."

The spacesuits malfunctioned on the fifth and most recent flight of the shuttle Columbia in November, preventing a planned space walk.



The suits have undergone extensive checking but, still, four batteries that power lights in the helmets failed to work. There were seven other batteries aboard Challenger, however, and only four were needed.

At White Sands, N.M., meanwhile, engineers postponed maneuvers to correct the oval orbit of the huge communications satellite ejected from the shuttle on Monday. They had planned to start firing the craft's jet thrusters on Sunday to nudge it into its intended high orbit at 22,300 miles.

But NASA's Robert Aller reported Thursday that the satellite has a slight roll problem that engineers want to understand before they give the firing commands, sometime in the next week.

Challenger is to return from its inaugural flight on Saturday after five days, 19 minutes in space. Mission Control told the astronauts that the weather looked good for their landing at Edwards Air Force Base in California's Mojave Desert at 10:49 a.m. PST.

Students, faculty phone for finances

By SALLY NIBLETT
Collegian Reporter

"Hello, may I speak to Mary, please? OK, thank you...Hi. I'm a student at Kansas State University and I'm at the K-State Union with a group of faculty and students.

"We're calling our alumni across the nation to raise badly needed funds for scholarships.

"I'm aware of your past contributions and they have been greatly appreciated.

"I thought you might be in a position to help us tonight, and would like to ask if you would consider making a $25 tax-deductible contribution to the college..."

Seven of the University's eight colleges are participating in the Telefund, a fund-raising event sponsored by the KSU Foundation.

Recruiting of volunteer callers is accomplished through a network of friends and acquaintances and word-of-mouth. Little advertising is done, according to Tom Carlin, director of communications at the KSU Foundation and Telefund coordinator.

Carlin compared the recruiting to a pyramid. Each college has two appointed coordinators who select four team captains for each calling session. And those captains recruit 10 people per session.

VOLUNTEERS CALL alumni from their particular college and ask for continued support of that college. The money, kept in a special account by the foundation, is used for scholarships, educational material, lab equipment, professorships and student activities.

The Telefund takes place in Union 212, where volunteers are seated at tables in a horseshoe formation. In front of each volunteer is a Telefund place mat and either a white or a black telephone. Before the calling begins, volunteers view a training slide presentation.

Written on the place mat is a sample conversation between caller and alumni, sample pledge card with instructions, common "maybe" responses and how to respond to them, a numbered space for pledges attained and even a doodle space.

"In the past, we haven't had the training program, and the sample conversation didn't flow as well. Even after all the calls I've made these past few nights, I still find myself glued to the sample for the first few calls," Kathy Treadway, assistant professor of curriculum and instruction, said.

Volunteers using the white phones call in-state alumni on a KANS-A-N line. Those using a black phone are calling out-of-state alumni on a WATS line.

THE SOLICITATION pays for itself, Carlin said. The calls will be separated and the cost will come off the top of the individual college's contributions.

"I kind of like calling out of state and talking to people who live far away," Gary Wesche, sophomore in elementary education, said. "It's neat to talk to people who have already graduated from college."

By the time the Telefund is over, 15,000 to 20,000 K-State alumni will have been contacted by approximately 1,000 volunteers. The College of Education has already raised more than $21,000 during three of the four sessions. All together, more than $600,000 will be raised, Carlin said.

"I had a good time. That's why I came back tonight," Tanya Elzinga, sophomore in elementary education, said. "If you sell something door-to-door, you're not sure of your product. But the College of Education has been here for a long time, so I don't feel bad asking for donations."

Many of the alumni have lost all contact with the University, he said, except for following the sports teams. Many times the alumni will ask for a certain faculty member they knew. In that instance, a good conversation and pledge to that college often will result, Carlin said.

"THE FIRST CALL is always the hardest. People are always real hesitant, but once they get talking they seem to enjoy it. Some people tell you their whole life story — I had this one lady who was crying while telling me why she couldn't pledge," said Kathy Houts, junior in elementary education and a Telefund coordinator for the College of Education.

Treadway said about half of her students have volunteered for one night or the other. They are getting a rude awakening about how tight the economy is and how hard it is for those in a family situation. She said she has heard refusal reasons which include taxes being higher than expected, a new baby and someone needing braces.

Statistics have shown that once an alumnus makes a first gift, he will continue to donate each year.

"As they (alumni) get older and wealthier, they'll be able to give larger gifts," Carlin said, adding that alumni relations have good benefits that can't be counted in dollar denominations. Last year some engineering students benefited by getting summer internships from talking to alumni, he said.

"It's so nice to see that even in a deflated economy, the support of the

"The very first year we did it we were going to try to get a record for the Guiness Book of World Records," Lechner said. "We could have been in it, but the next year they (Guiness) changed their format and it has to be entered a year in advance.

"But we do hold a world record for the longest time that anyone has ever bumped."

Dancers have danced eight hours a day since Tuesday and will continue until Friday at midnight.

EVEN THOUGH THE event has undergone a format change, it is still an anticipated function.

"I've wanted to do this all year. The people who we're doing it with are a blast and that makes all the difference in the world," Kim Wiesmann, sophomore in business administration, said. "We entertain each other to keep our spirits high."

Weismann said she prepared for the event by jumping rope for three weeks.

Doug Mitts, junior in management, walked door-to-door Thursday afternoon collecting donations before participating in the event.

"It's all for fun, but what it all comes down to is that we're doing it for the kids," he said. After two days of dancing, Mitts admitted his feet were getting "really sore," but "I'd rather be sore doing this than something else."

A TWO-YEAR VETERAN of the dance event, Kari Jones, senior in secondary education, said, "There's a real difference between last year and this year in that we get a 10-minute break every hour and last year we had to stay up all night."

Jones said there is an intensity to the dancing.

"About the time you think you're hurting you think of those little kids," she said."

Want to be tough better do what you can, so beat it.

Lechner said the event's original purpose, that of setting a world dance record, has grown.

"We've gotten to know some of the people who are connected with muscular dystrophy and by that association and learning about the disease we've become more committed to helping with it.

"It's kind of been a gradual development, but we hope this will be built up to where it is a bigger event," Lechner said.

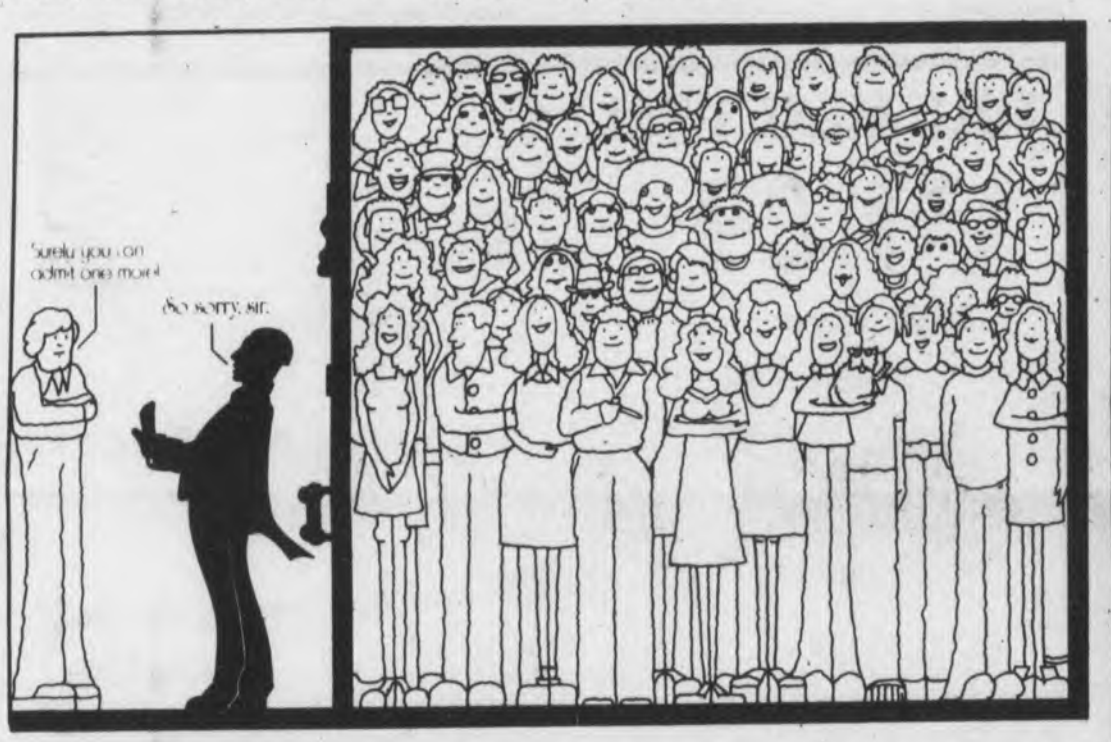
TO MAKE THE Sport-A-Thon a larger event, support of the K-State Athletic Department has been solicited.

"We raised the most money Wednesday night from the auction. The K-State Athletic Department donated a lot of sports paraphernalia including football jerseys, helmets and an autographed basketball from the (men's) basketball team," Lechner said.

Also being auctioned are beer lights, clocks and signs donated by local distributors. The auction will continue through tonight.

"One of the things that is really going to become a big event is the BPOC., Best Partier On Campus, and this year we have about 15 representatives from different groups," Lechner said. The winner will be announced tonight and will receive a free keg donated by the Sports Fan-attic.

THE BPOC IS determined by which candidate collects the most donations in jars with the candidates' pictures placed around the tavern.



Wednesday's activities included the auction, a special appearance by K-State's cheerleaders, a free-throw contest and blind bowling.

Thursday night was "Baseball, Hotdogs and Apple Pie Night," featuring baseball batting and hot dog eating contests and a celebrity "pie-in-the-face" contest. Celebrities were members of the various sports clubs on campus.

Manhattan's musclar dystrophy poster child, Shawn Flesher, is scheduled to make a special appearance at the event tonight. Also scheduled will be a "DWI" — dribbling while intoxicated — contest, a "Reggie Jackson Spit-Off" and the announcement of the BPOC winner. Then the dancing will finally wind down.

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Senate on Thursday passed, 37-1, and returned to the House a bill banning cities from declaring all or large part of their territory enterprise zones in order to take advantage of tax breaks and incentives for business development.

The bill, which changes a law passed last year creating the zones, also requires all cities already declared as enterprise zones be re-approved in July 1984. The measure now returns to the House for consideration of amendments.

Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, said a dozen Kansas cities have been declared enterprise zones since the law was passed. Several towns, including Winfield, Kansas City, Topeka, Leavenworth, Independence and Manhattan, declared all or large parts of their cities enterprise zones, which Kerr said was abuse of the intent of the law.

"Many legislators feel the we passed a bill last year that was much too broad," Kerr said. "Abuse of the intent of this act will jeopardize the whole act. We felt we needed to narrow the scope of the law."

Sen. James Francisco, D-Mulvane, objected to the requirement that cities already approved be forced to re-apply next year. He tried, unsuccessfully, to change the date of application until July 1986 and was the only member of the Senate to vote against the bill.

Others objected to a committee decision to allow cities to designate industrial parks, outside of city limits, as enterprise zones.

"The intent of the law was focused on rebuilding depressed, inner cities areas where there is widespread poverty and high unemployment," said Sen. Gerald Karr, D-Emporia. "I'm just afraid we're encouraging sprawling industrial parks outside of cities by doing this."

To prevent any other cities from designating their entire area as a zone, the committee amended the bill to allow just 25 percent of the population and 25 percent of a city's area to be eligible for designation as a zone. Cities also must re-apply every five years for the designation.

The bill also requires the jobs created by a company which locates or expands in an enterprise zone be given to Kansas residents. Economically depressed cities must meet poverty and unemployment criteria to be eligible for the Kansas Department of Economic Development's enterprise zone label.

State Senate bill allocates funding for Weber repair

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Kansas Senate unanimously passed and returned to the House a bill including budget additions of $225,000 for roof repair and remodelling at K-State's Weber Hall Thursday. The addition was part of a bill appropriating $6.1 million from the state general fund for capital improvements at a variety of state universities, state hospitals and the Kansas State Penitentiary in Lansing.

Included was an shift of $135,000 to the fiscal year starting July 1 for construction of an addition to Haworth Hall at the University of Kansas. Also, $230,000 for KU's Bailey Hall air system, and $85,000 for brick repair at Murphy Hall, were also approved. The KU Medical Center will receive $935,000 for purchase of hospital equipment.

Also included was $150,000 for construction of a technology center at the Kansas Technical Institute in Salina. The Senate also agreed to spend $360,000 at Wichita State University for library planning but the money will be included in another bill. Also, the Board of Regents was given $915,000 for major repairs and maintenance.

An allotment to KSP at Lansing for construction of a medium security facility was increased in the 1985 fiscal year, which is over a year away, by nearly $800,000 to speed completion of the facility.

Musician's world premiere to start music festival week

World premieres are not an everyday occurrence, especially if a choir from Kansas is chosen for its debut. However, the K-State Concert Choir will be singing "The Growing Weight of Age" by Alan Hoddinott Sunday night in its annual President's Concert.

Hoddinott composed the song specifically for the choir because of its "good international reputation." Rod Walker, associate professor of music and choir conductor, also admitted another reason is "because he and I are good friends."

The favor will be returned, though, when Walker and his choir visit Hoddinott's home in Cardiff, Wales, the first week in May.

Hoddinott is the head of the music department at University College in Cardiff. He has a wide range of musical repertoire to his name, including symphonies, sinfoniettas, concertos and chamber, vocal and choral music.

Hoddinott is visiting K-State for the music department's Contemporary Music Festival. The President's Concert starts a week of concerts, lectures and workshops.

"The President's Concert is the annual spring concert given by choir members to honor President and Mrs. Duane Acker," Walker explained.

Events are scheduled for each day and night after Sunday and all are free to the public. All performances will consist solely of Hoddinott's works. Highlights will be a concert by the choir, the brass quintet and the symphonic wind ensemble on Monday night, a faculty chamber concert on Tuesday night and the one-act opera, "The Magician," on Wednesday night.

The opera will be performed by students and directed by Tomas Hernandez and Jerry Langenkamp, professors of music. It is a tale of an aging lovesick magician who struggles between his real life and the illusion of his magic.

Also featured at the Contemporary Music Festival will be Evelyn Petros. Petros is a member of the Metropolitan Opera and is in much demand as a soloist for symphonies and orchestras.

A soprano, Petros' main appearance will be Thursday night when she will sing several songs, including one written by Hoddinott.

Both Hoddinott and Petros will give master classes and lectures to music students throughout the week.

Death

Brennan said she, her six sisters and one brother spent time with their father at home. "We made more efforts to be with him — do things for him," she said, echoing the Hospice concept.

But there were some people who "wouldn't come around," avoiding what they thought would be an unpleasant situation, Brennan noted.

"Others did," she said. "You need your friends — you need those people — just to keep you living, just to make you laugh. That's when you need that reality."

SHE DESCRIBED her father as a man with "a real good sense of humor who would joke a lot."

She had wondered how she would take the death of a family member. "Before it happened, I'd never had anyone real close die before. I always wondered how it would be," Brennan said.

"I knew I'd need to talk about it after it happened — and even before it happened."

Brennan said it was important for her to see "the person die right there."

"I was afraid they'd call me at school and I'd never see him again, except in a funeral home," she said.

Hamscher, mentioning humanitarian death, referred to ambivalence — conflicting feelings — about science. "Americans have this ambivalence about science. On one hand, we love to send men to the moon. On the other hand, we look at science with a skeptical eye and don't quite understand it. We don't want it to control us," he said.

"LOOK AT IT. Some poor wretch is tied to machines in a hospital and he has everyone from doctors trying to keep him alive to relatives who say 'shut it off'.

"Our interest in humanitarian death could be a reflection of our ambivalence toward science."

He said he considers the modern hospital a changed institution that is "now a place to die as well as a place to be healed."

About the taboo nature of death, Hamscher said it "until very recently, began in the U.S. and spread elsewhere — into England and France."

"There is that phase of the funeral we (Americans) hang onto — the open casket. More literate English middle-and-above classes don't view bodies — cremation is very popular — and they don't greatly visit cemeteries.

"NEITHER DO WE visit cemeteries as much. We don't have the little benches to go and sit on and we now have rambling memorial parks. The bronze tombstones are flushed to the ground so you can run your mower over them."

Speaking from a funeral director's standpoint, Miller said of modern attitudes toward death:

"We're getting to be a more curious, more open society. Fifty years ago, the only time you ever talked about death was when grandpa and grandma died — and we never talked about it after the funeral."

Miller said funeral directors are going "as far down as grade school to talk to kids."

"Children will accept the fact of death a lot easier than adults do," he said.

BUT OLDER PEOPLE who go to a funeral home to view a body often tell the children to "stay out while we go look at grandpa — and the kids get scolded for not minding," Miller said. These adults may "instill their hangup" in the children, he noted.

Miller described the three or four days following a funeral as "traumatic" for many people. "Immediately after the burial — or whatever the disposition of the remains is — they get back to some form of living."

He said the reason for a funeral is service to the family and the procedure leading to it involves counseling. Miller said "99.9 percent of the people who walk in our door don't know what needs to be done."

"A lot of people think counseling is sitting down in front of a psychologist...just sitting down with the family and making the arrangements, including selection of a casket" is part of the job, he said.

Miller said he believes in "pre-arranging" funerals. "There is a certain line beyond which you don't go," he said, but he indicated casket and vault selection are among the early arrangements that can be made.

"Society as a whole is becoming more aware of things (about funerals) and there has been a lot of publicity, some positive, some negative, about the funeral industry," he said.

"Just to ask questions is good. I'm a firm believer in asking questions, even if they're the wrong questions."

Playwrights: Readings help student authors finish plays; audience reaction lends insight to first tries

By SEAN REILLY
Collegian Reporter

With a chance to receive immediate audience feedback, compliments and criticisms, student playwrights presented their plays Thursday night at the Purple Masque Theatre.

"These plays were developed in a class, Advance Playwrighting," Norman Fedder, associate professor of speech, said. "From these performances the playwrights will be getting reactions from the crowd on their plays."

Fedder said the plays are "one act which are still in the process of being written. These are the first plays for all the playwrights.

"This new approach was thought up by Jay Cohen," Fedder added. "The old approach was to perform three plays. The students will do 10 plays by just reading the parts. This is a better approach."

The readings are done in order to assist the playwrights with their work, which is incomplete. With the readings and reactions from the audience, the writers can make the necessary changes.

"I hope the playwrights will learn a good deal from the audience comments," Cohen, junior in speech, said. "It will be great help to us to learn from the audience their feelings. Most of the material is in the first draft."

Because there is so much material to be read, Cohen said, readings were scheduled Thursday and were to continue tonight and Saturday night. Four readings were scheduled for each evening, said Cohen, director of the readings.

"They used to have one-act plays every two weeks. I was feeling energetic at the time so I decided to do it," Cohen said. "It seemed like a good idea.

"This is a good process for the playwrights. It is costly to do the actual production for each play. I wish this was a more common practice," he said.

"Any Day Now," a play written by John Crego, junior in journalism and mass communications, is about an alcoholic rehabilitation center. "All the characters are true. I was there. I am not afraid to say that," he said.

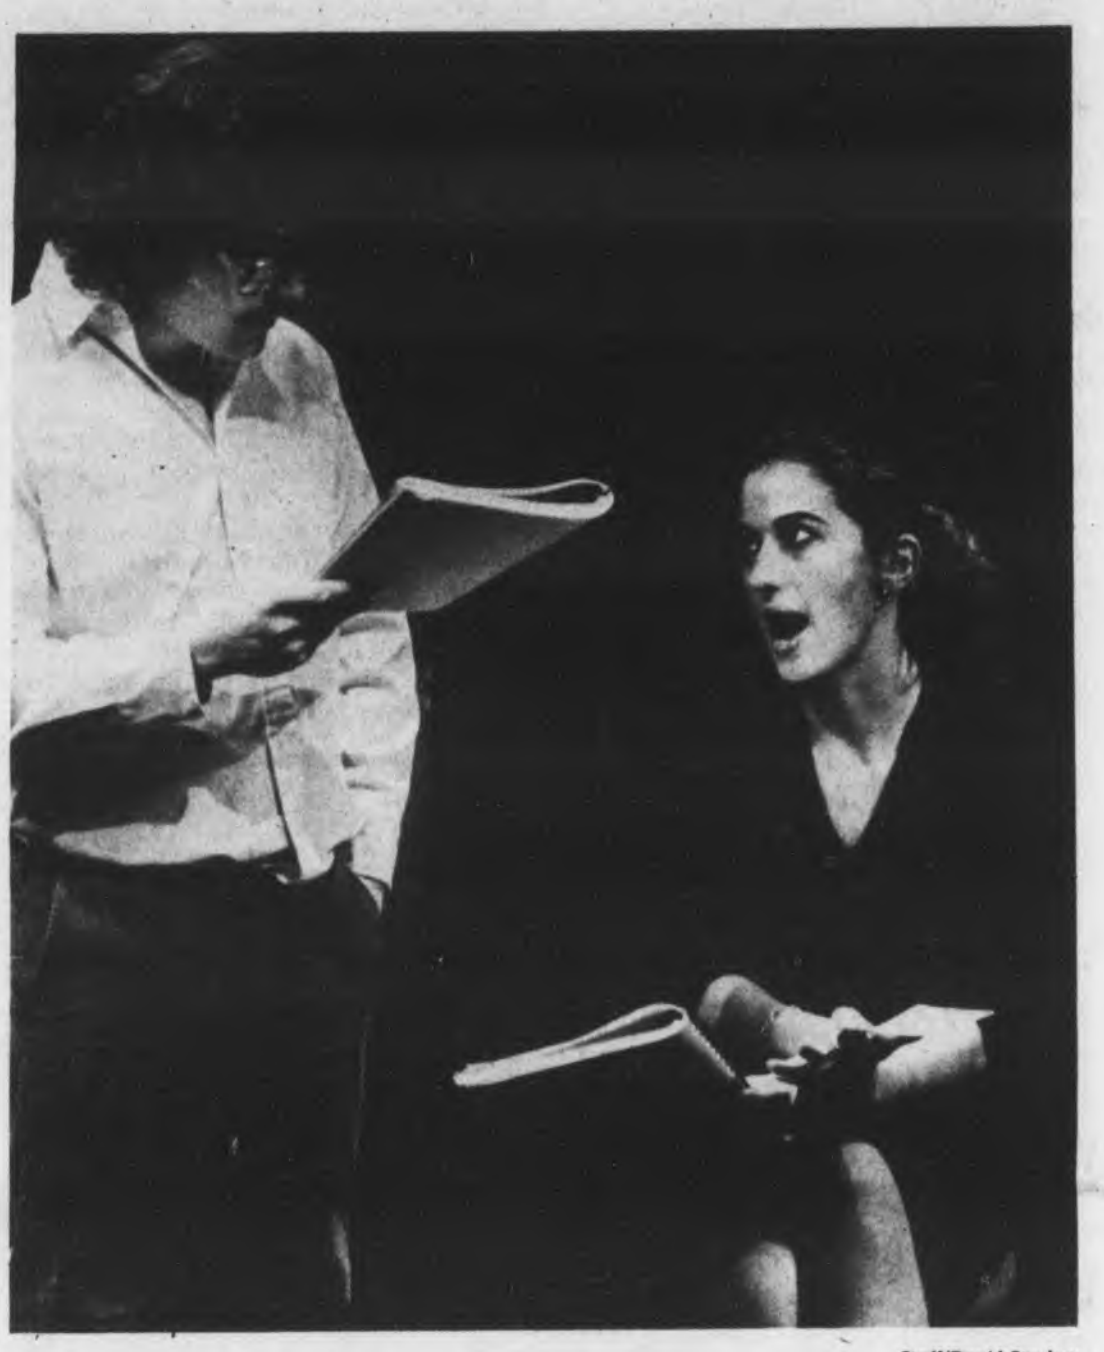
"The main theme of the play is about the pain and misery of the drying out process," Crego explained.

Crego has been working on his play since last September. "The play has not been completed. My main goal is self satisfaction and to see the play performed on stage. I plan to keep on writing after class ends, sort of like a hobby."

An untitled play, referred to as "No. 1," was written by Robin Mosher, a graduate in English.

"I received the idea from my grandparents. My grandfather went out one day and came back with a new two-door car. He never told my grandmother what he was doing," Mosher said.

"My grandmother ran most of the errands and she did not care for two-door cars. So she took the car for a test drive only to arrive home with a new four-door car that same day."



Mosher has been working on her play about a month. It deals with purchasing a car in a manner similiar to her grandparents' purchase. However, the couple in the play is much younger and they have a 10-year-old daughter.

Dwight Cox, junior in radio and television, got the idea for his play from a song. He wouldn't reveal the name of the song because it is a "writer's secret."

"Hobo Bill's Last Ride," Cox's play, is about a young boy who is afflicted with terminal cancer. His dream in life is to be a hobo and hop trains.

After the readings were completed, the small audience was invited to offer comments to the playwrights. The discussion was led by Fedder.

The plays were selected during a playwright contest in February. Competition wasn't a problem because the number of plays turned in was the exact number needed for the program. However, Cohen said, all the plays were of "quality."

U2 misses own high standards in new LP, 'War'

By JIM MELIZA
Collegian Reviewer

Four young men, collectively known as U2, struggling to be popular and profound...these terminal adolescents have found the meaning of life by reading synopses of Ingemar-Bergman films.

With their new album, "War," they again ask the public to join them in the "Psychedelic Zone."

If Rod Serling were still alive, he'd probably listen to U2. Though the narrative portions of their songs differ significantly from Serling's scripts, their music supplies an atmosphere of other-worldly landscape. The hollow-sounding tones mixed with extreme reverberation conjure the dreaminess that suits Serling's anything-goes logic. More important, it fits the pondering nature of the group's lyrics.

U2 has neatly wedged itself into a style of music known as the new psychedelia. The common tool within this style is the drone. This hypnotic effect is a constant buzzing or ringing created in the process of mixing the sound. It is similar to Indian raga music with a straight 4/4 time.

The result produces a music that demands profundity. Few groups have capitalized on this as well as U2.

"War" is an extension of the group's previous two albums' sound. The person to be credited with this consistency is producer Steve Lillywhite. His insistence on accenting the harmonics of the guitar and the ring of the bass drums and tom-toms has become his trademark. No wonder he has had such success with other bands associated with the new psychedelia.

The Psychedelic Furs and the Urban Verbs bear a distinct likeness to U2 in these production techniques.

Having contemplated adolescence on U2's debut album "Boy" and religion on "October," the group now explores savagery. To underline that recognition, side one shows a set of scenarios that point the blame to "puppets who pull the strings." The songs, "Seconds" and "New Year's Day," take place before some horrible carnage.

Though the nuclear apocalypse is imminent, the singer is caught in the anxious, yet hopeless, moments before it is to happen. Those puppets spring to life to "...push the button and pull the plug..."

"Sunday, Bloody Sunday" paints the drab gray aftermath of a holocaust. The lyrics describe a battle-weary land, in which its most prominent color is blood red.

"War" is described as a means of division. It divides families, lovers and countries into powerless pawns. No one can be a victor. He can only be a victim.

Tackling such broad themes can cause problems and it has riddled U2's chances with greatness. Theirs is a life viewed through the eyes of some 19-year-old existentialist. Unfortunately, these boys were 19 two years ago. As a result, it sounds as if the group's growth has been stunted.

The great problem with the band is that the members set such high standards for themselves with their debut album. U2 has yet to surpass its "Boy" album in terms of continuity and composition. It was great to hear boys give a fresh new insight on adolescence. "War," however, offers few new points of view.

This album is by no means a step backward. Instead, it straddles the same territory others have walked before. This treading of musical water is more disappointing because the group is capable of better things. At this point, we can admire U2's intention and hope it grows.

Stock characters flaw Simon movie

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

"Max Dugan Returns" is another in the seemingly endless series of Neil Simon situation comedies. Simon has churned out one of these screenplays almost every year. Unfortunately, his ability to make each situation fresh has deteriorated.

The characters each have the unmistakable signature of Neil Simon, meaning they speak in a manner that has less to do with reality than it does with being in a Simon comedy. It seems as if Simon has a warehouse full of these stock characters. He no longer tries to develop real people in real situations, but instead simply utilizes his old stand-bys in artificially sweet situations.

The plot for "Max Dugan Returns" actually sounds somewhat promising on paper — an ex-jailbird, Max Dugan (Jason Robards), after embezzling $600,000 from Las Vegas mobsters, shows up at his daughter's and grandson's home after having abandoned his daughter years before. With only months to live, he tries to make up for his negligence by buying them everything in sight.

But even the plot goes awry in this Simon sit-com. The prevailing message seems to be if you spend enough money, everything will turn out all right. The dramatic possibilities are wasted. Marsha Mason as Dugan's daughter has a few obligatory scenes where she tries to persuade Dugan to take his purchased presents back, but ultimately she is won over by his ability to buy.

There are also a couple of sub-plots which go absolutely nowhere. Donald Sutherland as a police detective is given almost nothing interesting to do in his efforts at dating Mason. His high point comes in a motorcycle chase scene which has nothing to do with the rest of the movie.

Mason's son is having trouble hitting on a Little League team. As a result, Dugan purchases the talent of Chicago White Sox hitting instructor, Charlie Lau. This provides the movie's finale when the boy finally hits the ball during a game.

Simon seems confused about what he wanted the movie to be about. Every time the movie has possibilities, he backs away and deals in more sub-plot.

The movie's best moments belong to Robards, but one must wonder how an actor of his caliber became involved in this disappointing Simon effort.

Reagan defense department budget suffers slash from Senate committee

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Budget Committee, in open defiance of President Reagan, voted 17-4 Thursday to slash his Pentagon buildup in half next year.

The panel's alternative grants the Defense Department an increase in spending authority of 5 percent after inflation for fiscal 1984, in contrast to Reagan's demand for a 10 percent hike.

Reagan's version was first rejected 19-2. An 8 percent option offered by Sen. John Tower, R-Texas., failed 14-7, before eight Republicans joined nine Democrats to adopt the 5 percent plan.

Immediately before the vote, Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., made it clear he blamed administration intransigence for the defeat.

"I think it's rather incredulous to say that you can't defend this country without a 10 percent increase, and there aren't any options," he declared.

Because of the nature of the Pengaon's long-term contracting, the vote would cut $3.3 billion from Reagan's budget for the year beginning Oct. 1, but the savings would total nearly $89 billion over five years.

It was the second highly visible budget defeat in a row for Reagan, who scored multiple successes in his first two years in office.

Late last month, the House of Representatives approved a Democratic-drafted budget that cut Reagan's defense buildup by even more, while calling for a $30 billion tax increase and restoration of $33 billion in cuts in social programs.

Republicans hold a 12-10 majority on the panel. Those voting against the 5 percent plan included Republicans Tower, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Steven Symms of Idaho and Charles Grassley, an Iowan who favors a spending freeze for defense.

Several Republicans who supported the 5 percent increase said they were doing so to apply pressure upon Reagan to compromise over his original $244.7 billion defense request for next year.

But "It is my view that the increases originally recommended by the president should be cut in half," said Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash.

"The only way to make them compromise is to vote," said Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind. He said he favors higher spending than the 5 percent increase mentioned by Gorton, but was willing to support that figure as a means of forcing Reagan's hand.

The 5 percent proposal provides average increases of that amount for each of the next five years. Committee officials say the effect is to stretch out the buildup Reagan wants, but still provide more than 90 percent of what the he is calling for over the five-year period.

Despite the jockeying in the committee, Reagan's spokesman told reporters, "I know of no change" in the president's position that has been relayed to the committee.

Chicago blacks accuse city of discrimination

Racial tension moves from streets to courtrooms

CHICAGO (AP) — On a steamy July afternoon in 1919, a black teen-ager floated beyond the imaginary line separating blacks and whites at a Lake Michigan beach. He drowned. Rumors had it he'd been pelted with stones. Riots began.

For four days blacks and whites battled in the streets. Thirty-eight people died and more than 500 were injured.

More than 50 years later, that division still is apparent in the nation's second largest city, as Rep. Harold Washington campaigns to become Chicago's first black mayor.

The American melting pot has been slow to boil in Chicago, where many ethnic neighborhoods are still starkly divided. Expressways, railroad tracks and street corners often separate blacks from whites. Some are called "racial frontier" streets, others "DMZ" areas.

"Chicago may well be the most segregated large city in the nation," says James Compton, head of the Chicago's Urban League.

Most blacks — who comprise 40 percent of the population — live among other blacks. Their children go to school with other black children.

"THERE'S NO SOUTHERN STATE where kids grow up as isolated as they do in Chicago," says Gary Orfield, a University of Chicago political science professor. "A typical (Chicago) black child is close to growing up in apartheid."

But in isolation, the black community has flourished in Chicago. It is a center of black culture and politics, base for the empire of Ebony magazine publisher John H. Johnson and the Rev. Jesse Jackson's Operation PUSH.

"In many ways Chicago has the strongest and most distinguished black community," says John McDermott, publisher of the newsletter, The Chicago Reporter.

Like others, McDermott is not convinced Chicago is a racially divided city without hope. "Chicago has serious race relations problems," he says, "... but by any rational standing, Chicago's made great progress in race relations."

"Are there repeated racial incidents going on from week to week? Baloney," says Ed Marciniak, a former director of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations. And he said the "most racially segregated" tag also has been put on Washington, D.C., Cleveland, Detroit and Gary, Ind.

The first wave of black jobseekers from the South hit Chicago during World War I. Most settled on the South Side, where Chicago's first black neighborhood developed block by block.

SIXTY-FIVE THOUSAND BLACKS came to Chicago between 1916 and 1918, and tensions grew, erupting on July 27, 1919, when Eugene Williams drifted into the wrong part of the 29th Street beach.

A governor's commission that studied the ensuing riot and its causes was the first to document the degree to which blacks had been excluded from the mainstream of Chicago life.

Jobs were hard to find, with a 1910 study showing 45 percent of working black men holding jobs as porters, servants, waiters and janitors.

In the 1920s, the Chicago Real Estate Board set a policy of not selling to blacks unless the property was in a black neighborhood, says Don Rose, political strategist and a former aide to Martin Luther King Jr.

A SECOND WAVE of black migration came during World War II, with nearly 100,000 new arrivals raising the black population to 350,000.

Each wave brought tension, as blacks moved into previously white areas, causing panic sales of housing.

Rose says 85 percent of blacks now live in areas that are 90 percent or more black.

Many say it was the 1950s and 1960s — the era of Mayor Richard J. Daley — when racial divisions were solidified by a massive public housing construction program.

Proposals to scatter the lowincome housing were killed by City Hall. Rose says the Chicago Housing Authority "steered blacks into black areas." Today, 85 percent of the 143,000 public housing residents are black.

Meanwhile, critics say a separate and unequal policy also evolved in the public schools, where overcrowding in the 1960s led to black students being placed on double shifts and later in mobile classrooms.

IN 1966, MARTIN LUTHER KING made Chicago the target of his first northern crusade. The late civil rights leader assailed Daley's style of "plantation politics," and during one march he was hit in the head with a brick.

King met with Daley, but, according to Marciniak, left Chicago in frustration.

Some blacks, Rose says, wanted blacks contained in a neighborhood. "It was their power base. They went along with it."

In recent years, Chicago's racial problems have moved from the streets to the courts. Suits filed by the U.S. Justice Department and civil rights groups accuse the city of racial discrimination in public schools, housing, parks, political districting and police hiring.

Only this week, the city and the American Civil Liberties Union reached a court-sponsored agreement to stop police officers from making harassment arrests of blacks and Hispanics.

Though the government has moved to make changes, some say many whites still are fearful — particularly with Washington's candidacy.

"People have a difficult time coming to terms with black consciousness," says Al Raby, Washington's campaign manager, a civil rights marcher and one-time aide to King. "People are concerned what was done over the years (to blacks) will now be done to them."

Black farmers' fate 'worsens' under federal loan program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Civil Rights Commission says black farmers have fared badly under federal loan programs operated by the Agriculture Department.

Commission chairman Clarence M. Pendleton Jr. made the charges last month in a letter to Agriculture Secretary John R. Block that was made public Thursday.

A year ago, the commission issued a report which said that the "unparalleled rate of loss" of farms owned and operated by blacks was 2½ times greater than the loss rate for white-operated farms over the past decade.

"A year later we are deeply concerned that the conditions highlighted in our report, rather than improving, actually have worsened," Pendleton wrote Block.

Loans to blacks by the department's Farmers Home Administration have declined steadily, minority employment by the agency has fallen despite increases in overall FmHA employment, and "civil rights enforcement has come to a virtual standstill," Pendleton wrote.

John Ochs, an aide to Block, said Thursday that a detailed response to Pendleton's letter was being prepared.

Last Aug. 16, in a response to the commission's report on the decline of black farming, Block said the commission failed to note the relatively small role played by FmHA in the total farm credit picture.

Tests on primates anger animal rights advocates

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Dr. Wallace Houser is planning to take the day off on April 24.

"I don't see why any of our people should be here," he said. "I plan to just stay away."

Even if he wants to, Houser may not be able to get into work that day. Animal rights advocates plan to have a crowd of thousands picketing outside his office at the University of Wisconsin's Primate Research Center.

People protesting campus use of live animals for scientific research will also be demonstrating at the University of California-Davis, Harvard and in Atlanta the same day, hoping to raise the stakes in their drive to control and end the research.

A COALITION OF 300 animal rights groups plans smaller rallies in other communities around the country.

The coalition is even supplying legal help for students who want to sue their schools for allowing vivisections or imposing pain on animals.

In Congress, coalition members have successfully persuaded the House to pass stiffer standards for campus animal research and have reasonable hopes of getting the more conservative Senate to approve them as well.

The protests and legislation represent a surfacing of the movement for animal rights, which until now has been content quietly working behind the scenes and making occasional, nighttime raids on labs to free animals held for experimentation.

In December raiders freed animals at Howard University and at California-Berkeley. Earlier in the fall they uncaged animals at Florida, Maryland and UCLA.

LAST SPRING THERE were similar raids at Penn and again at Maryland.

Now the coalition is attempting to shut down the seven government-funded primate research centers.

"The primate institutions aren't producing meaningful information to benefit humans," said John Hosum of the Seattle-area branch of the Progressive Animal Welfare Society.

"The whole thing is a sham, a waste of animal life and money," Hosum said.

The research "is not relevant to the human condition," said Wisconsin activist Sue Anderson. "The tie is tenuous at best."

The activists often push their case with emotional appeals. "There is a doctor in Cleveland who has produced a whole career out of chopping monkeys' heads off and sewing them on other monkeys," said Alex Pacheco of the Mobilization for Animals in Washington, D.C.

THE RESEARCHERS THEMSELVES readily concede their experiments may appear cruel sometimes, but assert they are necessary.

"I don't enjoy killing," said Dr. Vaughn Critchlow, head of the Oregon Regional Primate Center, which the coalition wants to shut down. "I don't think any of my colleagues enjoy killing or hurting animals, but we don't see an alternative. Working on animals is preferable to human health problems not being solved."

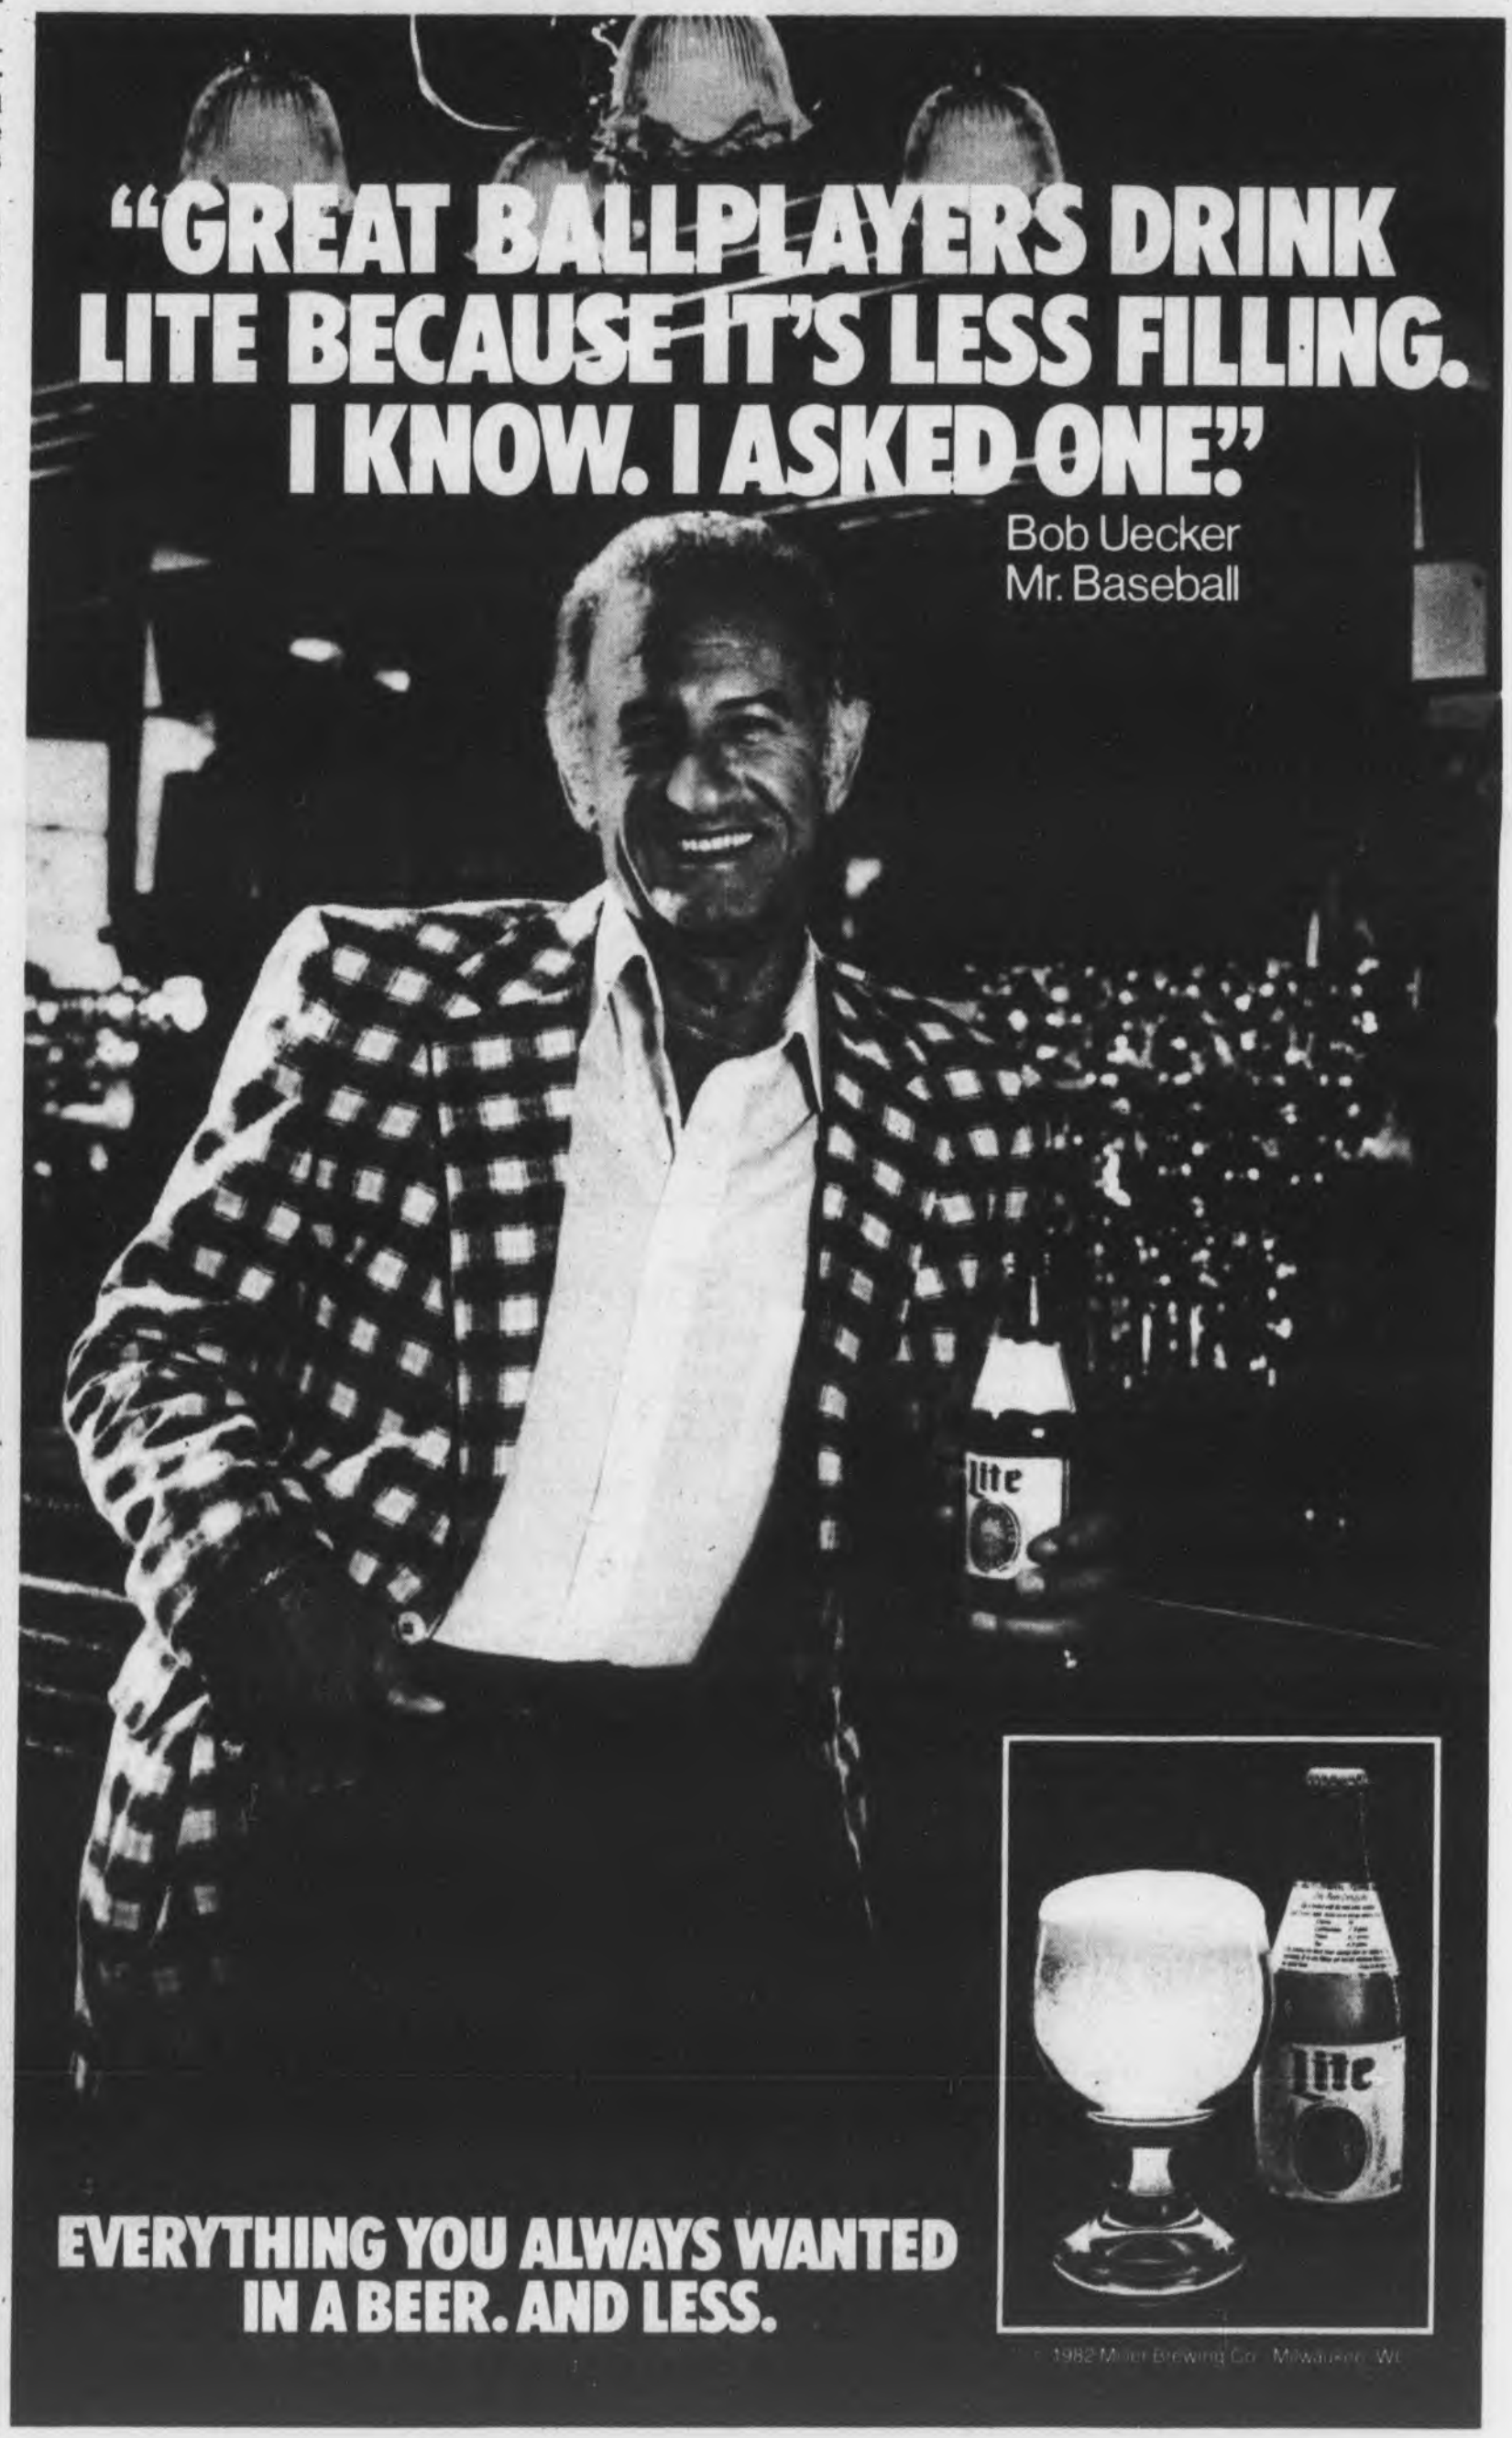
Nathaniel Pallone, head of research at Rutgers, said last spring, "We have a student here who just graduated from law school who learned to walk because of research we did here at the Institute for Animal Behavior. Was it worth it for him? You're damn right it was."

CRITCHLOW SAID, "MOST of our scientists are funded by highly competitive (National Institutes of Health) grants. These aren't given for mundane, mediocre research. This is a good measure of the kind of work we do."

Pacheco said he is unconvinced. "They always scream, 'If what we are doing wasn't worth anything, the government wouldn't be giving us so much money.' That's garbage."

He said the agency that awards the grants is "very inbred. When a researcher submits his (research) proposal, chances are he knows everyone on the panel on a first-name basis."

Dr. Leo Whitehair, director of the National Institutes of Health primate research program, said, "The people who come here are dedicated scientists who review (grant proposals) to promote their fields, not themselves."



Aim of the coalition, which draws from 14 countries besides the United States, is to get stiffer standards through Congress, cut funding for primate centers and place an animal rights advocate on the centers' boards before ultimately closing them down.

HOUSER SAID HE THINKS having an advocate on the board is "a good idea. The problem is whether or not that person is able to comment intelligently on research.

"It is right and proper that animals be treated humanely," he said. "What worries me is that some of these people may be anti-science."

Critchlow said he also worries that "they're not in a position to understand research, and they would just act as adversaries."

Houser said he thinks the primate centers wouldn't necessarily be harmed by more public scrutiny, as long as academic freedom was secured. "Academic freedom stops at which point animal begins," he said.

Students' art gains exposure through internship program

By LORI BERTELS
Staff Writer

Students in the art department not only work and compete for grades, but sometimes have a chance to have their art projects used commercially — on and off campus.

The number of student projects used commercially depends on the amount and type of artwork being done, which changes with the assignment schedule, according to David Harmes, assistant professor of graphic design.

People and businesses interested in using a student's artwork usually obtain information and contact students through art department references.

"The department really goes overboard for the students," Harmes said.

For this reason, the department has established an internship program on campus.

THE INTERNSHIP IS a "highlight or a complement to the student's last year of study" and gives the student a chance to "work directly with a commercial printer or graphic designer," Harmes said.

Some students have received internships with Hallmark Cards, Inc., in Kansas City, Mo., and the art division of Colorado State University in Fort Collins.

But because of out-of-state or area expenses, the department tries to obtain as many internships on campus as possible.

According to Harmes, art internships are available on campus through Extension Information Services, the Department of Continuing Education and Union Publicity.

Kay Young, director of Union Publicity, said there are four art students working for her.

THE STUDENTS ARE in control of graphic designs and illustrations and "under supervision they do super work," Young said.

Amy Whelan, senior in fine arts, is working as an intern for Union Publicity. She designed the "Pass It On" flyer used to remind freshmen about Student/Principal Conferences in February. She also designed a poster and brochure for the Women's Studies program as part of her internship.

Another way art students can gain exposure for their work is through a graphic design class called Matrix.

People from campus and the community submit requests for designs of logos and posters to the Matrix class and the students choose the projects they want to work on. When the work is completed, the clients select the design which best fits their needs.

THE WORK IS done without charge, "although sometimes the client covers the cost of the supplies used in creating their design," Doug Coonrod, senior in fine arts, said.

Students interested in enrolling in the Matrix class must submit a portfolio of art-

Tracksters seek warmer weather for home meet

The weather — it's definitely a concern for Steve Miller, head track coach, and the K-State track squads as they prepare to host a home meet Saturday at R.V. Christian Track.

"We want to run the meet at any cost, but we won't be able to if the weather is bad," Miller said.

The meet will be a non-scoring meet according to Miller. Field events are scheduled to start at 10 a.m. with running events at 10:30 a.m.

K-State, University of Kansas, University of Nebraska-Omaha, University of Nebraska, Central Missouri State, South Dakota State, Butler County Community College and Barton County Community Junior College are teams scheduled to participate in the men's competition.

The women's field includes K-State, Central Missouri State, Nebraska, KU and Barton County.

"The meet started as a dual meet between Nebraska and us," Miller said, "but because many meets have been called off in the Midwest, schools have called us asking to participate in our meet."

Miller said the prolonged winter weather was destroying some college track pro-

K-State rugby to begin post-season with local Heart of America tourney

K-State's rugby club will take its first step toward the national title this weekend when it is host to the Heart of America Rugby Tournament.

K-State is one of six teams that will be fighting for the right to go on to Texas for Step 2 of the quest for the national championship. The tournament consists of two divisions with three teams in each division. Each team will play the other teams in its division, with the winner receiving the right to advance.

Teams scheduled to compete are K-State, University of Missouri, Central Missouri State, University of Kansas and Emporia State University. Pittsburgh State, the other team scheduled to compete in the tournament, canceled out last Friday.

K-State's first game will be the B-team playing Emporia State at 11 a.m. Saturday. The A-team will play Central Missouri State at 3 p.m. Wildcat coach Mike Patten said he is unfamiliar with most of the other squads in the tourney.

"Because of lack of a good program, good organization or good planning, many of the collegiate teams have such a big turnover from semester to semester that it is hard to keep track of how good teams are," Patten said. "We have a better program, so we don't have as much change as some of these clubs."

K-State should be at full strength for the games this weekend as its players are healthy, Patten added.

"Playing in a tournament does not seem to bother the players like you think it should. I believe the fact that the preliminary round games are shorter does not wear the players down like a full game might," Patten said.

Preliminary round games will consist of two 30-minute halves while the championship game will be played for the full 40-minutes.

Patten said he is confident that K-State will win the right to advance to Texas.

"We ought to win it," he said. "Everyone is confident, but not too confident."

K-State, sporting a 3-1-1 record, is still the No. 1-ranked team in the western region. Other tournament teams are also in the western region. K-State has defeated each of these teams in the past year.

The club will sell T-shirts at the tournament, with the proceeds to cover tournament expenses, an after-tourney party for the clubs and the trip to Texas.

Barring rain, snow and sleet, the K-State baseball team will make another attempt to gets its season under way this weekend. The Wildcats are scheduled to play a doubleheader against Oklahoma State in Manhattan Saturday, their first games since they lost a twin-bill to league-leading Nebraska April 2.

The first game against the Cowboys is set for noon at Frank Myers Field. There is no admission charged to view the games.

The Wildcats, 0-2 in the conference and 16-7 overall, have 28 games remaining on the agenda before moving into the Big Eight Tournament in Oklahoma City on May 12-15.

ARCOSANTI WORKSHOP PROGRAMS 83

Arcosanti is a unique environment designed by Paolo Soleri intergrating living, learning and doing in the urban laboratory that is being constructed with the aid of volunteer labor in Arizona. The following five week workshops are offered for 1983.

CONSTRUCTION: Focus is on skills development from plan reading to finish work. Staff architects and skilled craftspeople guide participants in building.

AGRICULTURE: Arid lands agriculture using organic techniques: Greenhouse, field preparation, irrigation, biological pest control, harvest and solar dry herbs and vegetables from 10 acres of field crops, orchards and vines.

DATES: Construction/Agriculture run concurrently: June 6, July 11, August 15, September 12, October 10 and November 7.

The workshops are designed around a core curriculum explaining Soleri's concepts and the purpose for building Arcosanti.

Long Beach State's Pollard wins national Wade Trophy

NEW YORK (AP) — LaTaunya Pollard of Long Beach State University, the nation's leading scorer and a three-time All-American, was named Thursday as winner of the Wade Trophy, presented annually to the outstanding women's collegiate basketball player. K-State's Priscilla Gary was also a candidate for the award.

"This really means a lot to me," said Pollard, a 5-foot-11 senior guard from East Chicago, Ind. "This is what every woman basketball player in the country wants to win...it's the trophy they all want to achieve."

She finished the 1982-83 season with a 29.3 scoring average, including a school record 48 points against Marist. She also averaged 8.9 rebounds and 4.9 assists per game.

In her 127-game career at Long Beach State, in which the 49ers compiled a 102-25 record, won three consecutive Western Collegiate Athletic Association titles and finished second once, Pollard scored 30 or more points on 31 occasions and reached the 40-point mark four times.

"I think she proved that she is the best player in the country and I don't think we will see anyone as good as her for a long time," said Long Beach State Coach Joan Bonvicini.

"It always seemed like we had an unfair advantage against our opponents because with LaTaunya it was like you had six players on the floor," Bonvicini said.

With no women's professional league to play in, Pollard said she hopes to earn a berth on the United States team that will play in the Pan American Games at Caracas, Venezuela in August, then continue to stay in shape for the 1984 Olympic Games at Los Angeles.

She was a member of the 1980 Olympic team but never participated in the Summer Games in Moscow because of the United States boycott over the Soviet Union's military intervention in Afghanistan.

"It was a shame we had to boycott," Pollard lamented.

Still, she had to take time out from school for the trials, training and an international tour, and that set her back scholastically. Therefore, Pollard, a physical education major, still needs 24 credits for her degree, which she said she hopes to get by December.

Her plans after the '84 Olympics are to be an assistant coach at Long Beach State, then a head coach at the junior high school or high school level.

The Wade Trophy Medals Club, sponsored by Stayfree, also presented awards to three coaches. Linda Sharp, who guided the University of Southern California to the national championship and a 31-2 record, was named College Coach of the Year.

Darlene May of Cal State-Pomona, whose team finished at 29-3 and produced 20 straight victories, was chosen Small College Coach of the Year for the second straight season. And Penny Slagle, who led North Dakota-Williston to a 23-4 record, was selected Junior/Community College Coach of the Year.

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Larry Brown, who has led the New Jersey Nets to their first two winning seasons in the National Basketball Association, resigned Thursday to become the head basketball coach at the University of Kansas.

The 42-year-old Brown said he wanted to complete his second season as the Nets' coach, but will leave immediately at the urging of team owner Joe Taub.

Brown replaces Ted Owens, who was dismissed last month after 19 seasons as the Jayhawks' coach. Owens' 1982-83 club finished 13-16, the second straight losing season for the Jayhawks, who have the fourth winningest record in college basketball history.

KU officials offered the job to Brown on Thursday after Taub issued an ultimatum.

"I told him (Wednesday) night, the way the thing was handled was not fair to the organization and I told him he had to make a decision this afternoon — either stay with the Nets or resign to get the job in Kansas," Taub said from the Nets' East Rutherford offices.

Brown, who left as UCLA's coach in 1980 to take over the Nets, said he had not been offered the job until he called KU Athletic Director Monte Johnson Thursday.

"It was hard to say 'Yes' when it was finally given to me. If (KU officials) said they hadn't made a decision yet, I would've stayed," said Brown.

"To say we are pleased with Larry's decision would be an understatement," Johnson said in a prepared statement from Lawrence.

"We feel we kept with our main objective of hiring a coach with proven credentials and we feel fortunate to have Larry as our coach. Kansas has a tremendous basketball history and we are sure that Larry will add to it," Johnson said.

grams, but he believes it hasn't affected the Wildcats yet.

"South Dakota State has yet to open its outdoor season," Miller said.

He mentioned that K-State started well at the Arizona meet earlier in the season, but is temporarily halted.

"Nothing is more discouraging to an athlete than not being able to perform," he said.

Compared to last year at this time, Miller said, the team is "way ahead in performances but behind in training."

"Our athletes are better this year," he said. "We already have four national qualifiers (Donna King, Gregg Bartlett, Ray Hansen and Doug Lytle) when we didn't have any yet at this time last year."

Miller said he hopes to run into better weather April 16 when the track squads participate in the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla.

work to the two graphic design instructors. The instructors then select students who may enroll in the next semester's class based on the work submitted, Coonrod said.

Last year Coonrod designed a poster for the Purple Masque Theatre production of "A Dust Storm Wedding." He has also done illustrations for "Dimensions," the Collegian magazine, published twice each semester.

Coonrod's most recent work was designing a brochure cover and poster for Federally Employed Women, a group in Fort Riley.

Mary Nichols, speech instructor and general publicity manager for the speech department, said the Matrix class designed the four McCain show posters this year.

NICHOLS SAID THE work art students do for the speech department is "usually top quality and sometimes better than you'd find anywhere else."

Linda Clarke, senior in graphic design, designed the poster for the K-State Players' production of "Susannah" as part of her work in the Matrix class.

Clarke said she does "quite a bit" of freelance calligraphy for various people and organizations, including the track and football offices and the engineering department.

She worked as a graphic designer at Manhattan Christian College for two years and now, as a student, still does some promotional art work for the college.

Earlier this semester, representatives of Manhattan's Sunset Zoo came to the Matrix class and told students they needed an entry designed for the National Zoo and Aquarium Month poster competition. The winning poster would be shown in zoos across the country.

Patty Carey, senior in art, designed a poster which was selected in statewide judging. It then went to a final judging in Washington, D.C., and was selected in the top two entries.

But the judges "went with a professional," Carey said.

Carey's most recent work was a design for the new Summer Reading Program poster.

PERSONAL

SPEECH UNLIMITED: As you travel to Nationals, remember judges prefer small bills. Good luck. Darla. (131-133)

LITTLE PETEY—Your birthday weekend has just begun, screwdrivers for breakfast is only half the fun. From "Tie-one-on" to the big "2-0," we'll never let those memories go. So have yourself one helleva fling, 'cause in two weeks we'll be at it again. Love, McDougal Buddies. (133)

DETROIT TEDDY Bear—Thanks for the cookies. Congratulations on your nomination. Formally ready to party, are you? Signed, The One You Make Laugh. (133)

DELTA SIGS—Because she is in the motherly way, the exchanging of vows takes place today. Papa says "Now! I've got a gun." Too bad Delta Sig, you cannot run. The blessed event starts at 8, and this Polish wedding is sure to be . . . fantastic! (133)

ADPi's—Get excited for the function, it's sure to be a lot of fun. But really be up for Derby Week, because we know you're No. 1. Love, your Coaches and Dec-A-Sig. (133)

MARK MORTON: Happy 22nd to a super guy. The Signa Phi Nothings. (133)

CHI O's—Good morning, hope you all enjoyed the surprise breakfast. We just wanted to start your day off right and get you ready for the festivities this afternoon. The Pikes. (133)

BO: WHERE are the keys? Thanks for letting me watch Max. Don't forget the ballbats Saturday! Is it 1401 or 1999? Yees! LYLAS-Ro. (133)

KAP SIGS—Roger, Mark, Cary, Scott: Those long hours together have been worth every minute! Looking forward to more fun times with such great guys! But leave Jack D. and Jim B. at home! Chriss and Horny. (133)

CATHY—I'VE never met anyone that means so much to me. You're so sweet (and cute!) John. (133)

MEN OF Sigma Chi: We're ready to put on our togas white, we'll party this afternoon and into the night. We're really excited and won't be late, 'cuz we know this function will really be great. The A.D. Pi's. (133)

K-State alumni continues to be strong. Although I'm sure they have their own personal needs, they realize the real necessity for funding student scholarships," Cheryl Ahlberg, senior in elementary education and journalism and mass communications, said. She is an intern at the foundation.

The Telefund has provided many recent scholarships, so in a "roundabout way" the callers will benefit themselves, Carlin said.

"THIS BENEFITS the students most directly. It's neat to see students coming out for it. I've really enjoyed meeting the students and the student leaders," said Laura Butler, junior in computer science and accounting and overall student coordinator for the Telefund.

"There are so many people making this thing go. Not just two or three people, but many faculty members and students working together to reach a common goal," Ahlberg said.

Volunteers can win prizes for the most pledges more than $10 received in one night. Prizes will be given to the top four callers overall, for the most pledges topping $10 in a given night. Those prizes range from a home computer to a dinner for two. Carlin said telephone gift certificates will be awarded to the top caller per college. Nightly prizes to the top caller will be awarded as well.

First lady reprimands Watt

Dole soothes rejected Beach Boys with invitation for Kansas concert

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Secretary James Watt hurriedly replaced the capital's welcome mat for the Beach Boys on Thursday after being set straight by one of their favorite "California Girls." And when Nancy Reagan got done, the president himself put a heavy foot to him.

Reagan, it seems, is a fan of the surfin' sound as much as his wife. So after learning that Watt had banned the Beach Boys and other rock groups from the capital's July 4 celebration, he handed the Interior Secretary a stark reminder of what not to do any more.

A plaster of paris foot with a hole in it.

Watt, who earlier complained that "hard rock" music had attracted the "wrong element" to the traditional fireworks extravaganza on the Mall, proclaimed himself a likely fan of the Beach Boys, whose performances had drawn hundreds of thousands of people in years past.

"The president is a friend of the Beach Boys and he likes them, and I'm sure when I get to meet them I'll like them," Watt said, standing in a drizzling rain after emerging from the White House.

He said he still would go ahead with his decision to bring in Las Vegas crooner Wayne Newton for this year's main event. As for the Beach Boys, "We'll look forward to having them here to entertain us again, as soon as we can get that worked out."

Republicans do like rock'n'roll and to prove it Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., has invited the Watt-slighted Beach Boys to play in a Fourth of July concert in Kansas.

Dole was responding to Interior Secretary James Watt's announcement Wednesday replacing the Beach Boys with Wayne Newton for the Fourth of July Mall concert in Washington, D.C. Watt has since received cries of protest from Washington "backers" of the Beach Boys, one of which was Dole's.

Walt Riker, press secretary for Dole, said Dole believes Republicans in Washington were offended because Watt's remarks implied Republicans "didn't like rock'n'roll or the Beach Boys."

"The more he (Dole) heard, the more he felt if the Beach Boys weren't good enough to play in the Mall, they could play in Kansas," Riker said.

Dole staff members have contacted the band and it is "actively considering" the possibility of playing in Kansas. Concert profits would be given to charity, most likely Dole's favorite — the handicapped of Kansas.

However, an apology by Watt to the Beach Boys Thursday which included an invitation to play in the Capital another time and several other offers may steer the band away from Kansas. Riker said the Beach Boys are having a press conference today to respond to Watt's apology.

Where in Kansas the band would play won't be decided until, and if, it accepts the offer. The Beach Boys have presented concerts in several Kansas towns in the past.

"I admit I'm not a pop music critic, but I know from the unsolicited comments of my staff that the Beach Boys are not hazardous to your health," Dole said.

Riker, a former drummer, said Dole and the staff view the Beach Boys as an "American group that has said more about what it's like to be an American teen-ager than any other group."

Jordan backs out of Mideast peace negotiations

Reagan blames 'radical elements' for failure

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Sunday blamed "radical elements" in the Palestine Liberation Organization for Jordan's refusal to join the Middle East peace talks, but he said great progress has been made and he remains hopeful an agreement can be worked out.

As he arrived at the White House with Secretary of State George P. Shultz and their wives after a weekend at Camp David, Reagan told reporters he had just spoken by telephone to King Hussein of Jordan and King Fahd of Saudi Arabia and would be talking to other heads of state in the Middle East.

"Some radical elements of the PLO have introduced changes in the proposals that have been made and the policy we have been trying to follow with regard to Middle East peace," Reagan said as he disembarked from his helicopter to return to the White House. "Those changes are unacceptable to King Hussein; they're unacceptable to King Fahd; they're unacceptable to me."

But the president said he had already been in touch with Hussein and Fahd and "I am going to be in touch with other Arab leaders about this."

"We feel that the changes that were suggested would impede the efforts that we have been making toward negotiated peace in the Middle East," Reagan said, "peace for Israel, peace for all of the countries there."

But he said the moderate Arab leaders, apparently including Hussein and Fahd, are in agreement with the United States.

Hussein scrapped negotiations with Arafat Sunday for a joint approach toward talks with Israel. The Jordanian government said Hussein had decided his country would "neither act separately nor in lieu of anyone in Middle East peace negotiations."

King Hussein scraps negotiations with Arafat

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — King Hussein on Sunday scrapped negotiations with PLO chief Yasser Arafat for a joint approach toward talks with Israel and said he would not enter the talks independently, dealing a crippling setback to President Reagan's Middle East peace plan.

In statement issued by the government news agency Petra, Hussein announced that after several days of talks with the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, he decided his country would "neither act separately nor in lieu of anyone in Middle East peace negotiations."

Well-informed PLO sources, who declined to be identified, said Hussein was angry that Arafat had reneged on a tentative agreement to sign a joint communique that would have embraced the Reagan plan as a basis for negotiating with Israel.

The sources said the communique would also have carried an implicit recognition of the Jewish state.

Hussein's decision was a severe setback for the Reagan plan, which calls for Palestinian autonomy in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip in close association with Jordan.

The pan does not call for a Palestinian state or give the PLO any role in the peace process. But Reagan administration officials have been pressuring Hussein to enter into the Middle East peace process as a representative of the Palestinians.

Although Israel has rejected the Reagan plan, U.S. officials have said they believed the Israelis might compromise if Hussein and non-PLO Palestinians offered to negotiate in lieu of the guerrilla organization. Both the United States and Israel will not deal with the PLO directly.

The Jordanian news agency said Hussein and Arafat had worked out their ten-

Regents wrap up 1984 budgets for schools

TOPEKA (AP) — Here are the fiscal year 1984 budgets for Kansas Board of Regents schools under terms of a funding bill sent to Gov. John Carlin on Saturday.

The amounts in the bill do not include money for salary increases for faculty members or utility costs next year. Those issues will be funded in a separate bill worked during the wrap-up session later this month.

— Fort Hays State University, $22.8 million for this year; $23.4 million last year.

— Kansas State University, $138.8 million; $141.8 million.

— Kansas State Veterinary Medical Center, $6.7 million; $7.6 million.

— Emporia State University, $22.4 million; $23.4 million.

— Pittsburg State University, $20 million; $24.2 million.

— University of Kansas, $142.7 million; $146.8 million.

— Wichita State University, $55.7 million; $57.9 million.

— Kansas Technical Institue, $3.2 million; $3.2 million.

The Legislature must provide an additional $10 million if faculty salaries are increased by 4 percent next year. Also, lawmakers would add $21.8 million if they follow the governor's recommendation for funding utility costs.

World premiere headlines recital by K-State choir

By JOHN McGRATH
Collegian Reviewer

An internationally known composer must be selective when choosing a choir to debut one of his compositions. It makes sense to pick a choir with a good international reputation. The K-State Concert Choir has that reputation and Alun Hoddinott has acknowledged the fact, according to Rod Walker, associate professor of music.

Thus, the premiere performance of "The Growing Weight of Age" by Hoddinott was given by the K-State Concert Choir in its annual President's Concert Sunday night in McCain Auditorium.

The composer obviously approved of the performance, as he gave a solo standing ovation when the song was completed.

Walker, the choir's conductor, said Hoddinott, head of the music department at University College in Cardiff, Wales, thinks highly of K-State's choir.

BECAUSE HODDINOTT'S composition was sung in Latin, members of the audience were equipped with English translations. After listening and reading, the audience erupted in applause, including the standing ovation given by Hoddinott.

The concert began with classical music, featuring pieces from composers Knut Nystedt and G.P. Palestrina. "Forever Worthy Is the Lamb" by P.I. Tchaikovsky was given a strong applause by a sparsely populated McCain audience.

After an intermission, the choir sang the rhythmic piece, "From an Unknown Past," by Ned Rorem. Then came spiritual hymns featuring "Gospel Traveling," which was arranged by Mark Hayes especially for the concert choir.

The performance, given every year in honor of President Duane Acker and his wife, was praised by Acker as a delight to attend. "We consider it a climax event of the

'If you've got the time, we've got the hall'

After three days of cloudy skies and drizzle, the weather cleared to the benefit of opening day activities for this year's Spring Fling, which included a kite raising contest, scavenger hunt and a road rally.

The theme of the 17th annual Spring Fling is "If You've Got the Time, We've Got the Hall." It is sponsored by K-State's Association of Residence Halls and open to all hall residents.

The event allows each hall to express its individuality, but they are also brought together as one group, Sharon Miller, junior in pre-law and Spring Fling co-chairman, said.

Other events occurring this week are a scholarship banquet, leadership banquet, movies, dances, a beer brunch Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon, and Casino Night and dance Wednesday night. The week ends with a picnic Sunday at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

The week's highlight is the bed race at 12:30 p.m. Saturday.

"The bed race is the big thing," Miller said. "There's a slight chance of "Real People" or "PM Magazine" being there.

"We want to encourage people to get involved," Miller said. "The uniqueness of Spring Fling is that it is planned by residents for the residents. The activities are ones that residents wanted or expressed an interest in."

Manhattan merchants have been helpful, Miller said, with discounts available to students wearing Spring Fling buttons or T-shirts.

West Hall placed first in the women's division of the kite raising contest; Marlatt Hall placed first in the men's division and Moore Hall finished first in the co-ed division.

Goodnow Hall placed first in the scavenger hunt, with Putnam Hall finishing second and Ford Hall third.

tative agreement last week. Arafat flew to Kuwait to gain support of other PLO and Arab leaders and was supposed to return in two days.

"A delegate was sent by the PLO executive committee chairman to Amman, to convey to us new ideas, and to propose a new course of action that differed from our agreement and that did not give priority to saving the land," the statement said.

"In the light of this, it became evident that we cannot proceed with the course of political action which we had planned together, and to which we had agreed in principle and in detail," it said.

Beach Boys want to let bygones be bygones

WASHINGTON — The Beach Boys, saying they want to let bygones be bygones with Interior Secretary James Watt, announced Sunday they will play in Washington at a concert blending their American surfin' sound with the international sport of soccer.

"We've had fun with this whole thing with Mr. Watt, let's put it behind us," Beach Boy Bruce Johnston said at a news conference detailing plans for the June 12 concert at Robert F. Kennedy Stadium.

Unlike the Beach Boys' last two appearances in the nation's capital, when they headlined before hundreds of thousands at free July 4 concerts on the Mall in 1980 and 1981, this appearance will carry an admission charge.

They are being double-billed with Team America, the new Washington entry in the North American Soccer League. Fans purchasing tickets for the game in the 55,000-seat stadium against the Fort Lauderdale (Fla.) Strikers will see the Beach Boys afterward.

Rolls-Royce drops prices for U.S. buyers

LYNDHURST, N.J. — Rolls-Royce Motors Inc. on Sunday dropped the prices of both its models sold in the United States, one to less than six figures.

The price of the Silver Spirit was cut to $93,000, down $18,000 — more than the sticker prices of three Ford Escorts. The price of a Silver Spur, Rolls Royce's long wheelbase model, was reduced from $119,000 to $103,000.

The reductions were caused by a weaker English pound compared with the U.S. dollar, said Reg Abbiss, the spokesman for the company's United States subsidiary.

"Bringing the car (the Silver Spirit) down to $93,000, apart from handing back some of the exchange rate, we've become more competitive with other cars," Abbiss said Sunday.

About 1,000 Rolls are sold in the United States annually at 70 dealerships, Abbis said.

Alabama leaders urge calm after shooting

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — City leaders urged calm Sunday night, a day after a white plainclothes police officer shot a fleeing black man, prompting a crowd of angry blacks to throw rocks, bottles and bricks at police cars.

The black leaders also called for a federal investigation of the Saturday night shooting of Bobby Joe Sales, 23, of Montgomery. He was in fair condition Sunday in the intensive care unit of Baptist Medical Center, hospital spokesman Dale Brown said.

Investigator Ralph A. Conner shot Sales once in the lower back at about 11:35 p.m. Saturday, police Chief Charles Swindall said. The shooting occurred in a predominantly black area on the edge of downtown Montgomery.

State Rep. Alvin Holmes, who is black, said Sunday he determined after talking with relatives and friends of the wounded man that Sales "was just walking down the street" when confronted by the officers.

But Holmes urged calm, a plea that was echoed by Albert Sankey, a county leader of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Carol Burnett awards $2,000 to journalists

HONOLULU — Actress Carol Burnett, who won an $800,000 libel judgment against the National Enquirer two years ago, presented $2,000 in prizes to beginning journalists for research papers on ethical issues in journalism.

The awards, presented Friday to eight University of Hawaii journalism students, are made annually from the Carol Burnett Fund for Responsible Journalism, established with a $100,000 endowment from Burnett at the university's journalism department in 1981.

That year, Burnett was awarded a $1.6 million libel judgment against the National Enquirer. The award was later reduced to $800,000. The Enquirer is appealing the judgment.

Student killed as waves swamp crew boats

DURHAM, N.H. — Waves whipped by gusting winds swamped crew boats from the University of New Hampshire on Sunday, killing one student and tossing more than 50 others into the chill waters of Great Bay, authorities said.

Eleven people were treated at hospitals, including one man, identified as Dan Carr, who was being held for observation and treatment of hypothermia, a severe lowering of body temperature. Spokesman Charles Thayer at Exeter Hospital said Carr was "out of danger."

Two other students were being held overnight at the campus infirmary, university official John Hose said.

Six of the eight boats, called shells, were swamped in the rough waters at 11 a.m., Hose said. Fifty-four people were picked up by boat and other students swam ashore, complicating attempts to get a final figure on the number of people who ended up in the water, Hose said.

Zoning law abuse hinders all cities

An enterprise zone bill, passed by the Kansas Legislature last year, was amended by the Senate on Thursday because a dozen cities — including Manhattan — abused its intention and qualified entire cities for the tax credits it offered.

The new bill bans cities from qualifying entire territories as enterprise zones, proving the intention of last year's bill was aimed at providing for the rebuilding of depressed inner-city areas through tax credits, not entire cities.

While some blame can be placed on the apparent vagueness of last year's bill, it did not warrant the interpretation to include a whole city becoming an enterprise zone — a clear abuse of the bill's intentions.

Now, to prevent any other cities from designating their entire area as an enterprise zone, the Senate has been forced to make limitations on the percentage of a city which can qualify for tax credits offered through the state program. The new bill also requires all cities already declared as enterprise zones be re-approved.

But at whose expense? Areas eligible for an enterprise zone will now have to be carefully reconsidered — at the taxpayers' time and expense.

It's the attitude of these dozen cities — their "looking out for No. 1" viewpoint — which adds to the state's budgetary increase. Under their liberal application, many unqualified people would have been granted tax credits.

In the long run, the cities' little acts of greed will be counterproductive. A city's ability to secure future state financing — an already difficult task — will prove to be an even more insurmountable.

Funding for the 1380s

Editor,
I would like to express my gratitude to the members of the Kansas Senate for the bounty they have bestowed upon us in appropriating $150,000 to make K-State a high-tech "center of excellence."

This princely sum will enable us to look forward to the day when K-State is the most excellent state university in southeastern Riley County. If it is targeted at selected areas, it would, for example, allow our physics department to maintain its position of world leadership in phlogiston research, our physiology department to study black and yellow bile and leeches, our astronomers to figure out how vortices cause the sun to revolve around the earth, our psychologists to study noxious effluvium and our electrical engineering department to lay in a new supply of cat's fur and voltaic cells.

Alternately, this largesse could be provided with $150 to purchase one of those cute little yellow word processors with an eraser on the end, a package of carbon paper to help disseminate all the knowledge about to be discovered and a green eyeshade. In either case, our students will be well-prepared to face the challenges of the '80s — the 1380s.

Behind the scenes

Have you ever wondered how the stories in the Collegian got there? Who wrote them? Who wrote the headline? Just in case you have, you might want to read this column for the answers. If you haven't given a second thought to the Collegian (except as something to read in boring classes), then skip it. It's here FYI (for your information). You know those deals Hal Linden does every afternoon between soap operas? Well, this is a little along those lines.

Some of it you've probably heard before and some of it you haven't. It may not make any lasting impressions on you and it sure isn't going to change your life, but it may make a difference the next time you're reading the Collegian and find yourself scowling or rushing to your desk to write a letter to the editor.

This brings up my first FYI topic: the Opinions page. The Opinions page is used to raise questions on current issues, which are voiced through editorials, letters to the editor and columns (like the one you're reading now). Letters to the editor are means of voicing readers' opinions, just as the Collegian staff is doing in editorials.

OK, how about bylines. They come just under the headlines and before the article. They identify the writer of the article and the writer's position with the Collegian. The use of bylines is determined by the length of the story, with a 10-inch minimum length required to earn a byline.

Most stories are written by students taking Reporting 2, who are called (surprise!) Collegian Reporters. R2s are required to write a specified amount of copy (stories) per semester for publication.

KEEP IN MIND the story you're reading could be the first in a journalist's career. R2s are sent to the news editors during the first week of classes, given a story assignment and they're on their own. They are learning how to write news stories, just as you are doing in your class projects or practicums — but yours aren't displayed for the whole world to read.

Staff writers also submit copy. These are paid positions (although your 10-year-old sister probably makes more money babysitting each month) which are open to anyone. Unlike the R2s, staff writers are not required to write a minimum number of inches, but are paid on the basis of how much they write.

There are 11 desk editors who are paid a monthly salary. They are assigned to cover various areas of news; for example, news desk, features desk, sports desk, and government desk. Desk editors' responsibilities include editing copy written by reporters and staff writers. Some write headlines. (The writer of the story does not write the headline).

Students enrolled in Editing 2 are required to put in six hours each week writing headlines and editing stories before they are passed on to desk editors. This is done in order to lighten the editors' load and to give the students practical experience in news editing. E2s also type in stories coming in from the R2s.

After the stories get headlines and leave the desks, they go to one of two copy editors who again check for errors. This isn't the last stop, though. Every story that goes into print is reviewed by the Collegian editor, who is also a full-time student. (How would you like to do that much editing every day?)

ALL COPY goes to one of two managing editors who are responsible for the design of the pages and the size of the headlines. They are the ones who actually fit the stories on the page in the space allowed. The editor has the final say on placement of news stories.

The editors are responsible for determining what is and isn't reported. This may sound easy, but it can turn into a real problem. For instance, the Landon Lecture by Sheikh Yamani — how would you cover it? Do you focus on the disturbance? Do you play it down and focus on the speech? Do you report the side of the people that caused the disturbance?

The decisions, sometimes with more far-reaching implications than others, are made by the editors. There is no censoring whatsoever by faculty or administration, although an adviser is available for advice if needed.

Finally, I'd like to stress that the Collegian is a learning tool. Its staff members are not professionals. There are mistakes made in the Collegian just as there are mistakes in any profession, but these errors are more apparent because the newspaper is constantly before the public eye.

So the next time a reporter calls upon you for information, don't assume that you are going to be subjected to some illiterate who's trying to dig up a scandal. It's just your average, run-of-the-mill student who happens to be interested in journalism and who has a deadline to meet.

The flip side of learning

Remember those classes you just despised because the teacher was just "rotten"? I'd like to propose this question to you: What did you do about it? I've sat through many classes I've hated and my problem is exactly that — I just sat. One day, I decided I wasn't going to sit anymore, I was going to change things. But how? Where should I begin?

The first step is to analyze yourself. Do you feel a teacher is bad because of personal conflicts? Look at yourself. How is your attitude? Are you actually going to class and putting a 100 percent effort into your class time? Are you trying with a conscious effort to grasp what the teacher is saying? Or, is your mind wandering to "TGIF" — and it's only Monday?

If the teacher is coming to class prepared to lecture to you, don't you think you should be "on the flip side of the coin" — willing to listen and learn something new? After all, learning is two-sided. Don't expect a teacher to lecture to you straight in the eye, pounding material into you — that's just not the teacher's job.

TRY, JUST ONCE, to "eat up" what he says — it may surprise you how much you learn. The dreaded 50 minutes or so will "fly" each time you have class. Suddenly, the material actually seems interesting. You have to want to learn and be open-minded to new ideas. That's what being educated is all about.

Now, I'd be the first to agree that not all teachers are good, but if you are the only one in the class who feels that way, maybe it's you that needs to change.

When you have truly made an honest effort to sit and learn and the teacher just doesn't seem to get through to you, then what do you do? Drop out? Wouldn't we all be in trouble if that was the answer!

The next step is to see your instructor on a personal basis: one-to-one. After all, that's why they post office hours. That's for you, to help you. Whether the problem deals with homework or a personal conflict, such as a distraction the teacher has when lecturing, that instructor's door is open to see you, the student. So use it. It's to your best advantage.

I HAVE FOUND so many times it is much easier and clearer to communicate on a one-to-one basis than sitting in a class numbering anywhere from 30 to 300 students. Believe me — it's helped! Not only do I get things explained directly to me, but I get the teacher on my side. I always get the benefit of the doubt. Try it — you'll like it, because it really does work.

Don't just "blow off" being confused — straighten it out with your teacher. Sometimes it takes one visit, sometimes it takes a weekly visit. Whatever the case may be, use it — you've paid for it.

By this step, most problems are solved and you need to go no further. But, just in case it isn't, go straight to the "top." See the department head. Explain the problem you have with your teacher. This probably won't get immediate results, but at least it's "on the record."

If several people go in and complain about the same teacher and similar problems, then the department head will probably "look into it."

Now, you've got things stirred up and the problem is basically out of your hands. But, don't give up completely. Keep tabs on what steps have been taken. Watch your influence take charge. The department heads decide whether or not a teacher gets promoted or "booted." What do you want to happen? Voice your opinion.

Research firm predicts improved economy, says OPEC price cut will assist consumers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The recent cut in oil prices by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will save American consumers $22 billion a year and help spur economic recovery, an energy research firm predicted Sunday.

Cambridge Energy Research Associates said OPEC's $5-a-barrel price cut will save consumers as much money annually as the first two years of President Reagan's tax cuts.

The surge in spending money that consumers will get from lower energy bills should "help strengthen what so far appears to be a fragile and uncertain recovery," the private energy research firm said in a new report.

"As important as the transfer of income is the boost of confidence that falling oil prices should bring to consumers after years of feeling victimized by rising energy prices," said Robert Dohner, an economics professor at Tufts University and author of the report.

But Dohner said that, contrary to current thinking, the OPEC price cuts will have little impact on long-term interest rates, the major stumbling block to sustained economic recovery.

Among the American industries most helped by falling energy prices will be airlines, since 30 percent of their operating expenses are fuel costs, the study said. A $5-a-barrel price drop should translate into savings of $1 billion annually, with much of that passed on to passengers in reduced ticket prices, the study predicted.

Other winners include the pulp and paper industry, which could save $200 million annually in fuel costs, and chemical companies, truckers and recreational van manufacturers, the report said.

The biggest loser will be the oil and gas industry, particularly the smaller independent companies and drilling equipment supply firms, but the report said the impact will be softened as the general economic recovery improves demand for natural gas.

The report warned that further sharp drops from the current $29-a-barrel level for OPEC oil could have "tumultuous effects" on the world economy.

"A much deeper drop, to the range of $20 a barrel, could seriously threaten the financial system and potentially undermine a great deal of investment made since 1979 to adjust to the unstable world oil market," the study said.

Dohner said a collapse in oil prices now would most certainly lead to sharp price rises down the road.

PLO coordinator assassinated in Portugal

ALBUFEIRA, Portugal (AP) — A leading PLO advocate of reconciliation with Israel was assassinated Sunday by a gunman who pumped five bullets into his head and chest at point-blank range in a crowded hotel lobby and escaped under police gunfire.

Issam Sartawi, the Palestine Liberation Organization's European coordinator, collapsed in a pool of blood by the hotel reception desk. Police said he died instantly and that an aide suffered a thigh wound in the attack.

Sartawi was representing the PLO at the 16th Socialist International, a conference of socialist politicians held in this coastal resort.

Witnesses said bystanders screamed in panic as the gunman, dressed in a light suit, walked up to Sartawi, shot him and ran out of the hotel waving a pistol.

In Damascus, Syria, a fanatic PLO splinter group blamed for several attacks on moderate Palestinians claimed responsibility for the killing, saying Sartawi had tried to sell out the Palestinian cause.

"It is our pleasure to communicate to you our success in implementing the death sentence towards a criminal and a traitor," said a statement by the Revolutionary Council of the Fatah. The faction is led by Abu Nidal, a PLO renegade.

On the Israeli-occupied West Bank, where Sartawi was born, Palestinian newspaper editor Ziad Abu-Ziad said, "He was one of the best Palestinian minds."

The 47-year-old, U.S.-educated cardiologist was a key figure in contacts between Israelis and the PLO. He helped set up a four-hour meeting in January between PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and three Israeli leftists.

Sartawi also reportedly worked to arrange swaps of Israeli and Palestinian prisoners from last June's Israeli invasion of Lebanon.

Sartawi joined the PLO after the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. He was a leader of al-Fatah, Arafat's guerrilla organization, but later formed his own Action Committee for the Liberation of Palestine.

Ben Hur would have fit in well Friday as participants braved the elements in the 20th running of the Lambda Chi Alpha Chariot Relays in West Stadium.

The relays pit four representatives of a fraternity pulling a sorority representative in a relay-type race against other fraternities.

Winners for the second year in a row were the Tau Kappa Epsilon team of Matt McMillen, sophomore in general business administration, David Taylor, senior in management, David Lile, senior in mechanical engineering, and John Blasi, sophomore in electrical engineering, pulling Debbie Daveline, freshman in business administration, of Kappa Kappa Gamma.

Second place went to the Beta Theta Pi fraternity who pulled Susan Hey, freshman in electrical engineering, of Alpha Chi Omega. Delta Tau Delta and their Delta Delta Delta rider, Stephanie Berland, freshman in architectural engineering, rolled in third.

Two $150 scholarships, awarded through applications submitted to a scholarship committee within the Lambda Chi house, were awarded to Frank Gunn, sophomore in accounting, of Beta Theta Pi and Lisa Scheuerman, sophomore in pre-med, of Delta Delta Delta.

Tonnie Thurow, sophomore in pre-law, of Kappa Kappa Gamma was crowned the Chariot Relay queen on the basis of an essay competition between representatives of each sorority.

Modern lifestyle threatens Rome's monuments

Pollution, traffic may destroy the 'Eternal City'

ROME (AP) — Marcus Aurelius is gone. The Pantheon is closed. Everywhere arches, columns and buildings are concealed behind protective cages.

What the Vandals and the Goths failed to do, the ravages of pollution and rumbling traffic are accomplishing — the destruction of the Eternal City.

The unavailability of some of the city's greatest monuments is a major disappointment greeting tourists now pouring into Rome for the 1983 extraordinary Holy Year of Redemption. Pope John Paul II proclaimed the Holy Year to commemorate the 1,950th anniversary of the crucifixion of Jesus.

And part of the problem is that attempted cures often conflict with the needs of this bustling capital city of 3 million.

For example, the government banned traffic around several monuments, but the rules are often ignored by drivers trapped in the resulting congestion. Merchants at the bottom of the Spanish Steps have flooded the Communist-led city government with protests claiming their business has dropped by more than 20 percent since the square was closed in January.

"Many of our customers are American and Japanese tourists and they don't know how to reach our store now that buses are banned from the area," said Paolo D'Arpini, spokesman for fashion leader Gucci on Via Condotti. "They should at least allow tourist and city buses and taxis into Piazza di Spagna."

THE CITY HAS ERECTED SCAFFOLDING and protective green cloth around some of the city's most famous sights, including the arches of Constantine and Septimius Severus, Trajan's Column and the columns of the Temple of Saturn at the Roman Forum.

While the coverings slow deterioration from wind and rain, they hide the beauty of the artwork.

Nor do they stop the real culprit — acid rain, the combination of sulfur from auto exhaust and rain into a mild sulfuric acid that eats away at marble and bronze.

Some experts predict that the coverings, which first started going up in 1980, may have to remain in place for as long as 20 years until Rome finds the money and the technology for permanent restoration.

Adriano La Regina, the city superintendent of archaeology, hopes they can come down in five years but says the city must come up with a permanent solution soon or risk losing its national heritage.

"If one does not impede what is causing the damage ... the restoration operation will be totally in vain in only a short time," he said.

In some cases drastic measures were necessary. The equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius was removed in 1981 from the center of the Campidoglio Square and moved to a restoration institute for a long, slow treatment of its pollution-caused "bronze disease."

THE 1,800-YEAR-OLD BRONZE, an ancient symbol of Rome's eternity, for more than four centuries provided one of the most stunning sights in the city for tourists climbing the sloped stairway to the broad piazza designed by Michelangelo.

The latest victim is the Pantheon, considered one of the best preserved monuments of imperial Rome and one of the city's most popular tourist attractions.

City officials locked its massive bronze doors last month after a German tourist was injured by a falling piece of masonry.

Giovanni Di Geso, superintendent of monuments, said it will stay closed until officials are sure it is safe, which could be weeks or months.

The towering domed structure has survived numerous renovations and sackings since it was built in 27 B.C. by Agrippa to commemorate Augustus' victory at Actium over Antony and Cleopatra.

But the burial site for Italy's kings — completely rebuilt by the Emperor Hadrian around 120 — has suffered more than 150 chips and cracks since the 1979 earthquake, some in areas recently restored, according to Di Geso's office.

The city asked the national government for at least $1.4 million to study the Pantheon's problems, but the request was rejected.

PARLIAMENT HAS APPROVED a special $117 million fund for monuments, but Rome has been blocked in an ambitious plan to use the money to create an "archaeological park" in the center of imperial Rome.

The plan called for excavations to demolish the wide tree-lined Via dei Fori Imperiali, one of Rome's busiest thoroughfares that runs in a straight line between the Piazza Venezia and the Colosseum through the heart of the Roman ruins.

But Culture Minister Nicola Vernola, a Christian Democrat, vetoed the plan last month because he said the funds were earmarked for restoration and not excavations.

City officials responded by proposing that the monuments be protected with see-through coverings, athough they did not know where the money would come from to pay for such coverings.

Nuclear freeze is common sense, Soviet citizens say in interview

MOSCOW (AP) — Mud, not missiles, troubles Muscovites in this month of downpours. But, just as in Dubuque or Dusseldorf, the mention of a "nuclear freeze" can draw a quick nod from the ordinary Russian.

"Of course, it's the best idea, this freeze," said Yevgeny Dimitrovich, a carpenter who leisurely window-shopped with his wife on Kutusovsky Prospekt. "More bombs won't help either you or us."

The comment was typical among people questioned by an American reporter in central Moscow.

The Soviet population is bombarded each day with reports and commentaries on the complexities of the U.S.-Soviet missile deadlock.

Some grasp the details. Young radio technician Vitaly Shakov, for example, recited the Kremlin line on the issue of medium-range missiles in Europe: President Reagan's call for a cutback in Soviet rockets would mean "one-sided disarmament" by the Soviets, and U.S. aircraft should be counted in the nuclear equation.

But other Muscovites were as unfamiliar with the intricacies of warheads, throw-weights and first strikes as are most Americans.

Instead, in the spring thaw, they are preoccupied with maneuvering through the mud and with angling a good assignment in next Saturday's "subbotnik," the annual spring cleanup when everyone volunteers a day's work as streetsweeper, trash-hauler or seedplanter.

Questions about the arms race still could turn Muscovites talkative. There are two things they said they were sure of: the "goodness" of the American people, and the "common sense" of a nuclear freeze.

"Ordinary Americans are a sympathetic people, a good nation," said Shakov, 26. "... We have the same skies over us."

Shakov and the others interviewed through an interpreter knew about the U.S. nuclear freeze movement, and said they liked it.

"I think it is a very, very reasonable idea," Irina Kovalenko said. "It's only common sense. And then in the future I think they should destroy all the weapons."

Electrical worker Yuri Smirnov, 43, said he was convinced a freeze would work: "We in the Soviet Union for a long time have been talking about stopping the arms race."

As they often do in explaining their views to Americans, older Soviets recalled World War II, when 20 million Soviet civilians and soldiers lost their lives repelling the Nazi invaders.

Disease-resistant wheat seeds hit the market

By KELLEY MEYER
Collegian Reporter

A new early maturing, disease-resistant, semi-dwarf wheat variety has been released by the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station in Hays.

According to T. Joe Martin, wheat breeder and developer of the new variety, the release was made last summer to the state's registered seed growers.

This year is the first year Arkan seed is on sale to growers in general, he said.

"There will be 90,000 to 100,000 bushels of seed available for planting in the fall for the 1984 wheat crop," Martin said.

Arkan wheat will have great value to Kansas agriculture, Dean of Agriculture John Dunbar said. Although there is no accurate value figure placed on commercial production yet, he said, "there's no question that it will be worth millions of dollars each year to Kansas farmers and the Kansas economy.

"The release of Arkan as a new wheat variety is just one more step in our continuous struggle to develop wheat which is high yielding, high in protein, high in quality, disease resistant, stress resistant and other things which improve profitability for farmers," Dunbar said.

ARKAN IS the next logical step in wheat breeding following development of Newton wheat, Dunbar said.

Newton was released by the Ag Experiment Station in 1977 and rapidly became the most popular variety in Kansas. It composed 41 percent of the state's wheat acreage in 1982.

The new variety has several advantages over Newton wheat.

"It produces about 1 percent more grain protein than Newton and yields as much as Newton in its area of adaptation," Martin said in the K-Stater magazine. In addition, Arkan is resistant to the Hessian fly, unlike Newton.

Pointing out other benefits of Arkan, Martin noted it is resistant to a number of pests and diseases, including soil-borne wheat mosaic virus, leaf rust, Cephalosporium leaf stripe, stem rust, Septoria leaf blotch and powdery mildew.

"Arkan represents a better level of stability in its product primarily due to these resistant factors," Martin said.

THE NEW VARIETY has superior winter hardiness and represents the first semi-dwarf wheat variety that has emergence capabilities equal to the old standard-height wheat, Martin said.

Emergence capability means the ability of the seed to emerge above ground. Most semi-dwarf wheats have a short coleoptile (first seedling leaf), necessitating shallower planting. Arkan wheat has a long coleoptile, allowing for deeper planting, Martin explained.

"The wheat performance in yield per acre is increased because of its particular disease resistance," Martin said. "We believe Arkan will improve the overall protein picture of the wheat in Kansas."

FROM THE QUALITY standpoint, Martin said Arkan is more useful to millers and bakers since it has an extra protein percentage and a higher flour yield.

Members of the Manhattan Wheat Quality Council, consisting of bread-stuff industries which cooperate in end-use (flour) studies of new wheat varieties prior to their release, said Arkan may be the answer to what producers are looking for, according to Tom Roberts, executive vice president.

"We have tested the Arkan variety and found it to be comparable or better than varieties that exist today in end-use properties," Roberts said. "Arkan is something both industry and producer can be satisfied with — it serves both purposes in testing capabilities."

According to Dunbar, consumers can also expect a change from the impact of Arkan.

"CONSUMERS WILL benefit directly from the increase in protein content, which will also help make Kansas wheat more

Team wins first place in national contest with marketing plan for agricultural product

By ANDY OSTMEYER
Staff Writer

In their first year of competition, members of the K-State division of the National Agri-Marketing Association (NAMA) placed first in a national contest in Washington, D.C.

The contest involved developing a marketing strategy for an agricultural product. The marketing strategy included defining the product, defining the target audience, planning the advertising strategy and managing finances.

The product which the group chose to market was a corn head attachment designed to pick up fallen corn missed by the conventional harvester, John Riley, associate professor of economics and co-adviser of the chapter, said.

The design for the corn harvesting attachment was developed by the agricultural engineering department and won first place in design competition at Chicago last winter.

"The product is in the hands of the KSU Foundation," Riley said, adding that some companies may be interested, but whether the product will actually be marketed is uncertain.

The products marketed by the 19 competing groups at the Washington contest varied considerably and included a cucumber harvester, a square bailer and a catfish harvester.

NAMA is divided into 25 professional chapters which sponsor student groups. Mo-Kan is the Missouri-Kansas chapter which helped fund the trip.

"We started working on this thing last fall," Riley said. More than 2,000 hours went into preparing for the 20-minute presentation.

Golden Retriever was the name the group gave to the corn head attachment. Golden Industry was the name of the company created by the 11 members who worked on the project. Only nine of the 11 went to Washington.

K-State won the first division of the competition and went into the finals.

"They indeed went into this thing as a team and won as a team," Riley said.

He said the group entered the competition with the belief that if they won the first round of competition, they had been a success.

"We felt we had a pretty good chance of winning our heat," said Ed McQueen, graduate in agricultural economics and president of the local chapter. "We didn't expect to take first the first time."

According to Jeanette Jones, junior in agricultural journalism, it wasn't until the K-State group had won that members realized all the hard work had really paid off. Jones said she believed the group worked harder than other groups because it was K-State's first competition.

Immediately after the group found out it had won first place in its division, members had to start getting ready for the final competition.

'Alice in Wonderland' blossoms in ragtime

By TANYA BRANSON
Arts and Entertainment Editor

On your toes Alice, Wonderland has changed. Though the White Rabbit is still hoppity-nervous and the Doormouse still struggles to stay lively, Wonderland has gone the ways of the 20th century.

For K-State's dance division, Wonderland turned into Wonder Bar Friday night in McCain Auditorium. The dancers, along with guests from Texas Tech University, entertained a sparse but satisfied audience with their new production, "Alice in Ragtime." The program was also repeated Saturday night.

Luke Kahlich, assistant professor in physical education, dance and leisure studies, choreographed "Alice in Ragtime" as a joint production with Texas Tech where it premiered in February. It is a pleasing adaptation of Lewis Carroll's famous children's story, "Alice in Wonderland," set to ragtime music.

The program began in the Carroll way with Alice (Lea Shroyer, senior in dance) falling asleep over a book and finding "Wonderland," except in this case it is Wonder Bar. The bar is complete with card sharks led by the Mad Hatter (David Ollington, senior in theater), bartenders named Tweedle Dum and Tweedle Dee, and Chessy, a cat with a cabaret act. Dancers in the parts were split between K-State students and Texas Tech students.

Review

Once in the bar, Alice was overcome and overshadowed by the Queen of Hearts, a dance hall girl with an ego fed by attention. In terms of dancing, the Queen of Hearts (Linda Johnson, senior in theater) had the star part, being given the best chance to show her talent. Though she was top billing, Alice really only had a brief number with Ollington, the Mad Hatter.

A highlight of the production was a scene with Chessy's cabaret act, "Je Suis, Et Vous? Je Suis." After the purring dance was finished, a struggle for the Mad Hatter's attention erupted between Alice and the Queen of Hearts. Alice seemed to have the edge, but she ran off to wake up in front of her book.

Here, the twist that adds to the 20th century touch of Carroll's story finished a good production. Instead of waking up and walking out of her dream, Alice decided to jump back to Wonder Bar.

The production was performed well, but as the last act, the good dancing was no surprise to the audience.

Besides Kahlich, Susan Warden, assistant professor in physical education, dance and leisure studies, plus three guests choreographed the dances.

In "Alien Terrain," the dancers were reminiscent of life's beginnings in protoplasm struggling to stay alive. It was a conglomeration of flopping, falling and strange movements, however, it was effective and complemented the intriguing music.

"Good Ole' Fashion Fun" was choreographed and performed by Texas Tech students. Although creativity was lacking, the dancing was good. But in "Ooo Bop," which was choreographed by Kahlich and danced by K-State students, a more professional tone was in the dance and the smooth movements to the sound of the Glen Miller band produced an aesthetically pleasing dance.

'Gandhi,' 'E.T.' lead in Oscar competition for best picture prize

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As the annual Oscars hoopla approaches its climax tonight, the leading contenders for the best picture award appear to be the stories of India's spiritual leader and a friendly creature from outer space.

"E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial" is the biggest moneymaking film ever and "Gandhi" looks good in the odds because of the large number of awards it already has received.

Less likely winners are the other nominated films, "Missing," "Tootsie" and "The Verdict."

Though the nominations have been unusually free of controversy, a flap arose when the U.S. Justice Department labeled three government-made Canadian films as propaganda. The academy refused to become involved. One of the films, a anti-nuclear short, "If You Love This Planet," had been nominated for an Oscar.

On the day of the academy's luncheon for nominees, a group called for a boycott of the Oscars, saying that blacks have been largely excluded from the movie and television industries.

Sorority volleyball, canoe racing to highlight Derby Days festivities

There will be no helmets, no pads and no stretchers waiting along the sidelines, but competition will be fierce when sororities clash in the Sigma Chi Derby Days beginning Tuesday.

Derby Days matches sorority against sorority in events which include volleyball, swing dancing, beer chugging and canoe racing.

Alpha Delta Pi won the competition three years in a row, from 1979 to 1981, until the Chi Omegas took over as Derby Days champions last year.

"There is always a lot of competition. This year we are just going to go out and have a good time," Michelle Norris, Derby Day representative of Alpha Delta Pi, said.

Derby Days events will begin with T-shirt signing and volleyball playoffs on Tuesday. Sorority members will sign their name and house name on T-shirts worn by members of Sigma Chi. Scoring is based on the total number of signatures on each shirt divided by the number of women who live in each house.

Volleyball playoffs will continue through Thursday, followed by a country swing dance contest and a beer chugging contest.

Canoe races will be held Friday at Tuttle Creek Reservoir, along with an obstacle course and a tug of war.

For the grand finale, Saturday's Derby Day will begin with a beer breakfast, followed by volleyball finals, a hot dog and beer lunch and special Derby Day events.

First through fifth place points will be awarded in each event throughout the week. The sorority with the most accumulated points will be declared the winner of Derby Days on Saturday.

"Part of them (the sororities) do it just for fun. The other half go for blood. We hope it will be a fun competition this year," Jim Pirotte, coordinator of Derby Days, said.

year," he said. "They always do an excellent job; we appreciate it and enjoy it."

IN REFERENCE TO the choir singing Hoddinott's composition for the first time, Acker said it was quite a compliment and was appropriate.

"It reflects the hard work on the part of the students and faculty," Acker said.

According to Walker, the President's Concert, which marks the beginning of a week-long Contemporary Music Festival, has brought a prominent composer every year — this year was no exception.

"A grant from the Mid-American State University Association enables distinguished foreign scholars to come to eight or nine mid-American universities to visit for about a week each," Walker said. "He (Hoddinott) and I have been associates and friends for about four years. I was excited to hear he was coming."

Monte Selby, junior in music education and member of the choir, was also pleased about Hoddinott's visit.

"It's great publicity wise, and it kind of gives us more credibility because he picked us," he said.

SELBY SAID Hoddinott's piece helped the choir improve. The work was difficult and the choir didn't have long to prepare. They received the piece only two weeks ago.

"We didn't recognize most of the words. There were some real dissonant parts that were hard to learn. But the big challenge was to learn this fast. It really helped us grow," he said.

Walker appreciates the hard work the students put in and has nothing but praise for their progress.

"They care about excellence and they strive for it. I wish we could get them more recognition. They're a neat bunch of kids," he said.

Half the students are music majors and half non-majors. The group rehearses for an hour every day, Walker said.

THAT KIND OF dedication has led to their national reputation, according to Walker. He added that two years ago the group went to the Soviet Union and Poland and has traveled to seven countries since he has been conductor. Through international travel, they have been able to improve their reputation with music contacts.

This year the group is planning a trip to Ireland, Wales and England — a venture everyone is looking forward to, according to Selby.

"We're excited about it. We will have to raise quite a bit of money to go, but the majority of the people are making the effort because it's just too good of a chance to pass up," he said.

Selby said he would like to sing some songs in the environment in which they were meant to be performed. Renaissance songs were originally meant to be sung in cathedrals with high ceilings, some of which the group will visit.

Speaker recalls coverage of My Lai massacre

By SHARI SAIA
Staff Writer

He has uncovered CIA investigations and Watergate activities, has written for the Associated Press, the United Press International and the Chicago City News Bureau.

He dropped out of law school and later won a Pulitzer Prize for international reporting and did so within American boundaries.

He's Seymour "Sy" Hersh, also known as the "Scoop Artist."

Hersh spoke Thursday at the Journalism Honors Dinner and Friday to students in the Survey of Mass Media class.

His "claim to fame" was an expose' of the My Lai massacre during the Vietnam War, in which a company of American soldiers landed in a Vietnamese village and were accused of murdering 90 to 110 men, women and children.

Only one man was punished.

"HE WAS AS much a victim as the people he shot," Hersh said of Lt. William L. "Russ" Calley, who was found guilty of the murder of 22 "Oriental human beings," as the Army referred to the civilians.

The Army tried to keep the massacre secret for obvious reasons, he said. But when Hersh got a call from a lawyer friend that "the Army is court-martialing some lieutenant in secrecy at Fort Gordon, Ga.," his gears started turning.

The lawyer also said Calley was supposed to have killed 75 civilians.

The lawyer refused to have his name used because, Hersh guessed, "he must have learned the information through some legal proceeding."

This was the first of many brick walls Hersh encountered in uncovering the story.

HERSH TALKED to a colonel-friend who said Calley was "just a madman." Hersh then went to another friend, who was a congressional aide, who said not to write the story because "it would hurt the army." Hersh ignored the advice because, after all, "they shot children."

He then proceeded to call other friends, high school principals and newspaper editors in the Calley's hometown — anybody he could think who might give him a lead.

After coming up empty-handed, he went back to the lawyer who gave him the initial tip, where he got the name of Calley's lawyer.

Hersh flew that same day to see Calley's lawyer in Salt Lake City on the premise that "I just happened to be going to Salt Lake City anyway" and eventually he chisled away more information from the lawyer.

"YOU'RE NOT OBLIGED to tell anyone the extent of your ignorance," Hersh said of his manner in getting information from the lawyer.

Eventually the lawyer went to make a 20-minute phone call and laid Calley's file on the desk before leaving. Hersh, finding his first solid piece of information in the file, read that Calley was being court-martialed in Fort Benning, Ga.

Because Hersh could not afford to travel about the country, he called the Fund for Investigative Journalism, which is set up for freelance investigative reporters, and was told they would reimburse him for his travel expenses.

He then traveled to Fort Benning, but failed to find any trace of Calley or the court-martial.

"How do you find somebody on an Army base that is not there?" Hersh asked.

AFTER A DAY AND A HALF of various antics, including posing as Calley's lawyer by carrying a brief case and parking in reserved spaces, Hersh finally located Calley late that night.

Although Calley was apprehensive at first, soon he and Hersh were sitting in Calley's room drinking beer, while Calley unloaded the story.

Hersh read his story the next day to Calley's lawyer in order to assure him that he had been fair to Calley and that he had not revealed any specifics that may hurt Calley further in the court-martial.

Hersh referred to the war in Vietnam as "racist, ugly, and violent...It was a disgrace."

THIS WAS NOT the only "ungettable" story Hersh uncovered. Leonard Downie wrote in his book, "The New Muckrakers," Hersh "soon rivaled Woodward and Bernstein with his explosive exposes' on government wrongdoing for the (New York) Times, the Nixon administration's secret bombing of Cambodia, Henry Kissinger's participation in the bugging of his own staff aides, several significant Watergate revelations, the involvement of the Central Intelligence Agency in the overthrow of Chilean President Salvado Allende, and, perhaps Hersh's most important single story for the Times, the CIA's extensive, illegal, domestic spying activities."

Wheat

competitive in world markets," he said.

The Kansas farmer has to be competitive on the world market and produce as cheaply as possible, Martin said.

"Current wheat varieties produce twice as much as varieties that were grown in the early '40s," he said.

Arkan is best suited for growing in south-central and southeast Kansas since it can mature early, before the weather becomes too hot, Martin said. It is a selection from the cross Sage-Arthur made by the late R.W. Livers in 1970 at the Fort Hays branch station.

Martin began work in the development of the new variety when he joined the experiment station in 1974.

Funding for his project came from the experiment station, the Kansas Crop Improvement Association and the Kansas Wheat Commission.

According to Steven Graham, wheat commission administrator in Hutchinson, the commission funds for two types of research — increases in protein and disease resistancy.

"This wheat should perform well and will be a plus to Kansas producers and consumers because of its increase in disease resistancy as well as increase in protein content," Graham said.

Marketing

After winning the final competition, the group had to to make its entire presentation to approximately 400 members of the national NAMA conference and such people as U.S. Sen. Robert Dole.

"They became one of the most photographed groups in Washington," Riley said.

The 70-member organization, which includes students from several agricultural backgrounds and majors, also won second place in the chapter competition division.

Each chapter submitted a compilation of its accomplishments and projects within the last year, McQueen said.

The K-State division won $300 for taking first place in the marketing contest.

The prize money will help offset the group's expenses, much of which had to come from the students.

The group received approximately $540 from Mo-Kan, $518 from Student Senate and about $500 from the K-State NAMA Chapter. The rest of the expenses, which totaled $4,500, came from the students.

Rugby club wins Heart of America Tournament

By KEVIN DALE
Collegian Reporter

The K-State rugby team did not play like the No. 3 team in the nation this weekend — as it is ranked. It played like it was No. 1.

Through total domination of their opponents, the Wildcats waltzed through the Heart of America tournament and won the right to advance to the western region championships in College Station, Texas.

Central Missouri State University was K-State's first victim. The Wildcats posted a 53-10 victory behind the skillful running of Greg Dentino.

Dentino scored five tries in the game to lead the Wildcats in a demonstration of perfect rugby.

"This is the most I've scored in my career," Dentino said. "Everyone executed real well and we got some good bounces. Also everyone was fired up because of the loss last week to KU."

K-State took control from the start as it pushed the ball up the field. "Boomer" Markel stole the ball from a line out and forced his way over the line to give K-State its first score. Bill Knopick then made good on a penalty kick, and K-State led 7-0.

THE K-STATE BACKS then began to work their magic. Through perfect passing they opened up the CMSU defense and began to break the game open. Chris Kelly scored on a long run, followed by three Dentino scores, and another by team captain Danny Blea and K-State was ahead 33-0.

CMSU finally got the ball close and scored on a fumbled pass. K-State came right back, though, as Knopick scored on an assist from Jeff Brunner and the Wildcats led 39-4 at the half.

CMSU came out in the second half with more intensity and moved the ball close to K-State's end zone. Dentino went to work again as he intercepted a pass and split two CMSU defenders, running the length of the field for his fourth score of the day.

Halfway down the field he held up one finger and everyone knew K-State was not to be denied.

Coach Mike Patten was justifiably pleased with the play.

"WE WERE AWESOME! Today we put it all together. This is just about the best we have ever executed," Patten said. "Greg Dentino, Chris Kelly, Bill Knopick and Kelly Coyan all played a great game. No one is going to beat us if we continue to play like this."

Continuing the strong play is exactly what K-State did. In the championship game against the University of Missouri, who had defeated the University of Kansas on Saturday, K-State played the same kind of game, shutting out Missouri 48-0.

After starting slow, K-State used its superior talent to pull away from the Tigers. Blea broke a long run and pitched the ball to Knopick who put the first points on the board.

K-State then controlled the game with more perfect execution. Slowly but surely, K-State began to pick up intensity. Knopick connected on a penalty kick and the Wildcats led 7-0 midway through the first half.

THEN RICK ASHELMAN picked up a loose ball, sprinted down the sidelines and dove over to put K-State up 11-0 at the end of the first half.

In the second half K-State dominated Missouri. Patten scored on an assist from Knopick and K-State was off and running.

Again, perfect passes allowed K-State to move the ball. Kelly scored on an assist from Blea on a play in which the entire Wildcat team worked together to make a success. Knopick connected on the extra point and K-State led 21-0.

The Wildcats kept the ball in the Missouri half of the field when Blea came out of nowhere to drop kick the ball through the uprights from 25 meters to put K-State up 24-0.

Missouri then tried to kick the ball out of its end, only to have Patten block the kick.

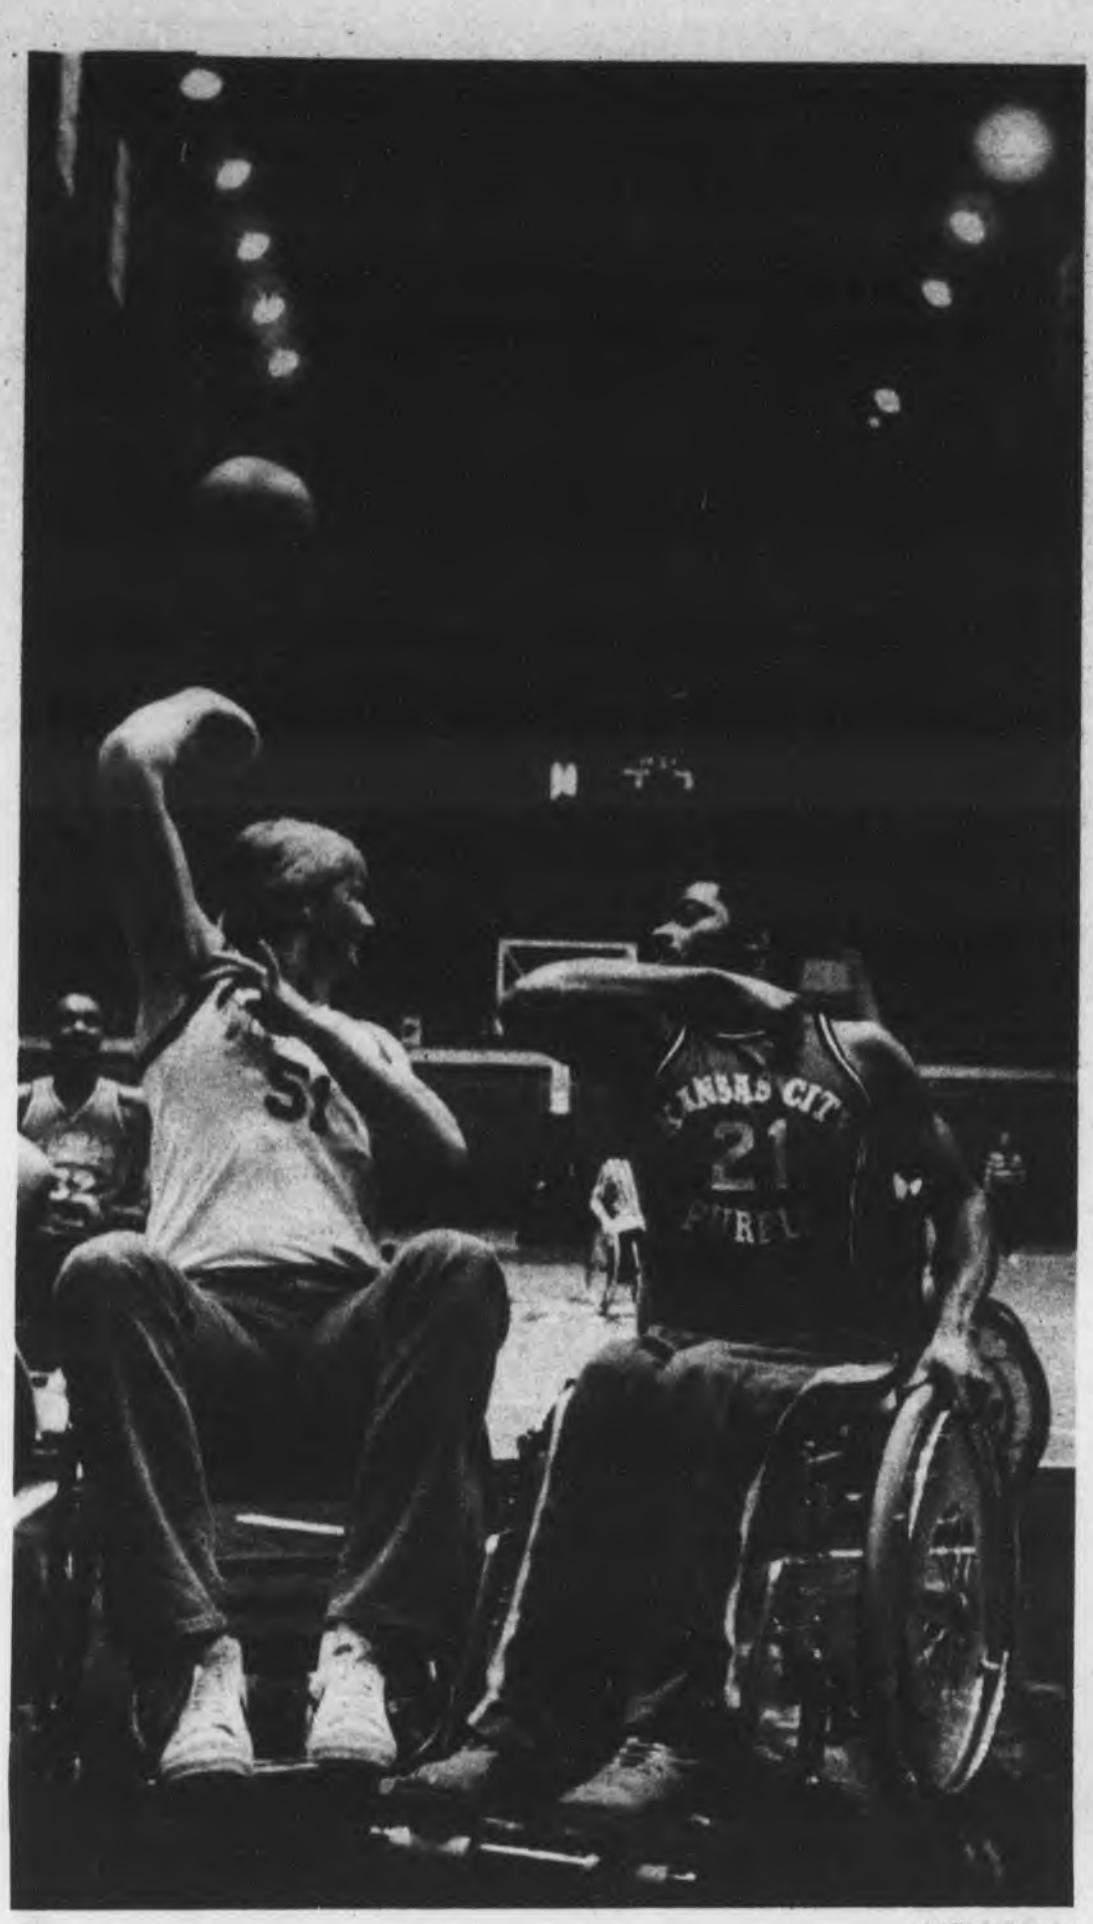
Sun, track teams shine at weather-delayed home meet

Staff/Allen Eyestone

Shot putter... Gregg Bartlett led the way in the field events for K-State on Sunday, as he won the shot put with a toss of 63-2¼. His throw broke the school record of 62-5¼ which he tied earlier this year and qualified him for the NCAA Outdoor Championships. Bartlett also won the discus with a toss of 175-5.

Good things come to those who wait. The K-State track teams discovered truth in these words, as their home track meet was rained out Saturday. Sunday the weather cleared, and they responded with some impressive individual performances in the non-scoring meet.



The men's team won 14 of the 18 events, scoring a near-sweep in the track events. K-State won every race but the 800-meter run, in which the Wildcats took second, third, fourth and fifth.

Hurdler Julius Mercer led the way with victories in the 100-meter high hurdles and the 400-meter intermediate hurdles, with times of 13.8 and 51.7 seconds respectively. He was also a member of the 1,600-meter relay team, which took first. The team consisted of Mercer, Darryl Bonds, Mike Bradley and Jay Joslin, and won in 3:17.2.

Other winners for the 'Cats on the track were Veryl Switzer Jr. in the 100-meter (10.78); Darryl Bonds — 200-meter (21.4); Jay Joslin — 400-meter (48.9); Paul Taylor — 1,500 meter run (4:01.6); Bill Burton — 3,000-meter steeplechase (9:42.8); Bryan Carroll — 5,000-meter (14:30.2); and the 400-meter relay team of Bonds, Brian Howie, Mike Bradley and Switzer (41.7).

The runners also won an abundance of silver medals. Switzer and Howie tied for second in the 200-meter with a time of 21.9. Howie was also runner-up in the 100-meter in 10.96 and the 100-meter high hurdles in 13.9. Bradley ran a 1:54.7 in the 800-meter run for a second-place finish, Alfredo Rosas

Method of hiring KU coach 'unethical,' Nets owner says

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Former New Jersey Nets Coach Larry Brown was wrong not to ask for the club's permission to apply for the top basketball position at the University of Kansas, and the school "acted very unethically" in hiring Brown, Nets owner Joe Taub said Saturday.

"What Larry Brown did was very wrong," Taub said.

Brown resigned Thursday to accept the KU job, 12 days before the start of the NBA playoffs. Taub said he was upset that Brown did not consult him before applying for the position.

Brown, reached in Lawrence on Saturday night, said: "It surprises me he said that after the things he said to me. I'm very disappointed. He was the one who mentioned Ray Perkins to me and said that's why he wanted me to resign. I still care for (Taub) and agree it was wrong on my part.

"I agree it wasn't handled well, and I'm upset about that," Brown added. "I didn't want anyone to know (I applied for the KU job) because I didn't know if anything would come of it."

Brown talked to KU officials Monday, but he did not discuss it with Taub until Wednesday night.

"It was not a Ray Perkins situation. He went to Alabama with permission. Larry Brown went without permission," Taub said, referring to former New York Giants head coach Ray Perkins.

Perkins announced with three games remaining in the 1982 National Football League season that he would leave the Giants to become head coach at Alabama. Perkins, who remained with the Giants until the season ended, had asked the club's permission to apply for the Alabama job.

"Larry Brown went without permission," Taub said. "Whatever you want to call it — unethical — whatever, it's very disruptive to the organization."

Brown said he wanted to remain with the Nets until the regular season and playoffs were completed, but Taub told him he would have to leave immediately if he accepted the KU job.

"I had no choice. That was the easiest choice I had," Taub said. "I'm not happy toward Larry Brown. When you talk about an organization and talk about one of the most responsible positions, you have to accept a lot of responsibility.

"Winning and losing is not the most important thing to me. It's the way people handle themselves," Taub added. "I'd like, as of tonight, to forget about Larry Brown."

Taub also said he was bothered with KU officials' handling of the matter.

"Kansas acted very unethically," he said. "They never spoke to anyone in our organization about Larry Brown.

"If these coaches look at themselves...After the (Herschel) Walker situation, they should take another look at themselves," Taub added, alluding to the outcry by college coaches and administrators after Walker left the University of Georgia after his junior year to sign a contract with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League.

Taub also said he has not yet considered any coaching changes for next season. Bill Blair, Brown's assistant, is the interim head coch and General Manager Bob MacKinnon has a dual role as an assistant coach.

Oklahoma teams net wins over K-State tennis squads

The K-State tennis teams saw very little light over the weekend, whether in the Oklahoma skies or in their competition against Oklahoma and Oklahoma State universities. The Wildcats failed to win a match in their trip. The men lost to the Sooners and the Cowboys by 9-0 scores, while the women followed the pace with the same results.

On Friday, the Wildcats competed in Norman, Okla., against the Sooners. The men won only one set, that victory coming from the No. 2 doubles team of Jeff Jackard and Kris James. They lost the match, though, 4-6, 6-1, 7-6.

The women had an even tougher time coming up with wins, losing all of their matches in straight sets. The men won 57 games in the loss; the women were victors in 35 games.

The action was in Stillwater, Okla., on Saturday, but the teams had more problems with the Cowboys than they did with the Sooners. The men and women lost all of their matches in straight sets, as the men won 46 games and the women came up with only 12 wins.

The results must be taken in perspective, however, as the opponents were the toughest the Wildcats have faced this season. In the men's competition, the Sooners are the defending Big Eight champions, while the Cowboys took second in the conference in last year's championships.

The Sooners returned four starters from their No. 1 team of 1982. The Cowboys returned five, including the No. 3 singles champion and members of the No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 doubles teams in the Big Eight last year.

The Wildcat men dropped to 5-9 on the season with the losses, and the women dipped below .500 to 6-7. The next action for the men is Tuesday at home against Southwest Missouri State. The women take on Colorado University Saturday, April 16 in Boulder, Colo.

Royals lose 9-5 on error by White

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — It happens to everyone, a sympathetic Harvey Kuenn said Sunday after Frank White, a Gold Glove second baseman, committed an error that helped the Milwaukee Brewers rally to beat the Kansas City Royals 9-5.

White muffed a two-out bases-loaded grounder in the sixth inning, and the next batter, Jim Gantner, unloaded a bases-loaded triple to power the Brewers to victory.

"Frank White is a helluva player. Things like that happen to every great player in their career," said Kuenn, the Brewers' manager. "The ball just bounced our way."

White, who has collected six Gold Gloves, smiled in appreciation of Kuenn's explanation.

"I suppose it happens to everybody, but you hate it when it happens to you," he said. "Something made the ball take a funny little bounce right into my chest."

The Brewers rallied for five runs in the sixth to erase a 4-2 Royals lead.

White's error on the grounder hit by Charlie Moore allowed Ted Simmons to score, tying the score 4-4. Gantner then lashed a 2-1 pitch by Bob Tufts into the right-field corner.

Rugby

Knopick caught it and touched it down for the score.

COYAN THEN SCORED the first of his two tries for the Wildcats and Brunner hit the extra point to put K-State up 34-0.

On the ensuing kickoff Patten broke loose and pitched the ball to Coyan, who outraced the Tigers to the goal line. K-State was up 40-0 and was showing no signs of stopping.

Missouri started to move the ball when Dentino kicked the ball two-thirds the length of the field, and Knopick picked up the loose ball and scored.

Dentino then scored a try as time ran out and for the third year in a row K-State was crowned champions of the Heart of America tournament.

Patten said the championship game was more of a team effort than the first round game.

"EVERYONE WAS LOOSE, everyone was confident and we all had a great time. This has been a great weekend," Patten said.

Assistant coach Gregg Barnes was also pleased with the overall play of the Wildcat ruggers.

"These guys have worked so hard and now it has paid off," Barnes said.

In addition to the tournament, the "B" side of the rugby club had two games this weekend.

In the first they lost to Emporia State. K-State played good defense but the "A" side of Emporia State was too strong as they defeated the 'Cats 16-3.

The second game pitted the Wildcats against Fort Riley. K-State was playing tough ball when a fight broke out between the two teams. The referee then stopped the game and declared K-State the winner.

Track

ran the 5,000-meter in 14:41.7, and Steve Spillar took second in the 3,000-meter steeplechase in 9:55.4.

Gregg Bartlett led the way in the field events for K-State, winning the shot put with a toss of 63-feet-2¼. His throw broke the school record of 62-5¼ which he tied earlier this year and qualified him for the NCAA Outdoor Championships. Bartlett added to his impressive day by winning the discus with a toss of 175-5.

Ray Hansen qualified for nationals in the javelin, winning with a throw of 246-3. Doug Lytle was also a winner for the Wildcats, clearing 17-9 in the pole vault to get the gold. Lytle's vault set a new Christian Track record, breaking his own mark of 17-5 he set in 1981.

Second-place finishes went to Andy Gillam in the shot put (56-5½), Steve Cotton in the high jump (6-7) and Tracey Slobodnick in the pole vault (15-6).

The women's team had some tougher competition to go up against, facing the University of Nebraska. It still had seven individual winners, led by Deb Pihl, who broke the track record in the 3,000-meter run with a time of 9:36.8. The old record of 9:42.37 was set in 1979.

Erin Ficke also won in the distance races, taking first in the 1,500-meter in 4:43.3. Donna King and Crystal Hicks were winners in the sprints, King taking the 100-meter in 12.2 seconds and Hicks winning the 400-meter in 1:02. Michelle Maxey won the 400-meter hurdles in 66.5 seconds, Pinkie Suggs won the shot put with a toss of 48-5½, and Kelly Wenlock leapt 20-4½ in the long jump.

The 400- and 1,600-meter relay teams, running uncontested, recorded times of 48.8 and 4:10.1 respectively. The 400-meter team consisted of Hicks, Maxey, Wenlock and King. Marcy Vahsholtz, Hicks, Diane Harrell and Maxey comprised the 1,600-meter team.

Second places went to Harrell in the 1,500-meter (4:47.7); Vahsholtz — 800-meter (2:21.2); and Betsy Silzer — 3,000-meter (9:44.0).

USFL loses out to major league in fight for fans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Major league baseball outdrew the new United States Football League better than 2-to-1 in Los Angeles Sunday in their first same-city confrontation for fans.

The Dodgers drew 39,873 for their game with the Montreal Expos, while the Los Angeles Express drew 18,671 for their USFL game with the Philadelphia Stars at the Coliseum which seats 90,000.

The football game may have had some affect, though, on the Dodgers attendance, because even with Fernando Valenzuela pitching, Los Angeles drew about 6,000 fewer than its average daily attendance last year when the club set a major league attendance record.

Both baseball and football were outdrawn by thoroughbred racing, as more than 54,716 fans turned out on an overcast day at Santa Anita for a nine-race card highlighted by the Santa Anita Derby.

PERSONAL

WELCOME BACK "CBP!" Your roomie missed you (sort of!) (134)

ED LOCKHART—Have an awesome birthday today. And when you're at your greatest point of intoxication tonight, right before you fall out of your chair, remember two things: 1) Where you put your keys and 2) The crow flies in square circles. As always, Leon Grobnik. (134)

EXACTLY, HOW was your Thursday morning Slumber Party? The A's spats and snores, closing My Place and Mel's Alley with pizza, pre-sweetened ice tea, Michael Jackson's Funk, stubbing three toes on big foot's shoes, fuzzballs, introducing your stuffed animals, tornado warnings, and last but not least, the sun rise. Sincerely, Exactly Himself. (134)

LAMBDA CHI hide-and-seekers Jerry, Keith, Doug, Rob, Marty, John: We'll pick-up-sticks, juggle oranges, and pizza party with you anytime. Had a blast and you too Emily! Love, Chi-O Crown and Cokers, Jean, Brenda and Jamie. (134)

PJ AND Polly: I wasn't planning on biting anything. Even though the offer was made, I could never indulge in such pleasures. Darrin Darrin. (134)

ARNIES: NATCON was great and so was your support! Look ahead to Arcon '83 in the "Little Apple!" P.S. How 'bout those ducks? Karen. (134)

ANN CASHIN—To the fourth funniest girl in a trio who unfairly influenced the judge by bringing donkeys on stage. Good luck at Nationals! Huzzah, Huzzah, Huzzah! (134)

GINA S.—You're the winner of the Fuzzy Wuzzy Bear Hug Contest. Collect your prize at 1500 Oxford Place, #17 or call 537-8580 at 10:00 p.m. any week night. The Singing Journalist. (134)

TREEBOB (COTT): Does your date know how ticklish you really are? You sly dog! Maxine. (134)

MY DEAR Andrea—Have a wonderful day, I love you. Joey. (134)

DAVE—THANKS for one great evening! Let's see the sunrise again sometime! The Vogue girl with little feet! (134)

DIANE H.—January 23, June 27 and April 11. Dates too important to forget. Happy 21st. Bob. (134)

DUANE—HAPPY Birthday! I only wish we could be together to celebrate. I miss you so much! Can't wait for this summer! Love you, Mert. (134)

ELSIE ORPIN—Please come pick up your 1981-1982 Royal Purple Yearbook in Kedzie 103. (134)

Workers ready shuttle for return to Florida

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The men of Challenger, back from a five-day, 2.1 million-mile voyage, relaxed at home Sunday while technicians in California prepared the space shuttle for its flight back to Kennedy Space Center.

Astronauts Paul J. Weitz and Karol Bobko guided the spacecraft to a picture book landing on a concrete runway at Edwards Air Force Base on Saturday, ending the maiden voyage of the second ship in America's shuttle fleet.

Story Musgrave and Donald Peterson, the astronauts who conducted a three-hour, 47-minute spacewalk on Thursday, rode as passengers during Challenger's halfway-aroundthe-world dive from orbit through clear skies to the desert landing at Edwards.

More than 100,000 people cheered as the craft touched down.

Technicians at Edwards examining Challenger found the craft "in beautiful shape," said James Harrington, chief of the shuttle ground operations.

He said Sunday three pieces of thermal blanket, about 15 square inches in size, were missing from two back sections of the craft. There also is a small tile missing from the right landing gear door, said Harrington, but otherwise "it truly looks like we just rolled it out (of the hangar)."

"It is a lot cleaner than any of the flights of Columbia (the first space shuttle)," he said. "I can't get over just how clean it (Challenger) is."

Harrington said Challenger will be mounted atop a 747 jet this week for a piggyback flight across the country to the Kennedy Space Center in Florida. The ferry flight is to leave at 6 a.m. PST Thursday and stop only for a three-hour refueling at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio. It is expected to arrive at Kennedy about 5:30 p.m. EST Thursday.

Ferry flights after the five earlier shuttle missions involved an overnight stop, but officials said they hoped to avoid the stop this time to speed preparation of Challenger for its second flight.

Weitz, Bobko, Musgrave and Peterson return to work early Monday. They will spend the next three weeks undergoing debriefings from engineers and from fellow astronauts. At the end of the debriefings, the four will write an extensive pilot's report, giving the technical details of their adventure in orbit.

On Saturday, after post-landing ceremonies, the four astronauts were flown to Ellington Air Force Base near Houston for a welcome from astronauts and engineers of the Johnson Space Center.

The only major problem that developed during the mission had no mechanical connection with Challenger.

A $100 million Tracking and Data Relay Satellite, perfectly delivered to orbit by Challenger, developed problems after it left the spacecraft. The second stage of a rocket module connected to the satellite failed to fire properly, putting it into an egg-shaped orbit.

Officials said plans are being developed to fire small jet thrusters aboard the satellite and raise its orbit to the 22,300-mile stationary position planned. This procedure may take two weeks, officials said, and is not expected to start for about two weeks.

Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson, head of the shuttle program, said a powerful Air Force camera in New Mexico photographed the satellite rocket module when it failed, sending the satellite astray.

Abrahamson said the photographs will be invaluable to an investigation board studying the failure.

Oil companies add to fuel costs . . .

By RHONDA WESSEL
Collegian Reporter

Recent increases in gasoline prices were not solely caused by the 5-cent-a-gallon federal tax which went into effect April 1, but were also a result of oil companies hiding behind the publicity of the gas tax and raising their prices an additional 5 cents, Bill Enlow, gasoline wholesaler and owner of Enlow Sales in Manhattan, said.

"Big oil companies raised their cost of product by 5 cents a gallon the same time the gas tax was being implemented," Enlow said.

The consumer was prepared for the gas tax increase because of the media coverage, but they were caught by surprise when a gallon of gas cost 10 cents more once the tax was in effect.

"The consumer naturally placed the blame for the additional 5 cents on gasoline wholesalers and retailers while the big oil companies avoided the bad publicity.

"That is the reason that gas went from 96.9 (cents) per gallon at the cheapest stations in town to $106.9 per gallon," he said.

FUNDS RAISED by the gas tax will be used to repair national highways.

"Quite naturally, we (Enlow Sales) are against the tax," he said. "We did lobby to some extent through the Kansas Oil Marketing Association although not too extensively."

To cover the tax, the oil companies added 5 cents onto their price to the wholesalers, he said. The wholesalers then added 5 cents to their price to gas stations, who also hiked prices 5 cents to absorb the loss.

"It is really a chain effect in which in the end, the consumer is the one who pays," Enlow said. "The additional 5 cents a gallon added on by the big oil companies is handled the same way.

"Frankly, I don't think that the tax will benefit the Manhattan community," he said, because the tax will not repair any county roads or city streets but will be used only for national highways.

"I'M RATHER BIASED in my opinions about taxes," Enlow said. "I really don't think that we can give the government enough money. The more we give, the more they spend and I don't think that we get any more benefits or better results than before."

The tax is based on the idea that the individuals who use the highways should pay for the national road repair, Enlow said, but most Manhattan consumers buy gasoline to drive around town or to go to other cities in Kansas by state highways and not by interstates.

"I think that the tax isn't fairly assessed. Especially, if the purpose behind it is to make the individuals who are using it (interstate) pay for the repairs," he said.

With an additional 3-cent-a-gallon tax that is proposed in the Kansas House of Representatives, the chain effect will start

. . . as leaders propose state gas tax

From staff and AP reports

Republican legislative leaders vowed Monday to "stick to our guns" in pressing for a highway funding program to include a 3-cent motor fuel tax increase and a $30 million transfer from the freeway fund to the highway fund.

"If you really want your highways fixed, support a motor fuel tax increase," Senate President Ross Doyen said.

"We can't get that governor off dead center," added Doyen. "He just sits down there and says, 'I'm against it; I'm against it.'"

The Transportation Committee of the Kansas House of Representatives is currently considering a proposal to raise the state gas tax by 3 cents per gallon. This increase follows a recent tax hike of 5 cents per gallon implemented by Congress.

Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said the state currently assesses an 8-cent tax on each gallon of gas sold. That tax is levied at a flat rate.

The current proposal would provide for an indexed tax rate with a 3-cent increase effective July 1. If gas sold for $1 per gallon on July 1, then the state tax would increase to 11 cents on the gallon.

IF THE PRICE of gasoline rose to $2 per gallon, the state gas tax would increase to 22 cents. Knopp said he believes a trigger mechanism is included in the bill so that the state tax on a gallon of gasoline would never drop below 11 cents.

Knopp said he supports the bill because of his philosophy that highways ought to be paid for by those who use them.

"A user tax is exactly what this is," Knopp said.

He also said he believes the severance tax issue took a lot of the spotlight in the last few weeks.

"Now other tax issues will draw more attention," Knopp said.

Doyen, R-Concordia, is generally supportive of user fees, according to Sue Bauman, spokeswoman for Doyen. Bauman indicated that the Senate probably would not be adverse to passing another tax increase to support highway maintenance.

However, at this point, Bauman said she could not say how successful the effort would be.

Legislators voice state's problems at public forum

By KERRI HARTER
Staff Writer

K-State has been selected as the site of a "center of excellence" for the advancement of high technology fields through a proposal currently before the Kansas Legislature.

Under the proposal, K-State could receive $130,000 from the state and a matching fund of $150,000 from high-tech industry. The proposal would also make $175,000 available to K-State in the form of grants to be applied for by professors for research and development in areas of high technology. Industry must also provide a $150,000 matching grant fund.

Both the University of Kansas and Wichita State University have been chosen also by the Legislature as center-of-excellence sites.

Rep. Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha, outlined the proposal on Monday at a public forum of state Republican leaders held at the Ramada Inn.

The forum was part of a statewide listening tour for the legislative leadership. Several of the legislators gave short summaries of the problems currently being faced with the state budget and financing of various state projects.

Other issues addressed by members of the panel included state taxing and the status of school financing.

Each of the legislators pointed out the need to cut state spending. They asked the audience to give them ideas on how and where to cut when they returned to Topeka next week.

Rep. Mike Hayden, R-Atwood and House Speaker, said the Legislature has two courses. It can vote to increase taxes or it can cut the budget. The solution will probably be a combination of increased taxes and budget cuts.

Rep. Paul Hess, R-Wichita, pointed out that the Senate just passed the "most significant tax increase in the history of Kansas" in the form of a severance tax. He said he thought the Legislature had struggled very hard this session.

"We (the legislators) are simply not able to provide the kinds of money we have in the past. We have to adjust state spending accordingly," Hess said.

Concerning the status of public school financing, Chronister said the school appropriation process is complete for this session. She said a total of $606 million has been appropriated for school financing.

Attention also turned to state highway funding. Members of the audience expressed concern over the lack of money for highway maintenance.

Hayden suggested a solution to the problem in the form of an increase in motor fuels tax. which he said Gov. John Carlin has been unwilling to accept.

Hayden said he supported the motor fuels tax because it is a user tax paid by all who use Kansas highways, not just state residents. The motor fuels tax would provide funding exclusively for the state's highways without relying on the state general fund.

Health education ranging from human sexuality to nutrition and health screening for such things as blood pressure and glaucoma will be featured at the Health Fair '83 on Wednesday.

The Health Fair, which will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Union Ballroom, is sponsored by Lafene Student Health Center, Cindy Culver, health educator at Lafene, said.

"This is to identify and screen possible (health) problems that could arise," Culver said, referring to Wednesday's activities.

The fair will consist of about 20 different stations of two types, she said. The first type will be screening stations, where tests for blood pressure, height, weight and hearing will be conducted to determine whether students are within normal limits.

The second type will be education stations, where written information and professionals will be available to answer questions.

Students attending the fair will be asked to fill out a medical history form as part of a national health survey.

As participants go to different stations, the results of their tests will be recorded and at the last station, recommendations will be made if any problems are found, Culver said.

Last year at the K-State Health Fair, 700 people were tested in four hours, Culver said. At the Manhattan Health Fair, held by the Riley County Health Department, 800 were tested in 12 hours.

Survivors gather to remind world of Holocaust

WASHINGTON — Jolan Deitch wore a T-shirt emblazoned with her original name and hometown in Hungary. She was looking for relatives. Martin Statfield carried a hand-lettered sign, searching for a friend named "Janek," last seen when the allies liberated Hitler's death camps.

So began a gathering Monday of Americans and Canadians who, by surviving, defied Adolph Hitler's "Final Solution" — his plan to exterminate every Jew in Europe. Six million perished.

Others used electronics in the search for kinfolks and friends, lining up before computer terminals to look for names from long ago and for the names of those who share a link to their old villages, or to their ghettos, in pre-war Europe.

The meeting — the American Gathering of Jewish Holocaust Survivors — was called to remind the world of the Holocaust, to warn that such an event could happen again in an indifferent world, to provide testimony of Jewish resistance to the Nazis, to thank America for post-war haven and to relocate lost acqaintances, said Benjamin Meed, a Polish-born survivor and its organizer.

Meed said attendance exceeded expectations, estimating that 16,000 survivors and 4,000 of their children came "to bear witness to the past" and "join hands in a celebration of life."

Youngest premature infant fights for survival

SAN DIEGO — Ernestine Hudgins, believed to be the youngest premature infant ever to survive, passed the two-pound mark over the weekend and is gaining an ounce a day, doctors said.

The daughter of Gloria Patterson, 27, and Ernest Hudgins, 24, of San Diego weighed only 17 ounces when she was born Feb. 8 after only 22 weeks of development.

"Her lungs appear better than ever," said Dr. Morton Cohen of Children's Hospital. She was taken off a respirator a week ago.

Cohen rated the infant's chances of survival as very good.

A letter to the parents from President Reagan hangs over the baby's bassinet, said Cohen.

Severe flooding leaves thousands homeless

The yellow waters of the Pearl River topped sandbag levees Monday and flowed 15 feet deep through a suburb of New Orleans, but the worst appeared over in the historic Dixie floods that have displaced more than 52,000 people and left $625 million in damage.

Elsewhere, the mighty Mississippi River surged up to 10 feet above flood stage in Missouri, near St. Louis, forcing scores of families to evacuate and washing snakes and rats into some homes.

The Pearl reached a record level in Slidell, La., 30 miles northeast of New Orleans, one of the cities worst affected by the flooding that began last week with as much as 20 inches of rain in parts of the Deep South.

An estimated 40,000 people had fled their homes in Louisiana, 11,500 in Mississippi, and several hundred others in other Southern states. Officials estimated the damage at $425 million in Louisiana and $200 million in Mississippi.

MX proposal 'nearly identical' to Reagan's

WASHINGTON — After struggling for months to find a politically acceptable basing system for the MX missile, a special commission recommended to President Reagan on Monday a plan virtually identical to one already discarded by Congress.

Playing down Reagan's earlier warnings about U.S. missiles being vulnerable to Soviet attack, the panel unanimously proposed building 100 MX weapons, each armed with 10 nuclear warheads, and putting them in launch silos now holding Minuteman missiles in Wyoming and Nebraska.

Accompanying that warmed-over proposal was the commission's one new idea: developing a smaller, single-warhead missile for deployment in the early 1990s. The group said that could be a cornerstone for a new approach to arms control.

Aides said Reagan likely will embrace the recommendations next week, once Congress has completed battling over a nuclear weapons freeze and the disputed nomination of Kenneth Adelman to head the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Shuttle's astronauts begin extensive testing

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Challenger's four astronauts met with their boss Monday and launched into three weeks of tests and interviews to record every detail of their historic flight.

On Thursday, Challenger will be placed atop a 747 jet and flown from Edwards to Florida. Takeoff was set for 9 a.m. EST with arrival in Florida about 5:30 p.m. after a three-hour refueling stop at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio.

The spacecraft, second in America's shuttle fleet, is to be placed into a hangar at Kennedy, where technicians will immediately start preparing it for its second mission, set for the second week in June.

Officials said Challenger suffered only minor damage on its maiden flight and should be ready in time for the June launch.

Hussein needed to achieve peace

The process of obtaining peace in the Middle East has taken yet another downfall.

King Hussein of Jordan on Sunday said he will not negotiate with the Palestine Liberation Organization, nor will he negotiate with the United States independently.

This decision will set back President Reagan's peace plans. Without Hussein's involvement, any hope of establishing a permanent peace in the Middle East is diminished.

The assassination of Issam Sartawi Sunday further highlights the need for a lasting peace in the Middle East. Sartwali was the PLO's European coordinator and was a leading advocate of reconciliation with Israel.

Any plans for peace in this area of the world must include Jordan. Israel's occupation of the west bank of the Jordan River is still a sore spot with Jordan and many Arab countries. The Middle East's problems involve Jordan; for King Hussein to refuse to negotiate either as a representative of the Palestinians or independently is a mistake.

The only way a lasting peace can be achieved in the Middle East is to have all sides represented. Without Hussein's involvement in the peace talks, more blood will be shed needlessly in this area of the world.

The 'ins' to pigging out

Pigging out: it's a favorite all-around sport; one that has had a big influence on me during my college years. They can offer as many "Coping with Stress" seminars as they want; they can give all kinds of tips on how to handle the heavy classloads we carry. But the No. 1 cure-all for me is pigging out — soon to change, of course (as all pig-outers resolve after each "run").

I know all too well I am not alone in this chronic, habit-forming, stress-relief mechanism. Pig-outers usually try to go in groups of at least two or three, because if you go alone you have to cope with massive paranoia. For instance, I recently suffered a severe attack of pig-outeritis; it was today, as a matter of fact. Now, every pig-outer has that one favorite food item he or she indulges in. Mine happens to be chocolate. You name it, I'll eat it as long as it is chocolate.

My adventure this time took me to a nearby grocery store, one that I hoped wouldn't be too busy. True pig-outers never want to run into anyone they know, unless it is a fellow member, for fear they will be found out. I was casually strolling down the aisle marked "candy, cookies, baked goods," scoping carefully to make sure I wouldn't be caught by a "non-member." The only people in the aisle with me were a mother and her screaming child, who I tried not to notice.

THEN CAME A DILEMMA. Two kinds of cookies appealed to me, both being rich in chocolate. I wanted the deluxe chocolate chip cookies, but I also wanted the chocolate ones with peanut butter filling. I ask you, what would a typical pig-outer do? Buy both! That was easily solved.

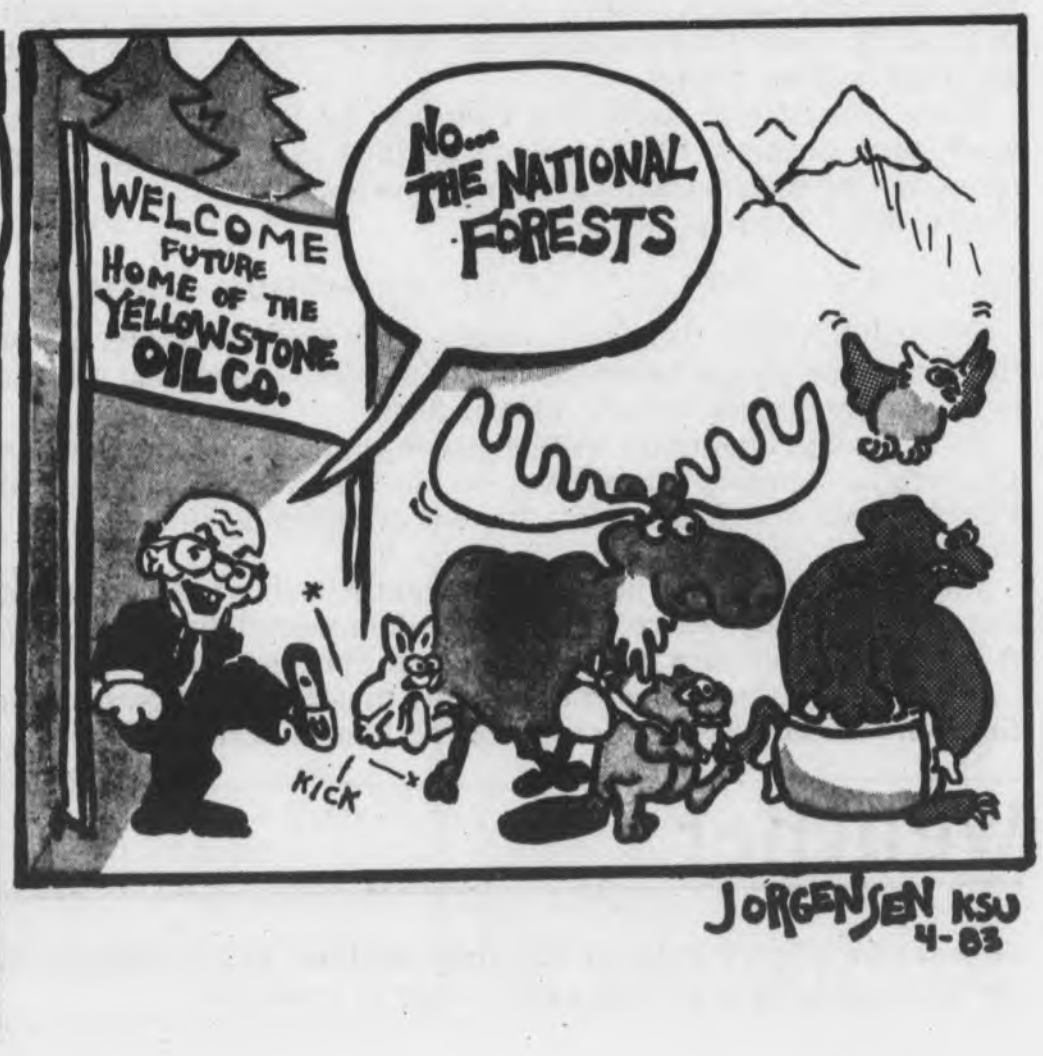
Now the real test: getting to a checkout stand with the fewest people in line and getting out the door before anyone notices what I am buying. I went to the express lane, naturally, and held my cookies directly in front of my body, facing the candy stand so no one standing around me could see what I had. How paranoid can you get? I finally convinced myself most people probably weren't watching every move I was making and even if they did notice I was buying two packages of chocolate cookies, they might think I was a mother buying them for my kids (I hoped).

Just when I had my packages laid on the counter and thought the coast was clear, in walks five guys who file right past my counter. Oh, no! Guys, who might think I am pigging out! If you are a girl pig-outer you especially don't want to be found out by guys because they are less likely to ask you out since they think they'll have to spend their whole paycheck just on feeding you mounds of food. And this goes for whether you are fat or thin. (Some thin people can eat surprisingly huge amounts of food.)

BUT LITTLE DOES a potential date know that most pig-outers will act just the opposite when they are on a date. They will eat strictly salads to impress their dates, trying to convince them that this is the way they normally eat. This technique doesn't work with me, however. I pull the bluff just fine through the main course. But when it's time for dessert, I let loose.

When I don't want to go on a "run" alone, there is a small group I pig out with; three of us, to be exact. We try to do it on a regular basis. We even have our own set of rules to follow:

— If you have just picked up several packages of doughnuts and sweet rolls from the bakery section and you notice, a. somebody you know who isn't the pigging out type and can't relate to what you are doing, or b. a handsome guy — immediately leave the bakery section and linger in the vegetable aisle or stick your head in one of the frozen food freezer doors, pretending to look for green beans. Split up when you do this, as a group of people carrying armloads of junk food is likely to attract attention.



— After you have inconspicuously made your purchase and you are safely out the door, try very hard not to rip the package of doughnuts open before you get to your car. Once you are inside the car, proceed. It is ridiculous to expect a pig-outer to wait until they get home before digging in. If you can make it to the car, you are doing good.

— NOW YOU ARE on your way to the ice cream place. You can continue doughnut-stuffing except when you are stopped at an intersection, where people can easily stare into your car and find you out. I have caught people pigging out at intersections before. One guy even had his head ducked down while shoving french fries into his mouth. If anything will attract attention, it's somebody with his head ducked down at an intersection while the light is green. And, of course, you don't want to be eating doughnuts at the drive-thru window while you are ordering ice cream, so one person in the group must quickly shove doughnuts under the seat, while the others are taking ice cream from the window person.

— Last, but not least, make sure before you get out of the car to brush all tell-tale crumbs and drippings from yourself and the car seat. Throw away packages, all empty of course. And when your date comes to pick you up and asks you if you are hungry, say, "Yes, I'm starved! I haven't had a thing to eat all day." Then sit there and politely stuff every bite of that giant taco into your mouth, and resolve never to pig out again — especially before a date.

Advisory system needs to change

Editor,

The advisory system at K-State must change. Neither the students nor the faculty are happy. After the third trip to my adviser's office, I finally found him there.

I told him I wanted to switch from general business to marketing. He told me I should change advisers because that is not his department. I was not ready to be booted out of his office after spending a week trying to catch him. Looking over the class schedule I had brought with me, he decided I was on the right track so far. He marked about 10 classes that I could take and told me it was my decision on what I should take. Now I'm more confused than before.

I don't know what these classes are like, or which ones would be the best to take together. I decided that I would figure this out for myself since he did not seem to want to give me the time of the day.

However, I wasn't done yet. I had some questions about transferring classes from Wichita State University, and about what the classes I have taken at K-State are classified as. He didn't know any of the answers and had to call somebody else. When he reached someone on the phone, he explained to the lady that I needed some information, and that he wanted me to change advisers, but I insisted on his help. That kind of help I don't need.

After leaving his office, I walked straight to the business college's office to find a new adviser. The next day I was waiting at his office for him. When he finally came, I introduced myself and explained that he was my new adviser. He was surprised that it was that time of the year again, and advised me to go visit Calvin 13 where the real advisers are, and quit bothering the teachers. He gave me a marketing schedule to follow, and told me that if I had any questions to come visit him the next day, but he would be just as grouchy.

Would somebody please help me!

We need a new system. None of us are happy with the current system. Teachers are trained for teaching, not advising. If they wanted to be advisers, they would have gone to school for that instead of teaching. A lot of them don't understand the system, and since they are not interested in advising they won't want to learn it. Besides they have their own classes to take care of. Because they do not enjoy advising, they feel negative when students come for help.

I understand their situation, but in the meantime we need help. Why can't we have professional advisers who could spend the time with and for the students. Something is needed. Help!

'Voice your opinion Thursday' on controversial aid amendment

Editor,

Our student body president's campaign theme stressed the essential quality needed for a student body president is "communication with the people he represents." This statement should be regarded by all student senators before supporting the Solomon Amendment, a resolution slated for passage by Student Senate Thursday.

The Solomon Amendment denies all federal financial assistance to any student who does not register with the Selective Service. If the resolution passes, it will indicate that a majority of K-State students approve of this measure. The Solomon Amendment, however, has been put on hold by a federal judge because of constitutional problems; yet our senate is being asked to support it by the Associated Students of Kansas.

Senate should not presume to be more knowledgeable than a federal judge. K-State should not support an illegal law, which this certainly could be, after it is ruled on in court by the federal judge and perhaps even the Supreme Court. Even though there is a possibility that the law may be right, the possibility of illegality warrants not making a decision now. An amendment for support should come after these important constitutional problems are decided.

Senate will vote on the bill at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Union Big Eight Room. Every student has the opportunity to speak out in the open session. We wish students would voice their opinions. The students of Wichita State University opposed a similar resolution. No university known to date has supported it.

It is an issue which should not be passed without a referendum or at least a student survey. It is not an issue to be taken lightly.

The question whether to register for the Selective Service is one of individual resolve. College students have historically valued respect for individual rights and we believe that support for this amendment destroys important rights. By forcing students to forfeit financial assistance while waiting to justify their action in the courts reverses our system of justice — presuming guilt before innocence. And for what? Who profits from this support?

The essential quality for any acting government is true representation. Without any knowledge on student's views we can only hope that our government will vote this resolution down. Voice your opinion Thursday night.

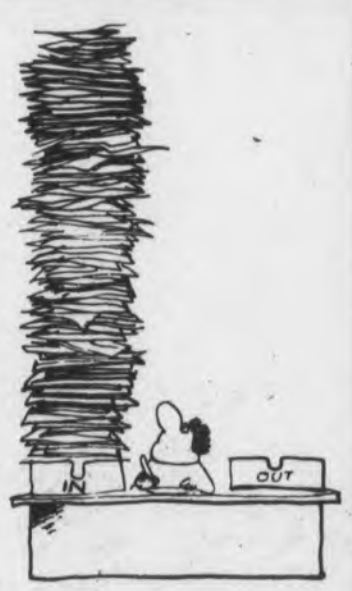
Sound system an 'embarrassment'

Editor,



Since arriving on this campus a couple years ago, I have attended many of the McCain Auditorium concerts, lectures, plays and this last weekend's wonderful production by our department of dance. It was indeed a first-rate performance, marred only by a failing third-rate sound system. Accolades must be in order for McCain Director Doreen Bauman for continuing to put together excellent seasons with a sound system which surely would embarrass most of our students if they had such an awful sounding system in their apartment. I know that K-State is a victim of increasing budgetary pressures, but do we have to publicly amplify our shortcomings?

Bill to raise price of reservoir water

By SALLY NIBLETT
Collegian Reporter

A bill to raise the price of water purchased from state reservoirs passed the Kansas Legislature in early March, but Don Hammond of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, said the bill will not affect Tuttle Creek.

Tuttle Creek is not currently in the Kansas water market system, Hammond said.

Under the new legislation, a 1,000-gallon unit of water will sell for 11.58 cents.

Most of the 16 existing state water contracts have a set maximum price of 10 cents per 1,000 gallons and a minimum price of 5 cents.

"The bill will affect only the contracts negotiated this year," John Henderson, chief of technical services for the Kansas Water Office, said.

The bill doesn't affect the current 16 contracts until they come up for review, Henderson said.

"Some have five-, some 10-year reviewing frequencies," he said, adding that 1986 will be the earliest the new price will affect these contracts.

THE CONTRACTS for water sales are reviewed by the Legislature, which has 30 days to accept or reject them.

Henderson said the two contracts for 1983 have already been negotiated. One will serve the needs of a rural water district in Johnson County and the other will provide water to four cities and a industrial park in Labette and Montgomery counties.

The Water Supply Act of 1958 enabled the state to borrow money from the federal government at low interest rates to build reservoirs and water supply storage.

Henderson said the price increase profit, created by the bill, will go toward repayment of the federal government on those loans.

THE ADDITIONAL FUNDING will also go toward reimbursement of the state for the enforcement and administration of the act, for operation and maintenance costs and to the water development fund, which the state will use in the future for water projects.

According to The Associated Press, some lawmakers have complained the bill unfairly levies a severance tax on water.

"A severance tax is a tax on a non-renewable resource. Water, because of rain, is a renewable resource," Henderson said.

"Part of the 11.58 cents per 1,000 gallons — 2.5 cents per 1,000 gallons — is for replacement. Some have tried to say that is a severance," he said.

THE BILL WILL apply to water sales contracts from nine reservoirs in the state water market system, including Pearson-Skubitz Big Hill, Clinton, Council Grove, Elk City, Hillsdale, John Redmond, Marion, Milford and Perry.

Henderson said that the El Dorado Reservoir, currently in the filling stages, is also an Army Corps reservoir but the city has entered into contract to purchase storage space for El Dorado and Augusta. He said this is the only contract where a city is repaying the federal government by buying storage space. The other nine are state owned.

A reallocation study of water supply storage is currently being conducted for Tuttle Creek. These studies are to find out how much money it will cost the state if it decides to buy more water supply storage, Henderson said.

"This is not building more storage, it is changing conservation over to a water supply designated storage," he said.

THESE STUDIES are also underway for Kanopolis, Melvern, Pomona and Wilson Reservoirs.

"Tuttle Creek is for general conservation purposes," Henderson said. "The Federal Act of 1958 was not available when deciding how much storage to include in Tuttle. It has general conservation storage, not water supply storage.

"The water there now is for maintaining the water flow in the Kansas River and supplying navigation flows in Missouri rivers," he said.

Faculty Senate to consider $15 academic services fee

Faculty Senate is scheduled to complete discussion on a proposal concerning an academic services fee of $15 at its meeting at 3:30 p.m. today in the Union Big Eight Room.

According to Van Withee, president of senate, the Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning has studied the proposal and is scheduled to make its report to the senate concerning the distribution of funds should the fee be passed.

Withee said he received a letter from Provost Owen Koeppe requesting the senate to respond to the implementation of such a fee.

Senate is also scheduled to vote on a policy proposed by the Academic Affairs Committee concerning the "Interpretation of Intent of Academic Procedures and Policies," which would make clear the policies concerning dropping classes. The proposal states that policies in the KSU Bulletin "are to be applied uniformly in all colleges and may be amended only by action of the Faculty Senate."

Policy regarding dropping classes was questioned after the College of Engineering sent a statement to students in January informing them that they would not be able to drop classes after the end of the third week of classes. University policy states that students may drop classes without WP or WF appearing on grade reports until after the 25th day of classes.

The proposal states, "The intent of the statement requiring reassignment by the dean or the dean's representative is to bring the student in contact with the advisement process of the college before withdrawing from courses. It is not intended to give deans or deans' representatives the power to deny the student's right to withdraw from courses."

The Academic Affairs Committee is also proposing a revision of the statement in the General Catalog and line schedules regarding credit/no credit courses. The revision reads as follows: "Certain courses for which the learning experience is based primarily on participation and/or attendance may be offered on a Credit/No Credit basis." Senate is scheduled to vote on the revision.

Senate is also scheduled to move on the course and curriculum changes in the College of Business Administration, the College of Arts and Sciences, the College of Agriculture and the College of Education.

Film world honors 'Gandhi' with eight Oscars

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Gandhi" dominated the 55th Academy Awards with eight Oscars Monday night, including best picture and the best actor award to newcomer Ben Kingsley. Meryl Streep was named best actress for her role as the tragic Polish survivor of a concentration camp in "Sophie's Choice."

"E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial," the movie about a lovable creature from outer space that has become the all-time box office champion, finished second in the sweepstakes with four Oscars.

Jessica Lange, as the vulnerable soap opera star in "Tootsie," and Louis Gossett Jr., as the tough but fair drill sergeant in "An Officer and a Gentleman," were best supporting actress and actor.

"All you other four guys, this is ours," Gossett told the losing nominees in his category as he accepted the prize. He was only the third black performer to win an Oscar — following Hattie McDaniel for "Gone With the Wind" in 1939 and Sidney Poitier for "Lilies of the Field" in 1963.

"Gandhi" the epic biography of the apostle of non-violence who led India to independence, picked up six other Oscars, including the prize for best director to Richard Attenborough.

It was the second year in a row that a British film won Hollywood's highest honor. Last year the best picture was the dark horse "Chariots of Fire."

IT WAS THE SECOND Oscar for Streep, who won the supporting award for "Kramer Vs. Kramer" in 1979.

Lange was also nominated for best actress in "Frances." Two other actresses have been doubly nominated — Fay Bainter and Teresa Wright, and both won in the supporting category.

"E.T," picked up awards for original score by John Williams, visual effects, sounds effects and sound.

"Gandhi," captured awards for best costume design, art direction cinematography and film editing in the nationally televised ceremony from the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion.

"Up Where We Belong" from "An Officer and a Gentleman," was named best song. It has music by Jack Nitzsche and Buffy Saint-Marie and lyrics by Will Jennings.

MICKEY ROONEY received an honorary Oscar in recognition of his long career as child star, song-and-dance man and dramatic actor.

"This award is for 60 years of work, they tell me," Rooney said. "It's really only for ... fun, for joy."

The award for documentary short subject went to the controversial "If You Love This Planet" by the National Film Board of Canada. Last month, the U.S. Justice Department labeled the anti-nuclear film and two others made in Canada as propaganda.

In accepting the award, producer Terri Nash said wryly, "For their tremendous effort in promoting this film, I'd like to thank the U.S. Department of Justice."

"Volver a Empezar (To Begin Again)," a Spanish movie about a writer exiled during the Franco era who returns home, was named best foreign film. That award was accepted by director Jose Luis Garci, who said: "All my life since I was a kid I dreamed of this moment. Well, dreams come true sometimes."

OTHER EARLY AWARDS went to "Gandhi" for best costume design, "Quest for Fire" for best makeup, "Tango" for best animated short, and "A Shocking Accident" for best live action short.

"Gandhi" and "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial" were the favorites for the top award of best picture. But Oscar has a knack for surprise, and there was a chance academy voters might favor "Tootsie" or even "The Verdict" or "Missing."

Millions of dollars hung on what would emerge from the envelopes on the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion stage. That was underscored last year by the "Chariots of Fire" upset. Prior to the award, the British-made film about runners in the 1924 Olympic Games enjoyed good, but not exceptional, business. Industry sources estimated that $40 million worth of tickets were sold because of the Oscar.

CAREERS WOULD ALSO be affected. After her victory as best actress for the 1979 movie, "Norma Rae," Sally Field was able to triple her salary to a million dollars a film.

This year, the race for actress seemed to have narrowed to Meryl Streep of "Sophie's Choice" and Jessica Lange of "Frances." History suggested that voters would instead honor Lange as supporting actress for "Tootsie." Fay Bainter and Teresa Wright, the other actresses to win double nominations, both won in the supporting category.

Open Mike entertainment draws to close

By LORI BERTELS
Staff Writer

Union Program Council Coffeehouse committee presented its final Open Mike Night of the semester on Monday in the Union Catskeller.

Richard Choquette, graduate in education and elementary administration, opened the show with "some of those beer drinkin', messed up love songs" like Jim Croce's "Workin' at the Carwash Blues," and got the audience laughing with the Steve Goodwin song "The Great Filling Station Rip-off."

Joy Crawford from Manhattan got on stage and did a "little bit of comedy." Quite an apt description.

Most of her jokes were obscene, with the exception of the ethnic jokes, and the audience seemed afraid to laugh or to acknowledge they had heard the jokes.

Paul Langholz, graduate in music, coming from an earlier performance in McCain Auditorium, "Music with Alun Hoddinott," appeared on stage in a tuxedo.

Langholz played the piano and sang some of his own compositions such as, "I'll Wait for You" and "I Need Someone Other Than Me."

In "Song for Susan," another of Langholz's tunes, the meaning of the song wasn't clear until he sang the words "...there aren't many things that I dislike, but I don't like you."

Review

Monte Selby, junior in music education, also appeared in a tuxedo, explaining that he hadn't had time to change. After a couple of minor mistakes while playing his guitar, he joked he "didn't have time to warm up either."

Selby played "Country Road," a song by his favorite singer, James Taylor.

Selby described his next song as a "national landmark for this year" and told the audience, "I think you'll know what it goes to." He proceeded to play "Suicide is Painless," the theme song from M*A*S*H.

Karla Tenbrink, junior in pre-professional business administration, was in the audience as a spectator, however, she was persuaded by her friends to participate.

Tenbrink showed her abilities as a pianist by playing a medley of fast-paced Billy Joel tunes.

The Streetside Quintet, who described themselves as "regulars at Open Mike Night," played various tunes from the 1950s such as "Pictures of Love," "Starlit Night" and a Drifters tune called "Under the Boardwalk."

When the quintet finished its set, the audience yelled for more. The Quintet played "Mr. Bubble," a special request from the audience.

The Veggies, a punk rock group from Edwards Hall who made a debut two weeks ago at the Edwards Hall Talent/No Talent Show, played its theme song "The Broccoli Rock" and finished up the evening with an improvised blues number.

Crime increases on farm property

By RHONDA WESSEL
Collegian Reporter

Once farmers could safely leave tractors in the fields, farmhouse doors open and gas barrels unlocked, but those days are gone, Ralph Utermoehlen, area extension specialist for community development, said.

"It (rural crime) is a growing problem and is rapidly increasing. According to the FBI, rural crime has increased 600 percent in the last 15 years.

"In fact, rural crime has increased 23 percent faster than crime in urban areas. We always thought that crime was in the urban areas, and that the country was a nice, safe, neighborly place," Utermoehlen said. "But things have changed."

The trend of population growth from urban to rural areas brings people from non-farming backgrounds to the country.

"There are a different type of people influxing the rural communities, especially in and around the urbanized areas. They are not the same neighborly folks that used to live in rural areas," he said.

Most family's farmhouses are at least a few miles from their neighbors', making the buildings more susceptible to break-ins. Criminals can break into a home, load up the stolen items and use recently constructed four-lane highways to get away before they are noticed, Utermoehlen said.

Another major problem aiding the rapid increase of rural crime is an inadequate amount of law protection.

"There is only so much law enforcement that can be paid for. We just don't have that kind of money, so the law can't cover all the areas," Utermoehlen said.

CRIMINALS TARGET rural homes for robbery attempts because rural homes often have more valuable items than urban homes.

"That's where the valuable stuff is — out in the country," he said. "Our farm homes are pretty well equipped. If you stop and think about it, we have TVs, stereos and most big farms now have home computers.

"The farm sheds are filled with valuable tools which are highly merchandizable and are sought after. The livestock out in the pastures is easy to get to and is also quite valuable," he said.

Farm robberies are also on the rise due to uniformity of machinery and farm tools, Utermoehlen said. Machinery manufactured by the same company looks alike, making it difficult to distinguish a stolen tractor as belonging to a certain farmer.

"That is one reason it is so popular to steal farm items. They are hard to identify because they all look alike," he said.

AS A SAFEGUARD, farm machinery and tools can be marked with an identification number, Utermoehlen said. Markers which inscribe metal are available. Most police departments have the metal engravers and will loan them to anyone wanting to mark equipment.

The mark should be placed in an area which is visible and should be easy to read, Utermoehlen said. A driver's license number is best for identification.

If a stolen item is recovered, authorities can trace the number and return the piece to its owner.

Currently, most stolen farm property is sold at public auction because farmers are unable to identify unmarked items, Utermoehlen said.

THREE THINGS must be present before a crime can take place: a criminal, opportunity and time to perform a crime without being detected.

"Opportunity means making it easy for the criminal to steal," Utermoehlen said.

One way farmers can make it more difficult for criminals to steal is to decrease opportunity. This can be accomplished by asking neighbors to watch a farm closely.

"We used to look out for each other quite a bit. Today the kids get on the school bus and go to town. The wife will go shopping or to her job in town, and the farmer gets on the tractor and goes to farm far away from the house, so there is no one around," Utermoehlen said.

"IF PEOPLE would look after each other a little more and report what they see, I think rural crime would decrease.

"Make it cost more for the criminal than it is really worth to him. Eliminate one or two of the three things that it takes for a crime to occur, and then it will become too costly for the criminal to risk," he said.

According to Utermoehlen, the FBI has established a new system for marking farm equipment. The system's identification numbers are registered in the National Crime Information Center. Catalogs with the proper numbers are available in all law enforcement offices.

"Most important is the prevention of crime. It is proven that thieves are hesitant to take items that can be readily identified," he said. "Placing decals and other visible information warning the potential thieves that this equipment has been marked and registered with the local law enforcement officials may help prevent a possible theft."

Farm policies warrant change, Schnittker says

By JEANIE JOHNSON
Agriculture Editor

Inappropriate decisions and ineffective policy-making by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in the past two years have caused the need for massive crop acreage reductions, John Schnittker, former U.S. undersecretary of agriculture, said Monday.

"The government, farmers and the trade are engaged in a crash effort to overcome in a few years the combined adverse effects of past and current legislation, faulty policy decisions, political interference in grain exports and record crops," he said.

Schnittker delivered the final address of the 1983 Lou Douglas Lecture Series, "Crisis on the Farm: At Home and Abroad," to approximately 150 people in Union Forum Hall.

Referring to the Payment-in-Kind (PIK) program, which returns surplus grain to farmers who idle their land, Schnittker said "the most massive acreage reduction program ever conducted" was in response to past mistakes which allowed grain surpluses to build up.

ACREAGE REDUCTION programs for 1982, and the original programs for 1983 for wheat and feed grains "contributed directly to the size of the surpluses we now face," he said.

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block's "failure to act in 1981 to limit quantities of that year's grain entering the farmer-owned reserve, and decisions to admit unlimited quantities of 1982 crop grains into the reserve, were equally damaging," Schnittker said.

In comments at a press conference Monday morning and the lecture that evening, Schnittker said PIK is the most expensive program ever conceived.

"Never before have more than 42 percent of the country's farmers signed up in acreage reduction," he said. Experts anticipated a 65 to 70 percent sign-up, and preliminary sign-up ranged from 78 to 82 percent, he said.

ALTHOUGH THE PROGAM is expensive, Schnittker said he believes PIK is appropriate for the current situation.

"PIK makes sense in the present context, because it would have been worse if he (Block) hadn't moved on this emergency basis. PIK will cost less than if they had gone on with the mistaken programs announced last year."

Schnittker said he foresees PIK continuing for three to five years without dramatic increases in exports or severe weather conditions.

Because current agricultural policies contain flaws and provide "no general plan on how to dig our way out," agricultural problems will bring to light a need for a new agricultural policy, he said.

"The federally funded voluntary acreage reduction programs for most of our crops have probably had their day, even though they may linger."

SECRETARY BLOCK promotes getting government out of agriculture only on the surface, Schnittker said. "Government is more deeply mired in agriculture than it has ever been.

John Schnittker

"The CCC (Commodities Corporation Commission) has now got $25 billion of government money invested in surplus commodities. The highest it ever was before, until about two years ago, was $8 billion. Expenditures for price and income support for farmers in the present and last fiscal years will be $30 billion more than in the preceeding two fiscal years."

The process by which farm and trade policies are decided is complex and accident-prone, he said.

"Agricultural policy has always been justified as helping mainly the small farmer but has seldom done so, especially in the past 20 years."

IN 1930, farmers were 25 percent of the U.S. population, but today they are less than 3 percent, he said.

In addition, 12 percent of farms have annual sales of more than $100,000, accounting for almost 70 percent of farm output. On the other end of scale, he said, are 88 percent of the farms which have annual sales of less than $100,000 and produce 30 percent of total output.

"We have a shrinking number of modest-sized and small farming operations which will either get larger or get out in the next decade," he said.

The small, part-time farmer is heavily dependent on non-farm income, but is "generally not interested in conventional farm policy since it has little to do with his family's economic welfare," Schnittker said.

On the other hand, the large farms, though mostly family farmed and operated, have become so large and capitalized that

Journalists call for accurate portrayal of Latinos by American mass media

By JEFF TAYLOR
Collegian Reporter

"There are those who say that our dues are not paid. What are dues and how do you pay them?"

This was a question posed to less than 15 Hispanic and other minority students during an informal lecture Monday in Union Forum Hall as part of the Festival Hispano Americano.

Speaking to the students were journalists Jose A. Rivera, vice-chairman of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and Jesus Chavarria, editor and publisher of Hispanic Business.

"The doom sayers of the Fourth Estate (a collective name for journalism and journalists) will probably reflect on today's meeting and say that this is really symptomatic of the apathy in the Latino community," Rivera said.

"The very fact that they would not even turn out for their own program represents a striking and telling sign that indeed may be their time has not come," he said, referring to the small crowd, but added "that is really a very incomplete thought."

"I'm not really saddened by the absence of Latino faces in the audience. What I am saddened by is the absence of white faces in the audience.

"At a time in our society when we say things are getting better, those who are supposedly bettering things (whites) aren't here. That saddens me a lot because that is a very pointed statement about where we have come," he said.

"WE BELONG to a community that ought not be required again and again to take the entrance exam into society. We passed the entrance exam long ago.

"Day after day, news show after news show, mini-cam after mini-cam, we get the raw view of everything we do wrong," Rivera said, adding Latinos are never portrayed as doing anything right.

Rivera explained that "hot news" is instantly transmitted onto the evening news while everything else is filmed, shot, recorded, brought to the studio and edited for possible use.

Because he works for the Corporation of Public Broadcasting, Rivera said he shares "responsibility and blame for everything I have said and I ought not be throwing stones at commercial networks."

CHAVARRIA SAID the media falsely portrays the Latino community as being troubled.

"The picture we get (from the media) is that of a troubled community, a community that is fraught with different kinds of social, economic and political problems," he said. But that isn't correct.

"I was shockingly surprised to find out that there were over 200,000 Hispanic-owned firms in the U.S. with annual receipts in excess of seven to eight billion dollars," he said.

Chavarria said the media first became interested in Hispanic affairs in the early 1970s when protests started over Hispanics' image in certain national advertisements. "The images that were projected were negative as opposed to positive," he said.

ACCORDING TO CHAVARRIA, Gannett Newspapers is the one major news organization that has been the most representative of minority interests.

Following that same thought, Rivera said, "The Fourth Estate and its power to influence millions of people by an announcement, program or programming decision is perhaps the most influential of all, because what they say and how they say it, is a significant barometer for the future actions of a generation.

"We have a right to our space, our place and to our time. We are a part of this universe; we are a part of this world; we are a part of this state; we are a part of this city," he said. "I'm not sure that I care for the patronizing affirmative action of a community that will only develop more subtle schemes for preventing my advancement.

"WHAT I CARE about is that when I stand in my space, someone isn't standing on my toes," Rivera said.

According to Rivera, the Latino community could become "one of the most driving forces in this country."

K-State has an unusually large Latino community, with many Puerto Rican students, he said.

"This community has an opportunity to learn from a group of people who come from 2,000 miles away," Rivera said. "They can learn things they may never see again, unless they go to one of the several pockets in the country where they are located."

Rivera concluded, "I have a very simple message. The message is that we are in fact the medium, we are the elements of which mass communications is made.

"We must make all people aware that which we are is important, that which we are is good and that which we are is equal."

In a question and answer session, a student stood and said, "A Hispanic believes that equal results is just as important as equal opportunity. I thank you for being here. It's their (students) loss if they weren't here.

"You are right — our dues are paid."

Ackert Hall lot to be revamped for easier access

The Ackert Hall parking lot (lots A-28 east and west) will be going through some major changes soon. Two of the lot's three existing entrances along Denison Avenue will be closed "as soon as Wednesday — weather permitting," Art Stone, director of Security and Traffic, said.

The remaining entrance will be widened to allow cars to enter and exit. The sidewalk along the south side of the lot will also be removed within the week.

The lot, located across from Goodnow Hall parking lot on Denison Avenue, will be closed during the summer for construction. The main reason for revamping the lot is to give better access to the area, Stone said.

"From May 16 until the first part of August, the lot will be closed so we can redo the whole lot," Stone said. "The people who normally park in the lot will park in the Goodnow parking lot."

Although the lot will be totally reconstructed over the summer, the number of parking spaces will not be drastically affected.

"There will be about the same number of parking places plus some added parking for motorcycles," Stone said.

Police suspect commandos in PLO official's death

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Police detained a 26-year-old man Monday in connection with the assassination of the PLO's European coordinator, and said they suspected a "commando group" did the killing.

Acting Interior Minister Roberto Carneiro declined to say whether the arrested man was suspected of shooting Issam Sartawi in a crowded hotel lobby at Albufeira, 12 miles from here, or whether he was considered an accomplice.

"We have strong suspicions that have led us to believe this man is connected with the assassination," Carneiro said. Police would not say whether the suspect was armed when he was captured.

They later issued a statement saying the killing "was carried out by a commando group consisting of several people." The statement did not elaborate.

Sartawi, a 47-year-old physician who had become a leading PLO advocate of reconciliation with Israel, was shot Sunday while attending the final day of the Socialist International conference in the seaside city of Albufeira.

While some conference delegates and other bystanders looked on in horror, the gunman walked up to Sartawi in the hotel lobby, shot him five times in the chest and head and fled through a nearby park as police shot at him.

Sartawi's personal secretary, Anwar Abu Eisheh, was wounded in the thigh in the attack but was recovering well Monday in the Albufeira hospital, a spokesman said. No one else was injured in the attack.

A radical Palestine Liberation Organization splinter group, known as the Abu Nidal faction or the Revolutionary Council of the Fatah, claimed responsibility for killing Sartawi. It denounced him as a "traitor" for his efforts to bring Israelis, Arabs and Palestinians together in peace efforts.

Eleven hours after the murder, Carneiro said, police went to a hotel in Lisbon and arrested a man who identified himself as Youssef al-Awad.

Carneiro said al-Awad had entered Portugal last Friday from Spain and was carrying a Moroccan passport and U.S. dollars that police thought might be forgeries.

"Police are still investigating whether the passport (and money are) false or genuine," said Carneiro.

Al-Awad was to appear Tuesday before magistrates who would rule if there were grounds for holding him.

It was not clear what led to the arrest. The news agency Noticias de Portugal said it was somehow linked to the discovery of an abandoned taxi about 95 miles from Albufeira on the highway to Lisbon.

Police said they were still seeking a taxi driver who fled a national guard patrol at Ourique, 40 miles from Albufeira on the Lisbon highway, and apparently later abandoned the car. The police did not elaborate.

In Paris, a French Socialist Party member who was at the conference and witnessed the killing said in a statement that he saw a second gunman in the hotel lobby who he believed shot Sartawi's secretary to create confusion to cover the assassin's escape.

Adelman may earn Senate vote, chance to head 'starved' agency

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a close Senate vote nearing on Kenneth L. Adelman's nomination as arms control chief, a House subcommittee was told Monday that the agency he would direct has been so "gutted, purged and starved" that it is unable to do its job.

"It is not going too far to say that the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency would be an international joke, were it not that the situation is so tragic," testified Dr. William H. Kincade, executive director of the Arms Control Association, a non-profit, non-partisan research group on arms control policy.

The Senate is beginning debate Tuesday and is to vote Thursday on President Reagan's nomination of Adelman, 36, deputy U.S. representative to the United Nations, to succeed the ousted Eugene V. Rostow as the agency's director.

Adelman's supporters and opponents both predict a close vote, but one of the leaders of the Republican opposition, Sen. Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland, concedes that "you have to give the presumption to the president."

The testimony of Kincade, a former naval intelligence officer and author on arms control issues, was seconded by other high former officials of the arms control agency in appearances before the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on international security.

Former agency director Paul C. Warnke, who led the Carter administration's arms control negotiating team with the Soviet Union, said the agency is useless "unless the president and his secretary of state have a genuine interest in arms control."

Herbert Scoville Jr., who was assistant director of the agency from 1963 to 1969, said the agency "would appear at the moment to be in no position to carry out on even a modest scale its most basic function of providing the president with recommendations on arms control policies."

Kincade voiced concern about the "apparent gutting, purging and starving of the government's institutional base for arms control policy and research."

He said the agency staff has been reduced in recent years from 199 to 154, a cut of 25 percent. He said 30 percent of the agency's top positions are either vacant or are filled by acting officials.

"Perhaps more importantly, morale among agency staff is at an all-time low," he told the subcommittee.

"Finally," he said, "the nomination to the directorship of an individual with very problematical professional qualifications or interest in arms control, and with equally problematical access to either the secretary of state or the president, has worked an additional and gratuitous hardship on the agency."

Bill affects lobbyist finances

TOPEKA (AP) — A bill doubling the number of financial disclosure statements lobbyists must file with the state was among 16 measures signed into law Monday by Gov. John Carlin.

The bill requires special interest lobbyists to file finanical disclosure reports every month with the Public Disclosure Commission to report expenditures when they exceed $100 total for a month.

The bills raises the reporting exemption for individual items from $1 to $2 and exempts lobbyists from disclosing any gifts given to state officials or employees valued less than $20.

Proponents say the changes will result in more accurate reporting of lobbyist spending.

The new law takes effect July 1.

Another measure signed into law requires cities to provide the Department of Revenue with notice of land annexations and a map of any areas annexed to aid the department in collection of city sales taxes. The department complained that it was having difficulty collecting taxes in newly annexed areas because it was not notified.

Rooftop game

Campus guides offer unique service by escorting special interest groups

Whether it is a tour through the computer science building, or a tour of the planetarium, 16 tour guides have a special job to do for the University, Norma Ross, supervisor of the tour guides, said.

"Every year we advertise (for tour guides) in the Collegian in February and we accept applications. We have a screening committee that screens them, then we interview a large number. I think this time we interviewed about 30 applicants and we only hired seven," she said.

Students selected are paid minimum wage.

The tour guides go to a training session, usually the first Saturday in March when there is usually someone from the registrar's office to answer their questions.

"We usually have someone talk about how you communicate with your guests," Ross said. "We have someone from Lafene talk about emergency procedures, and we usually have someone speak on the history of the University."

Ross said Kelli Walden, student coordinator of the guides, outlines the duties of the tour guides and explains scheduling procedures.

There are two categories of tours, Ross said, one of which is the regularly scheduled daily walking tours. These depart from Anderson Hall at 1:30 p.m. Monday through Friday during spring and fall.

The other type is the special interest tour programs. These are for anyone from elementary school to senior citizen groups. Ross said two or three requests are received each day for special interest tours.

For the special tours, the guide meets members of the group as they arrive on campus and escorts them to the building in which they are interested. The department involved then gives a lecture on the topic of interest.

Ross said the guides are asked to learn a script given to them at the training session. When requests for tours are received, Walden schedules one of the guides to give them.

Bob Bruce, former director of University Relations, began the tour guide program, Ross said.

"I have been doing it three years, and I think it was in existence two years before that," she said.

Ross said in 1980 the tour guides hosted approximately 1,000 visitors. Last year they hosted over 4,000.

"It is getting to the point where we cannot do it all," she said.

Schnittker

"they risk losing the sympathy and support of urban voter and elected representatives," he said.

POLICY must be readjusted to consider the implications of changing farm characteristics, such as increasing amounts of income coming from non-farm sources, he said.

"In 1980, off-farm income accounted for nearly 65 percent of total income of U.S. farm people, compared to 42 percent in 1960."

According to Schnittker, the United States needs to start over on export expansion.

"Agricultural exports increased so fast and so regularly and so easily in the 1970s that people thought it would go on forever," he said. However, after the grain embargo of 1980, the situation changed.

"LAST SEASON we exported over 400 million bushels less than two seasons earlier. From June 1982 to May this year, U.S. wheat exports will decline some 300 million bushels below the previous season, while Canadians will export 100 million bushels more."

Competition for grain exports will put increasing pressure on the United States, Schnittker said, but "the U.S. is not prepared for an all-out agricultural trade war."

Before the grain embargo, the United States provided 60 to 65 percent of the Russian grain supply. Now it supplies 15 to 20 percent, he said.

Schnittker said he sees export capabilities increasing through credit programs, export subsidy programs and more aggressive sales work by U.S. companies.

EUROPE HAS a standing offer of subsidizing exports, he said. "I believe the U.S. will probably have to get into a continuing export subsidy program within the next year or will have to lower its price support levels."

Schnittker said current policies are on the way out. "As I see it, there is little evidence that national food and agricultural policy is doing more than marking time.

"There is a new agenda somewhere ahead for farm, food and trade policy. Perhaps we will get to it in a few more years if the crisis worsens or lingers."

The new policy will include matching farmers' productivity to demand, revising the dairy price support program, developing a coherent trade policy that does not include embargoes and designing policy that takes into consideration the characteristics of present-day farmers, Schnittker said.

Cowboy pitcher no-hits K-State; 'Cats lose two

By LARRY BOYD
Collegian Reporter

If the Oklahoma State baseball team formed a fraternity based on its performance against Coach Dave Baker's K-State Wildcats, it might be called Swing Getta Hitta.

The Cowboys did a lot of swinging and hitting Monday afternoon enroute to doubleheader sweep with easy 13-0 and 9-1 wins against the Wildcats at Frank Myers Field.

Staff/John Sleezer

ABOVE: Top of the sixth in the first game, and the scorekeeper adds two more Oklahoma State runs to the ever-growing score. BELOW: Oklahome State's Steve O'Donnell sucessfully steals second base after a late throw to K-State shortstop Mark Teague.

The Cowboys won the first game with the help of 1982 All-American Robbie Wine, who hit two home runs in two attempts, and Pete Incaviglia, who had a grand-slam homer. The Cowboys chalked up 14 hits as OSU pitcher Dennis Livingston recorded the ninth no-hitter in Oklahoma State history against Big Eight foes, as he held the home team scoreless and hitless.

The victories gave the Cowboys a 3-3 conference mark and a 21-9 overall record. The Wildcats are now 16-9 overall and 0-4 in the Big Eight.

Baker credited the visitors with playing well but said his team didn't play up to its capabilities.

"We're a better ball club than what we showed today," the sixth-year coach said. "We were adequate on defense but our pitching wasn't sharp and we didn't hit the baseball like we're capable of hitting it. To win these kind of ball games, you have to do everything well."

In the first game, Wine, whose last six hits have been home runs, got things started for the visitors with a three-run homer in the top of the first, scoring Glenn Edwards and Scott Wade. Wine's other home run was a solo shot in the third.

With the Cowboys ahead 7-0 in the fourth, Incaviglia blasted the grand-slam homer to allow the Cowboys to highlight the five-run inning. Edwards, Wine and Joe Gorman scored on the shot.

The game was the first Big Eight game to be called after seven innings due to the 10-run rule, which is new this year.

In seven innings, Livingston struck out 12 batters and walked nine. The Cowboys played the entire game without committing an error. Scott McClanahan was the losing pitcher. In three innings, he gave up eight hits and six runs. He had one walk and one strikeout.

In the second game, the first innning was again a big factor as the Cowboys tallied five runs. Knapp walked and came home on a triple by Wade. Edwards and Wine then walked to load the bases, and Incaviglia picked up three RBIs with a triple. Incaviglia later scored on a sacrifice by Kevin Fowler. Incaviglia was the leading hitter in the game with a triple and a single in three tries.

Oklahoma State added two runs in both the third and fourth innings to gain their final score.

The Wildcats picked up their only run of the day in the fifth, when Colbert walked and scored on a double by Don Grause.

For the winners, Gary Kanwisher claimed his fifth win of the season against two defeats. He pitched seven innings, allowing one run on three hits. Mike Wilkerson was the loser. He gave up seven runs on seven hits in three innings.

The next challenge for the Wildcats will be a double-header against Marymount at 1:30 p.m. Thursday at Frank Myers Field.

'Faith in God' is top priority for K-State javelin thrower

By TRACY ALLEN
Assistant Sports Editor

"Jesus looked at them and said, 'With man this is impossible, but with God all things are possible.'" — Matthew 19:26

For Ray Hansen, being one of the nation's top javelin throwers hasn't come as easy as some people would expect. With former K-State greats such as Bill Floerke and Joe Bramlage donning the record books, you would think that Hansen would have a hard time meeting the standards of the two athletes.

But due to hard work and faith in God, Hansen has been able to ignore the past stars and has soared to the top as one of the all-time leading javelin throwers for K-State.

"I used to be a distance runner in high school," Hansen said. "But in my sophomore year, I started gaining a lot of weight and it began to affect my running. So I gave up running and started to throw the javelin. I had my hopes set on running the mile my sophomore year, but I couldn't 'cause I got too big."

According to Hansen and other track members, the all-American has been a motivation to team members both during and after competition. Hansen said he believes that part of the reason for his motivation has been his faith in God.

Staff/Allen Eyestone

Ray Hansen... K-State's javelin specialist.

"UNLESS A PERSON has faith in himself and faith in God, you won't be able to compete the way you want to," Hansen said. "I like to think of myself as a positive thinker. I place all my faith in God because He is the one that is going to help me.

"You have to have inner peace with yourself if you're going to reach the goals you have set for yourself," he added. "For me, my faith in God has helped me to have that peace."

With hard work, Hansen has had no problems in establishing himself as a national-caliber javelin thrower. In two short seasons, Hansen has already earned his way into Wildcat record books.

In last season's NCAA Outdoor Championship, Hansen was able to earn all-American status by finishing 10th in the meet with a throw of 248-11. He also owns a personal best of 267-8, which is the third best throw among active collegians.

BECAUSE OF INJURIES, Hansen has been unable to fully reach his goals. However, he said he believes his injuries have helped him emotionally.

"Up until last year, I had an injury every year that kept me out for two to three weeks," he said. "It (the injury) would hurt me because I am competitive and I like to compete. But I think my injuries have helped me. I don't think I was quite as ready to get on the national scene then like I am now."

Hansen said he also believes his injuries helped him spiritually.

"It hasn't hindered my spiritual life," Hansen said. "I don't blame God for my injuries because He had no part in it. If you don't stretch out or do the exercises you're supposed to do, then you can't blame God. An athlete knows what he is supposed to do to prepare for competition. If he doesn't do it, then he can't put the blame on someone else."

HANSEN SAID one of his main supports has come from his wife. "My wife is very supportive of me," he said. "When I do well, she does well. When I do bad, she's behind me all the way. She's always there when I need her."

According to Hansen, his faith has made him a role model for other team members. "I don't try to push religion on any of the team members," he said. "I don't think that's something I'm supposed to do. Everyone on the team knows where I stand with religion and they respect me for that. I feel that if I can be an encouragement to those on the squad, especially those who are having problems, then I feel that I have accomplished what I'm supposed to do."

Not only do team members see Hansen as a motivator but so does head track coach Steve Miller. "Ray's one of the best javelin throwers in the country," Miller said. "He is a very team-oriented guy. He's very devoted to his sport which is good."

Ballesteros wins Masters tourney

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Seve Ballesteros, bolstered by a birdie-eagle start, took advantage of Tom Watson's three-putt self-destruction and stalked unchallenged to a four-stroke victory Monday in the day-late windup of the 47th Masters golf tournament.

Ballesteros, 26, a Spaniard who twice has declined credentials to play on the American PGA Tour, acquired his third title in golf's Big Four events with a final round 69 and a 280 total, eight strokes under par on the still-wet Augusta National Golf Club course.

Ballesteros, took command immediately with an approach shot to six feet for a first-hole birdie and followed with a wood-club second shot to 10 feet for an eagle-three on the long No.2 hole.

That put him in front to stay. His playing partner, Watson, once got close with a 35 or 40 feet putt for an eagle on the eighth, cutting Ballesteros' lead to two strokes.

But Watson suddenly fell victim to problems that were, for him, extremely unusual. He calls the phenomena "hammermitts." His putting touch, among the best in golf, deserted him. He three-putted three times in a row. And Ballesteros was home safe.

Ben Crenshaw and Kite, former teammates at Texas, tied for second at 284. Neither, however, ever really got in the title chase.

Hale Irwin, twice a U.S. Open winner, and Craig Stadler, the defending Masters champion, were next at 286. Stadler stumbled to a fat 76. The only others in the field able to break par were Dan Pohl and Lanny Wadkins; they were at 287. Each had a final round 71.

Arnold Palmer, the 53-year-old master who gave his aging army a nostalgic thrill with his first round 68, couldn't keep it going. He struggled over the rolling hills, still wet from the rains that washed out Friday's play and disrupted the tournament schedule, in 78. He played the back in 41 and finished at 296.

Northern Ireland terrorists sentenced to life in prison

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Two Protestant extremists were sentenced to life imprisonment Monday and 12 others were given terms ranging from 5 to 20 years in one of the biggest terrorist trials ever held in Northern Ireland. Two other people were acquitted.

All were members of the outlawed Ulster Volunteer Force, a Protestant counterpart of the Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army. They shouted the Protestant battle cry "No surrender!" and "This isn't justice!" when Judge Donald Murray passed sentence in the Belfast Crown Court after a nonjury trial.

Four of the 14 had to be held down by guards.

Murray gave three concurrent life sentences to UVF leaders Robert Wilson, 38, and Hugh Seymour, 28, for the killing of James Burns, reputed deputy commander of the IRA Provisionals, in February 1981 and for possessing guns and explosives.

The other 12 were convicted of attacks on Catholics, bombings and smuggling weapons from the United States into the province.

All 16 men were identified by an informer-turncoat, former UVF Belfast commander Joseph Bennett, 36, who was granted immunity from prosecution although he admitted involvement in two killings.

One was the fatal stabbing of postmistress Maureen McCann, 64, during a holdup near Belfast last summer. Bennett, who was released from prison three years ago after serving half a 12-year sentence for possessing explosives, also admitted supplying the guns used to kill Burns.

Bennett, who was condemned to death by the UVF after he turned informer, was smuggled out of Northern Ireland with his family by the government several weeks ago and now is in hiding at a secret location, informed sources reported.

Highway

"THERE HAS BEEN no indication from the governor as to whether he would accept such a proposal," Bauman added.

Bauman also said that discussion about the gas tax has been "off and on" for a long time. She said it has not received much attention because of a general lack of support until now.

She added that "Speaker Hayden (Speaker of the House Mike Hayden, R-Atwood) wants bipartisan support" before the Kansas Legislature spends a lot of time considering the proposal.

However, Hayden said Monday in a Republican forum he supports the increased gas tax. He said motor fuels tax should be increased so that education and highways do not have to fight for the same money as the situation would if the governor's proposal of using state general fund for state highways should pass.

FUNDING OF HIGHWAYS and whether to spend more money than the GOP leaders are proposing for state aid to education will be the focal points when the Legislature reconvenes April 20 for a three-day cleanup session.

The highway issue boils down to the GOP gas tax increase against Carlin's proposal to transfer money from other funds.

"We're going to stick to our guns on highway funding...and before it's all over we're not going to fail...We're going to do what we think is best for the people of Kansas," Hayden said.

The proposed one-time transfer of $30 million in freeway fund money — which has been reserved for new highway projects — to the highway fund so it could be used to rehabilitate existing state roads came from Doyen, and was proffered publicly for the first time Monday.

HAYDEN INDICATED he would support it. Coupled with the three-cent increase in the state's gasoline and diesel fuel gallonage taxes, it would provide $72 million more for rebuilding state and local highways and streets. The state would share one-third of the gas tax increase, or $14 million, with local units under the GOP plan.

"It gets us $72 million," noted Hayden. "That isn't a lot when you look at our needs, but it certainly is better than no program."

He said Democratic Gov. John Carlin has proposed five programs and five years, none of which the Legislature will support. This year, Carlin is proposing the transfer of $21 million from the state general fund and $35 million from the freeway fund to the highway fund to beef up highway repair work, then wants to transfer the remainder of the $105 million now in the freeway fund during the following two years for a three-year program.

HAYDEN SAID Republicans won't go for that, declaring, "It violates the principle of user fees" — the concept that those who use the roads should pay the taxes that support them.

"The governor is determined to see progress when the Legislature returns on education and highways," commented Press Secretary Mike Swenson in Topeka. "This Republican plan is woefully inadequate. It would provide only the $30 million transfer to address 90 percent of the highway work, and that just isn't enough."

Both the governor and the GOP leaders want $28 million to match $55 million which will be available in federal funds as a result of the 5-cent gasoline tax increase that went into effect April 1. However, that $73 million can be used only to rebuild bridges and interstate highways, leaving only the $30 million transfer for the rest of Kansas' 10,000-mile non-interstate system.

Tax

again and in the end the consumer will be paying 8 cents in taxes and the additional 5 cents from the oil companies, he said.

"IN THE END, the consumer is the one who pays the tax, not the wholesaler, retailer or the big oil companies — but the consumer," Enlow said.

Local gas and service station personnel interviewed all said the additional costs from taxes and price increases will be passed on to the consumers.

The policy of the Town and Country Market, a market spokesman said, is that the Market is a business and is operating to make money, so the tax should be passed on to the consumer with higher prices.

Management of Bottger's Marine near Tuttle Creek Boulevard, said the higher prices shouldn't affect boating because if people can afford a boat, they certainly could afford higher gas prices.

Traveling and the restaurant business will not be greatly affected by the gas tax, John Peterson, desk manager of the Manhattan Holidome, said.

"There is a possibility of a slight effect; we have mostly people attending conventions or businessmen who have to travel (booked in the Holidome)," Peterson said. "We are not a roadside motel. This is where many of the businesses will be lost in the motel industry due to the tax. We will be affected very slightly if any at all."

Faculty Senate OKs guidelines for fee requests

Faculty Senate approved on Tuesday a Committee on University Planning proposal concerning the allocation guidelines of a special student fee.

The proposal sets guidelines for the individual colleges which will be requesting funding for special projects, should a special fee be charged. The proposal includes the stipulations that the college must show a need for such funds, that the requested money be used only for the amount of the cost of materials needed, and that assistance will be available for students who cannot pay the special fees.

In other action, senate passed a policy concerning the "Interpretation of Intent of Academic Procedures and Policies." The new policy states that decisions made by the Academic Affairs Committee with regard to dropping and adding classes and transferring colleges are academic procedures rather than academic standards, and are uniformly applied to all colleges and can only be amended by senate action.

Some graduate students may also have options on how they wish to be graded in some of their credit/no credit classes next fall. Senate passed a bill which for courses in research, numbered 898 (report), 899 (thesis), and 999 (dissertation), may be offered on a letter grade basis. In the past the courses were only offered on a credit/no credit basis.

The bill stipulates that the decision of whether to assign a grade or give credit will be reserved for the faculty member involved.

Senate also passed course and curriculum changes for the colleges of Business, Arts and Sciences, Agriculture and Education.

Graduate courses previously approved by the Graduate Council were also OK'd.

A proposed honorary doctorate nomination for Roy Bainer in agricultural engineering passed unanimously.

Slattery offers gas pricing package, works toward 'best of both worlds'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressman Jim Slattery Tuesday proposed a package of natural gas pricing changes he hoped would become the basis for compromise when a House subcommittee begins drafting a gas bill in a few weeks.

Slattery, a Democrat, said the bill is an effort to have the best of both worlds — continued controlled low prices for old gas and lower prices for new gas already decontrolled — for his northeast Kansas district.

But he said the balance struck in the proposal should appeal to a broader spectrum of lawmakers than other natural gas pricing measures now before Congress.

"I want to come up with something that is politically passable," Slattery told reporters at a news conference in his office. "The important thing we have to do is to deal with this problem before next winter."

Slattery is a member of the House Energy subcommittee on fossil fuels, which has been holding hearings on what to do about high natural gas prices and hopes to begin drafting a bill late this month. Joining Slattery as a cosponsor of the new legislation was Rep. Dan Coats, R-Ind., also a member of the panel.

Most of the bill's provisions already are found in other legislation, either that proposed by the Reagan administration or an alternative backed by Reps. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., and Dan Glickman, D-Kan.; and Sens. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., John Danforth, R-Mo., and Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo.

The bill would:

— Give pipelines and producers one year to get out of so-called "take or pay" contracts which now force pipelines to buy expensive decontrolled gas for which they have no market while cheaper gas is going unused. Upon renegotiation of the contracts, the affected gas would be removed from price controls.

— Retain price controls on "old" gas discovered before 1977. Current law includes permanent controls on such gas, but the Reagan proposal would lift those price ceilings in 1986.

— Require the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to make sure pipeline gas purchases are "prudent" before allowing the pipelines to pass on higher gas costs to consumers.

— Create a category of "new, new" gas, or gas discovered after passage of the law, which would be exempt from price controls. This provision is designed to encourage continued exploration for new supplies.

The bill does not call for any rollback in prices or for extension of the price controls contained in the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act, as in the Gephardt-Kassebaum proposal.

Slattery said the bill was an effort to take the best elements from existing legislative proposals and put them together to attract votes from gas-producing states, which are heavily represented on the subcommittee.

He said the problems of the nation on gas pricing are represented in his district, where some consumers receive cheap old gas from the Hugoton fields in southeast Kansas, and others served by a different pipeline get expensive gas whose price was forced up by take-or-pay contracts.

The price for those in the eastern part of the district now paying higher prices would drop "sharply" under the bill, Slattery contended, while the prices in the western part of the district would relatively unaffected.

Defeat looms in future of MX missile plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The congressman who led the successful fight to deny the Defense Department money to produce the MX missile predicted Tuesday that the new nuclear weapon will finally go to its grave this year.

But the MX critic, Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, D-N.Y., also said he believes the margin of defeat for the missile will be far closer this time than the 245-176 vote last December by which the House deleted the $988 million earmarked for building the first five missiles.

Addabbo, chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on defense, said part of the reason, besides the simple reluctance of some congressman to kill the MX, is that a presidential advisory commission has linked its development to a proposal to build a small, single-warhead missile that would be more politically popular.

In what was seen as an effort to make the MX program more palatable, the panel recommended Monday that 100 of the 96-ton, 72-foot MX missiles be placed in underground silos now housing Minuteman III weapons in Wyoming and Nebraska, while an arsenal of 1,000 15-ton mobile missiles is developed and produced over the next decade.

Some congressional moderates, including Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, have long supported the concept of the smaller, single-warhead missiles, dubbed "Midgetmen," instead of the MX "Peacekeeper" intercontinental missile, which would carry 10 warheads each.

"We will not win by the majority that we did last December, but we still have enough of those members of the House" who consider the MX a waste of money and will defeat it, Addabbo told reporters.

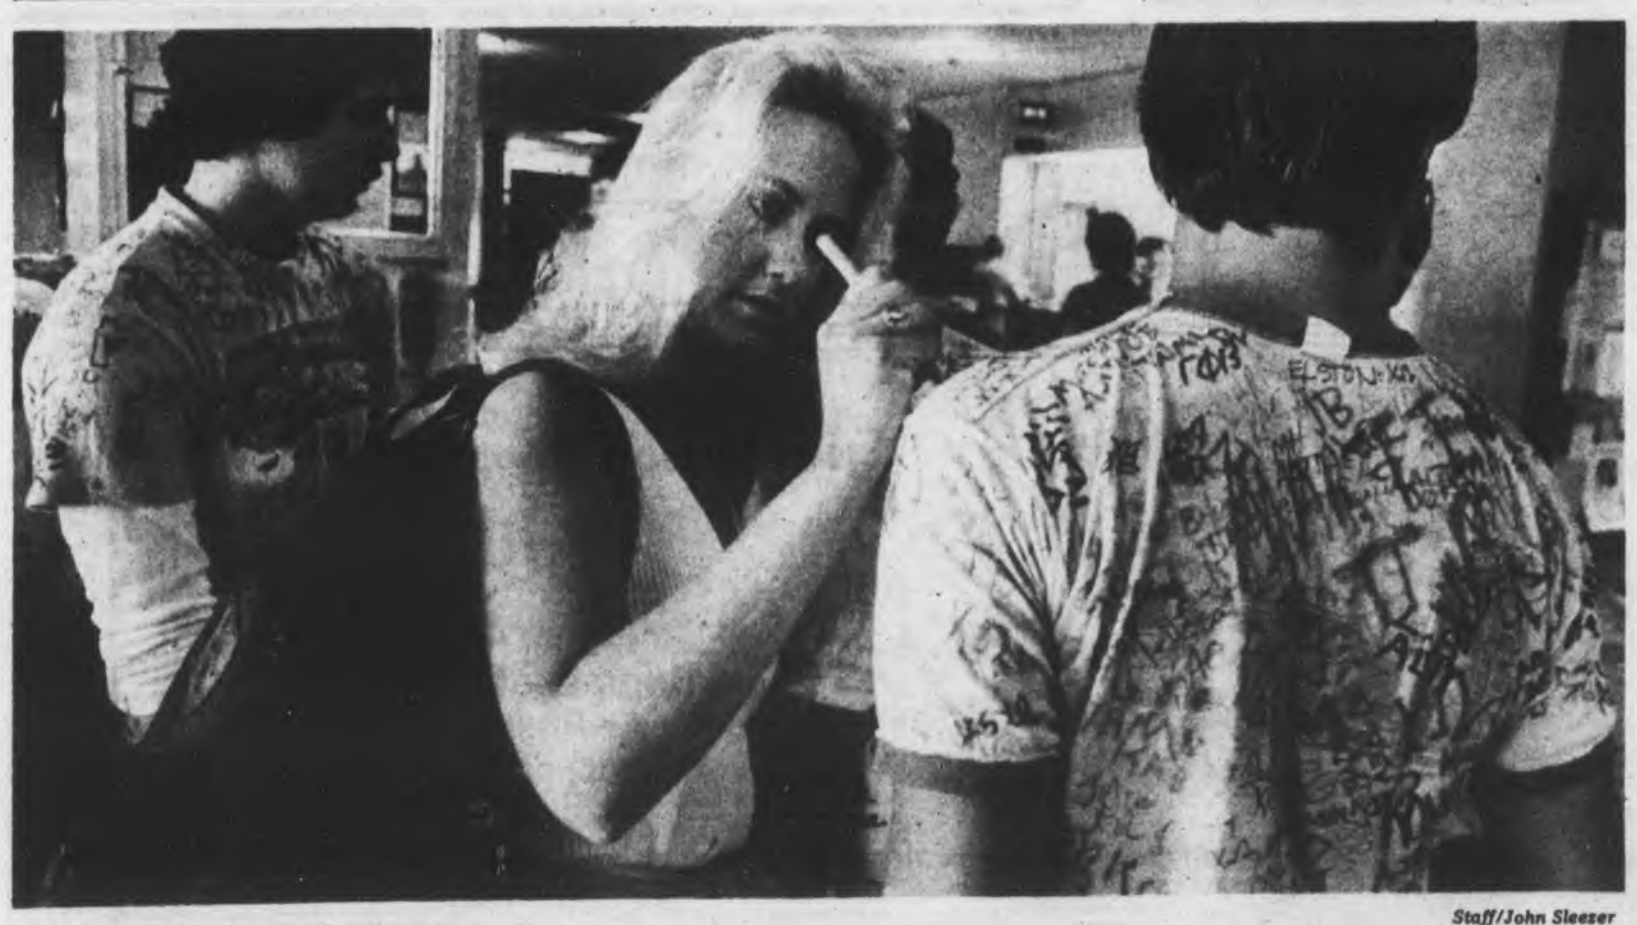
AT A SEPARATE news conference Tuesday, Paul Warnke, chief arms control negotiator for the Carter administration and an MX opponent, noted that the report of the presidential study commission says the "window of vulnerability" of U.S. nuclear forces to Soviet attack is not as serious as the Reagan administration had contended.

Warnke said that so-called window "has never been anything other than a crosshatch painted on a brick wall."

He said the MX "is not necessary for deterrence," but he did applaud the suggestion that a small, single-warhead missile be developed.

In Moscow, Oleg Bykov, a leading Soviet arms control specialist, said in an interview with The Associated Press that the latest U.S. MX missile plan represented a "rather sinister" step forward in the arms race, and that the Soviets were readying a comparable missile system of their own.

"Of course, it takes two to make an arms race," Bykov said. "And the Soviet leadership has put it in so many words: We will respond."



REP. JACK EDWARDS of Alabama, ranking Republican on Addabbo's subcommittee, had said Monday that he also foresaw a close vote on the MX missile and predicted that President Reagan will become heavily involved in the lobbying for the missile.

At the time of the MX vote last December, some House members said they opposed production money because they questioned the wisdom of the administration's since-abandoned plan to base the missiles in closely spaced, "dense-pack" formation.

That congressional rejection of the latest of more than 30 proposed MX basing plans since the mid-1970s led Reagan to create the bipartisan study commission. The president is not expected to accept and forward the panel's report to Congress until next week.

ADDABBO SAID IT IS uncertain what form Reagan's request for legislative ap-

This week's Crime Stoppers crime-of-the-week involves the burglaries of five fraternities.

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, a non-profit organization, provides details of an unsolved crime each week. Citizens are encouraged to provide information needed to assist police in solving this and other crimes. Informants, who will remain anonymous, can receive cash rewards of up to $1,000.

During the early morning hours of April 2, someone entered the fraternity house at 500 Sunset Avenue and removed a television set. Entry was apparently gained through an unsecured basement window. Once inside, the intruder located the TV set in a basement lounge. The suspect picked up the TV and left through the front door. It was an RCA XL100 color set approximately four years old.

Five fraternities have been burglarized during the past three weeks. Each time, the suspect has entered the unsecured lodges and removed valuables while the students were in other parts of the homes.

Stolen property includes boots, radios, jewelry, stereo equipment, a cable TV encoder and color TV sets. The losses total more than $1,200.

Anyone with information on these crimes, location of stolen property or information on any other crime should call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777.

Stateroom extends hours for studying

Because of a need for more campus locations for studying, Union Governing Board has voted to extend Union Stateroom hours during the last three weeks of school.

"Since there is a certain shortage of study areas, we'll open up what's necessary for those who want to study," Walt Smith, Union director, said. The Catskeller will also be available for late-night studying, he said.

Starting April 25, the Stateroom will be open from 7 a.m. to midnight Monday through Friday; 8 a.m. to midnight Saturdays; 4 p.m. to midnight Sunday, May 1; and 1 p.m. to midnight Sunday, May 8. Regular hours will resume Wednesday, May 11.

Smith said he hopes to have enough business in the Stateroom to offset energy and labor costs. The grill will be closed after 8 p.m., but drinks, cookies and cold sandwiches will be available most of the night.

In the past, extra study tables have been provided in the Stateroom during finals week, Smith said, and if extending the hours this year is successful, the extra tables will not be set up.

Kyle Exline, senior in geology and UGB alumni representative, made the motion to extend the hours at the board's Monday meeting.

Washington widens lead for Chicago mayor

CHICAGO — Rep. Harold Washington, boosted by a huge black turnout and running well among Hispanics, claimed a widening lead Tuesday over Republican Bernard Epton in his bid to become the city's first black mayor.

But Epton, a white millionaire lawyer hoping to become the city's first Republican mayor in 52 years, said he was optimistic he would win his battle against the Democratic congressman, which prompted a record turnout of voters largely divided along racial lines.

With 2,529 of 2,914 precincts reported, Washington had 584,131 votes or 52.7 percent to Epton's 519,262 or 46.9 percent. Socialist candidate Ed Warren received 3,254 votes.

The Chicago Board of Election Commissioners said 85 percent of the 1.6 million voters had cast ballots, surpassing the record 77 percent who turned out in the Feb. 22 primary in which Washington narrowly captured the Democratic nomination in a three-way race.

Seventy percent of 'big 3' athletes graduate

WICHITA — About 70 percent of the basketball and football players who spend four or five years on scholarships at Kansas' three major universities earn degrees, according to a survey by the Wichita Eagle-Beacon.

The newspaper survey, conducted by reporter Mal Elliott, covered 1977-1981 and excluded dropouts and athletes who transferred before their senior seasons. Of the 249 scholarship student athletes during those years, 174, or 69.6 percent, received degrees.

State officials and an American Council on Education spokesman in Washington, D.C., said there are no directly comparable statistics for the general student population. But council records show of every 10 United States college students, four will get degrees within four years at the school where they first enroll, two will transfer and get degrees, one will finish a degree in longer than four years and three won't get degrees.

The University of Kansas had the highest average in the Eagle-Beacon survey with more than 84 percent. K-State followed with 62 percent. About 57 percent of the players during that period at Wichita State received degrees.

In October, Sporting News magazine published a survey showing less than 50 percent of the senior regulars on 1981-1982 major college basketball teams received degrees. The survey showed the Big Eight's record was 50 percent and the Missouri Valley Conference 44 percent.

Salina man aboard missing B-52 bomber

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Air Force search crews were frustrated again Tuesday by snowy weather and a low cloud ceiling, and found no trace of a missing B-52 bomber with seven people aboard, including a Salina man.

The search for the plane, which disappeared on a practice bombing mission Monday, was called off Tuesday night. Officials said the search would resume early today.

Capt. Jerry Garlington of the Air Force rescue headquarters at Scott Air Force Base, Ill., said most of the low-lying areas of the sprawling test range where the plane was last heard from have been checked. He said weather forecasters were predicting a brief break in the cloud cover today when 20 planes are to resume the search.

Arson suspected in fatal Kansas City fire

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Firefighters poked through the rubble of a gutted Midtown apartment building Tuesday in the wake of a suspected arson fire that killed one person and injured 11 others.

Authorities identified the fatality victim as Opal P. Robison, 51. Fire and ambulance officials said she apparently had a heart attack shortly after she was pulled from from the smoke-filled building.

Four apartment residents, five firefighters and two paramedics were injured in the blaze. Three residents remained hospitalized Tuesday.

Authorities said the fire, which caused an estimated $250,000 in damage and prompted some people to leap from upper-story apartments, was being investigated as an arson-homicide.

Physicist disclaims 'father' image for H-Bomb

GRAND FORKS, N.D. — Physicist Edward Teller says he objects to being called "the father of the hydrogen bomb."

"The H-bomb has never sent me a Father's Day card," he said Monday before a lecture at the University of North Dakota.

The hydrogen bomb was "the work of many people," the 75-year-old scientist said, adding that he and the others involved in the earlier atomic bomb development near Los Alamos, N.M., should have talked more about the broader implications of the scientific breakthrough.

Weather

Oh, no — not again! Rain mixed with snow is possible today. The high will be near 50 and the low near 25. At this rate, spring won't arrive until summer.

'Hands-off' policy hampers fee issue

Faculty Senate's failure to hear discussion on a student academic service fee at its Tuesday meeting is inexcusable.

Any delay in discussing the fee will only make it easier for the administration to pass additional costs — possibly improper costs — on to students for the fall semester.

Already, President Duane Acker has asked the Kansas Board of Regents for a delay in proposing any fee increases at K-State until the May meeting of the regents. If the delay is granted, it would be June before any fees would be approved for the 1983-84 academic year.

By delaying discussion of the proposal, Faculty Senate is losing valuable time in which to determine what, if any, fees would be appropriate for the University.

The University of Kansas is considering a similar fee of $15 which would be used for computing, equipment and library acquisitions. After extensive debate, the fee gained approval of the KU Student Senate by two votes; however, it went to a campuswide referendum Monday and Tuesday. The referendum was voided because less than 3,900 of the student body voted.

Allowing any type of fee to be assessed at K-State without voicing pros and cons through Faculty Senate, Student Senate or a referendum would be a disservice to the students of the University. By allowing the issue to slide past Tuesday's meeting because the session ran long and a motion was made to adjourn, Faculty Senate suppressed an open debate on a potentially volatile issue.

Such a hands-off approach implies that either senate does not care what happens with the fee or that it does not want to bring up the controversial issue. Let's hope neither holds true.

Biegler merits chance

Editor,

I have been recently made aware of the fact that Craig Biegler has not been rehired as band director for the K-State marching band next year. I couldn't believe my ears! For the first time in years, instead of having hundreds of bodies who couldn't march, much less play instruments, the band was playing truly quality music. It was a wonderful and long-overdue change.

And now, I find out Biegler isn't going to be rehired. It's very interesting to me that the voices of a few wealthy alumni carry more weight than the obvious fact there is some genuine excellent music being performed by the band.

I hope it isn't too late to reconsider this decision. If the band is going to be ruled by the athletic department, then let them have their own "cast of thousands" and let the music department teach and perform excellent quality music.

The identity crisis

I don't know. They mix us up so often that even my mother has become confused. Which one has longer hair?

Well, I think I did the last time I looked, but I've had my hair cut since then.

Uh, oh. What are we going to do now?

I don't know. I'm not sure who I am anymore, this has happened so often. Everyone on campus thinks I'm you, or that I've got a pen name.

Who has the better complexion?

Who could tell with these mug shots?

I know. My legs have more cellulite. Let's stand side by side and let someone else make the decision.

For those of you who aren't familiar with the problem, the two of us have been mixed up often around the Collegian and this is our only recourse. It's not that we dislike being associated with each other. I mean I think Lucinda is all right, but it gets kind of old when I write a column and my friends ask if it was really me because Lucinda's picture appeared at the top.

I DIDN'T MIND having my picture above Shari's columns. They're better than mine, but all my friends have forgotten my name. I might as well change it to Shari. But what will the Collegian do with two Shari Saia's (Is that how you spell it, Shari?).

Once was funny. Twice sucked.

Lucinda went to work and everyone asked if she really wrote that column on the severance tax. One person wondered how she could have become so warped in the matter of a few days. Another friend asked if she was afraid or just too good to use her own name.

And it's not that I wouldn't want my name to appear above Shari's work, but when I put in a lot of time and effort on a story and the wrong name is plastered on the top, it gets just a little irritating.

You're probably wondering how such stupid mistakes happened, and worse yet, what we're doing publicizing "our" paper's mistakes (especially after Shari just did a column on how the Collegian is a learning experience and how readers should be more tolerant).

(Whispers again.) Do you think someone is out to get us or did we just miss April Fool's Day?

Urged on by violent friends and their suggestions to "Shove that paper down their throats," or from the more conservative ones to "Go to the top dog," we got up off our cellulite and did something about it.

AFTER STORMING into the newsroom and confronting the opinions editor (LaRue said, "Wait a minute, you two. I didn't have anything to do with it!"), we were told to go to the photographers. Taylor meekly informed us he was not responsible for the error. After your usual university run-around ("No, you need to go to a different department..."), we were directed to the complaints department.

So we head for the chief editor. But him being the quiet, shy, introverted person that he is, we quickly converted our anger to another outlet — and now you readers are the recipients.

Even though it's been worth a few chuckles, the total ridiculousness of the situation has become apparent to everyone. "You mean they did it again?" Lucinda's roommate asked.

Our friends agree we really don't look alike, and looking alike actually has nothing to do with the whole mess. After the photos were mixed up the first time, the editor went to the printers and assumed he had straightened the matter out. But in the shuffle, the negatives were never switched, only the pictures, and consequently, later mistakes were inevitable.

Now that we've really gotten to the root of the problem, it better not happen again...That way you won't have to worry about reading any more warped columns about mix-ups or looking alike from either one of us.

Are you sure?

College education is a privilege, not a right

Editor,

I would like to comment on Margaret Bachicha's letter, "'Voice your opinion Thursday' on controversial aid," in Thursday's Collegian.

In this letter, she states that forcing students to forfeit federal financial assistance because they fail to register for the draft somehow destroys their rights. What rights are these?

A college education is not a God-given right; it is a privilege. A college education need not be handed out on a silver platter; it should be earned, by being willing to serve one's country or by working at a part-time job. If you want to dance, you have to pay the piper.

Ag machinery designs win at regional contest

Agricultural engineering students recently placed second and third at the annual student contest of the Mid-Central Section of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers (ASAE).

Universities from Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa participated.

The windrow machine, which the students named the "Hay-Veyor," second-place winner, was designed last fall in an agricultural machinery design course by Mark Eilert, Naomi Regier, Dennis Schmidt and Robert Tedford, seniors.

Windrows are long, narrow rows of raked-up hay or other vegetation that has been mowed down in a field.

"If windrows get rained on, then it may be neccessary to move them onto dry ground," G.E. Fairbanks, instructor of the class, said. "The Hay-Veyor picks up the windrow, fluffs it up, and then moves it either right or left of its original position. It can also put two windrows together to make it easier for baling."

The third-place entry was called the "Roto-Reaper," a cutter device for combine headers that is made up of a serie of high-speed rotating knives. It works on a principle similar to that of the common lawn mower.

Design team for the "Roto-Reaper" included Michael Blumanhourst, Walter Bradbury, Edwin Brokesh, David Hansen and Jerry Marr, seniors.

The Hay-Veyor qualifies for consideration in the national ASAE competition in Chicago next December. The third placing was not eligible.

English professor awarded top poetry honor

A K-State faculty member has been honored as the winner of the 1982 Associated Writers Program Award Series for Poetry.

Jonathan Holden, a member of the English department since 1978, received the award in St. Louis this past week. Holden's contribution, titled "Leverage," was selected from among more than 500 manuscripts by W.D. Snodgrass, the 1962 Pulitzer Prize winner for poetry.

As a result of his honor, Holden will have his manuscript published in November by the University Press of Virginia. Snodgrass will write an introduction for Holden's work.

In receiving the award, Holden further established himself as one of the nation's leading poets. As a result of his award, Holden has been invited to numerous universities and colleges to conduct poetry readings and seminars.

More than 150 of Holden's poems have been published in several periodicals. He has also published two other books of poetry, including "Design for a House" and "Falling from Stardom."

At K-State, Holden has taught several poetry and fiction courses while serving as faculty adviser to the student literary magazine.

Laurie receives award for work in fitness

David Laurie, assistant professor of physical education, recently received the "Joy of Effort" award of the National Association for Sport and Physical Education at the organization's annual awards dinner at Minneapolis, Minn.

The award honors the dedication and devotion of people who have made significant contributions to NASPE and who promote its aims and objectives, James Rog, immediate past president, said.

Laurie has been a member of the faculty since 1968.

Laurie produced slides for the Forums on Youth Fitness presented by the American College of Sports Medicine, the YMCA of America, and the American Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance.

Laurie is a regular columnist for the prize-winning monthly "Camera Copy for Kansas Newspapers" produced by University Relations.

Dahl elected to construction research board

Robert Dahl, professor and head of the Department of Architectural Engineering and Construction Science, has been elected to the board of directors of the Associated General Contractors Education and Research Foundation.

Dahl will serve as one of two public members of the board.

The AGC Foundation, headquartered in Washington, D.C., is a nonprofit charitable organization committed to improving the science of construction through the funding of construction-related research and educational development programs.

Students to present papers for food institute

Two students have won the honor of presenting papers at the April 20 meeting of the Kansas City Chapter of the Institute of Food Technologists.

Students honored included Doug Albrecht, senior in food science, who won the James M. Gorman Undergraduate Award, and Susan Shivas, graduate in food science, who won the Robby Robinson Graduate Award. Both students will receive plaques and a small monetary award in addition to the honor of presenting their papers.

Albrecht's paper approached the subject of "Food Science from an Undergraduate Point of View," while Shivas' concerned "Hot Boning Update and Current Research."

Daniel Fung, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, is chairman-elect of the Kansas City chapter.

Union installs computers

New book buy-back to aid students

By CURTIS BALDWIN
Collegian Reporter

This spring, K-State students will find the Union Bookstore's textbook buy-back system easier to use.

A new computer system will provide many improvements for those who sell back textbooks, according to Jerry Fields of the Union's book department.

Among the most visible improvements will be faster service and an itemized receipt indicating the exact price paid for each book. Transactions should be faster, more accurate and less confusing, he said.

"In the past, our buyers had to memorize several hundred prices for commonly used titles, and laboriously look up a few thousand lesser-used offerings," Fields said. "This was time consuming and prone to occasional error. We also couldn't provide a written receipt.

"THIS MAY, OUR BUYERS will be able to access an enormous list of titles using a simple five-letter key. The system will be able to compute the price to be paid, do the addition and print a receipt showing which titles we purchase for the bookstore and which we purchase for the national wholesale market," he said.

The computer system was originally designed to be used at the Missouri Bookstore at the University of Missouri, Columbia, according to Rich Howard of Missouri Book Services.

"Everything that's been done with this computer outfit was done originally for our own retail store," Howard said. "The way we got into this part of the business was people came into our store and saw what we were doing and wondered if they could have access to it."

Howard said the system has been available in the United States for a few months.

"WE'VE HAD A COUPLE OF systems installed in California as a test market for institutional stores like the K-State Union Bookstore," he said.

Howard said there are six systems operating in the country, but he expects rapid growth in the number of people using the IBM System/34 computers.

"There will be a national convention of the National Association of College Stores in San Francisco (which began Monday) and that is when we're going to go public and make it available to everybody," he said.

Howard stressed diversity of the system and how it could be used for a number of jobs.

"Some stores may be interested in inventory management of their supplies — making sure where all their pens and erasers are. Other people are interested in textbook acquisition, which is what our system is all about," he said.

HOWARD SAID THE computer buy-back system has been employed at the University of Missouri for two years and has been successful.

"We feel one of the reasons why it has been successful is that it inspires confidence in the students," he said.

"In the past, the students have been used to somebody standing at the counter with a book and a list and they come up and the person says this is worth seven or seven-and-a-half dollars. How do you know?" Howard said.

"I can understand why a student would walk away with a great feeling of discomfort asking himself 'Did I get what I was supposed to get?'"

Howard said a lot of time is lost when buyers have to look up an odd book.

"With this system there is no error margin. You simply key in the first three letters of the author's last name, the first three letters of the title and your information is stored. It comes onto the screen and tells the buyer how much it is worth," he said.

THE SYSTEM WILL ALSO allow the bookstore a better chance to keep track of books reported stolen, Howard said.

"If a book has been reported stolen, it is keyed into the system and when that book is presented at the counter, the machine reminds us that the book title has been listed as stolen and we can check for identification and see," he said.

Howard said the system is a cooperative venture.

"It's certainly not going to cost the students anything. It's not going to come out of the students' pockets in terms of higher prices. It's a cooperative deal. We are providing data services in exchange for the ability to do business with the K-State Union Bookstore," he said.

Fields said the new approach to buying back books will make for a better attitude on both sides of the counter.

"BEFORE, WORKING THE buy-back counter was avoided like the plague. Nobody liked the hassle. But anybody can do this if they have any keyboard skills at all," he said.

Fields said he is looking forward to the final week of buy-back period.

"All during final week we're going to be getting information in here and we'll enter it into the system and we'll have it live and in person," Fields said.

"We are uniquely in a position to provide these services and it's to our benefit, the Union's benefit, and it is to the students' benefit that we do that."

Dan Walters, textbook manager for Varney's Bookstore, said Varney's had no plans to use a computer this semester.

"Right now we're doing things the way we think will be fastest and most efficient," he said.

Walters said he looks to this spring semester final week to be a test.

"We'll be looking to see which store has the fastest moving lines and who pays the students the most for their books. I hope it's Varney's."

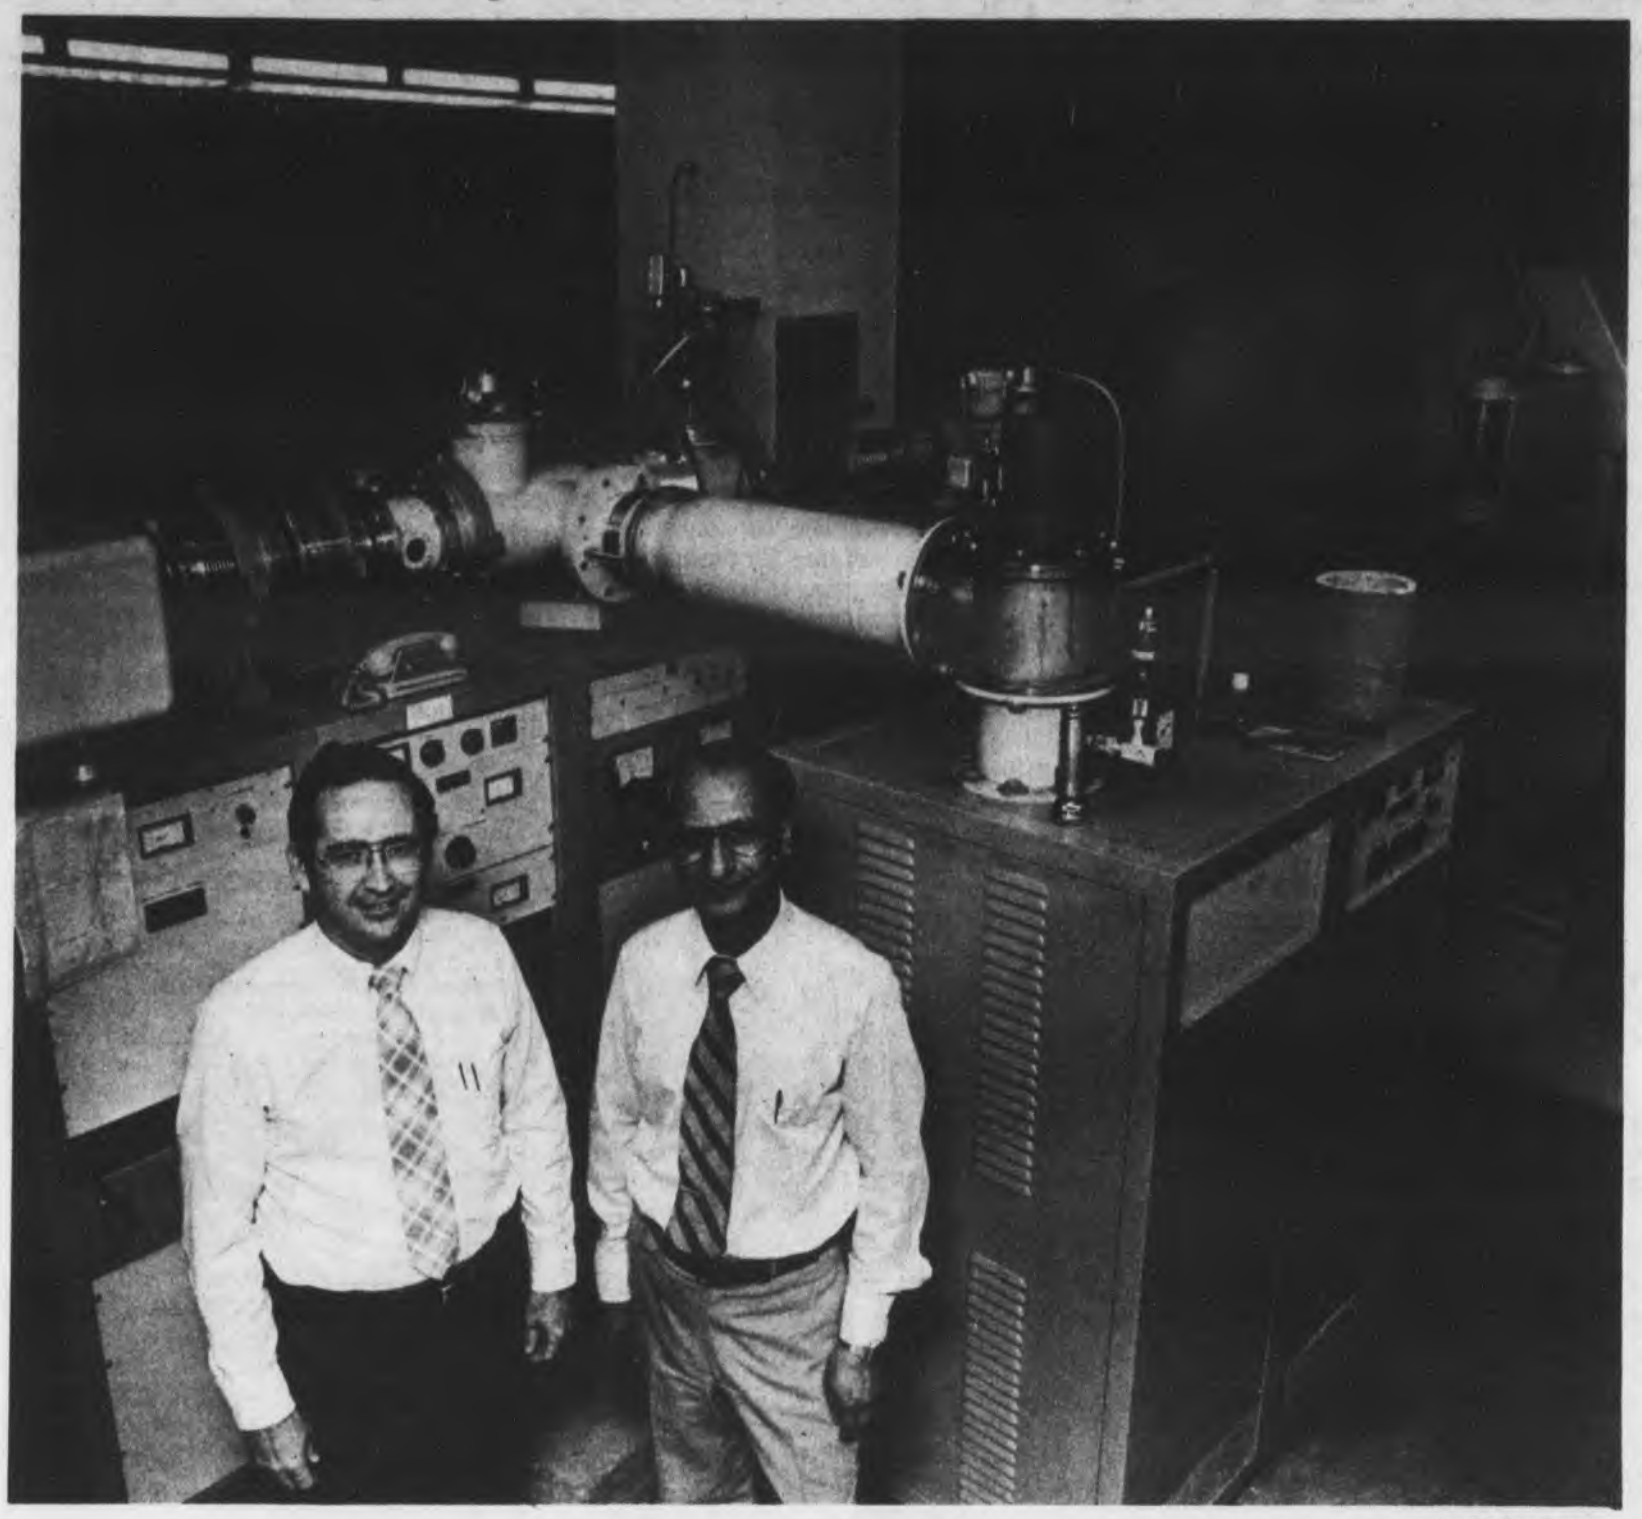
THE JOB INTERVIEW
Important now, more than ever.

A tight job market and hard economic times mean fewer job interviews. When you do land an interview, you want to give it your absolute best shot.

Prepare yourself. Study the company. Anticipate questions. Rehearse in your mind answers you might give about your qualifications and contributions you might make to the company. Find ways to volunteer pertinent information about yourself that might not be asked by the interviewer.

Be positive. Put your best foot forward.

And by all means, dress to make a positive impression.



We can help you—as we've helped numerous K-Staters in the past. We know what's in style, what works and what doesn't.

Atomic physics lab receives $1.6 million grant

Staff/Allen Eyestone

Grant received... Patrick Richard, professor of physics, and Chander Bhalla, head of the Department of Physics, stand by the 6 million volt tandem Van de Graaff accelerator in the basement of Cardwell Hall.

By JULIE STROUTS
Collegian Reporter

A federal grant totaling almost $1.6 million has been awarded to the Department of Physics for use in the James R. MacDonald Laboratory program which involves atomic physics research. The money will be distributed over the next three years.

Patrick Richard, professor of physics and head of the laboratory, said the funding, issued by the Department of Energy (DOE), guarantees the program $490,000 the first year, $530,000 the second year and $575,000 the third year.

The program has been federally funded since 1970, Richard said, but this is the first time it has received a three-year renewable grant.

In the past, the program was funded through a 13-month grant, the last totaling $503,000.

Richard said the funding has increased since the program began receiving federal grants. Seven years ago, he said, the program was only receiving $380,000 for the 13-month grant.

The money received from the grant will be used mainly to provide maintenance of the lab and its equipment and to pay staff salaries, he said.

The staff includes 10 students who help operate the computers and run the lab's equipment, five experimental physicists and two faculty members.

RICHARD SAID the main attraction of the lab is a 6-million-volt accelerator, known as a tandem accelerator, which produces highly chargd ions used in the lab's atomic experiments.

Other labs in the United States house similar accelerators, but he said K-State's is the only large accelerator that is dedicated entirely to atomic collisions. The others are used by nuclear physicists mainly for nuclear reactions.

K-State has received much recognition for experiments conducted in the lab, according to Richard. The University often has visitors from other areas of the nation and

Fraternity's Fite Nite boxing to make comeback

By PAT REDMAN
Collegian Reporter

Sig Ep Fite Nite is up off the canvas and back on its feet.

After a year layoff, the Sigma Phi Epsilon Fite Nite boxing tournament will resume this spring. It is scheduled for April 17, 18 and 19 at the Elks Lodge, 423 Houston Street.

Fite Nite raises money for the American Heart Association. The three-day event consists of boxing matches in seven different weight divisions.

The fraternity-sponsored fights were canceled last year when it was learned they were illegal.

"There is a state law prohibiting prize fights, unless a municipal permit from the city is obtained that states its approval," said Bob Porter, Fite Nite coordinator.

THE CITY OF MANHATTAN does not have such a permit, so the Sig Eps did not have legal permission to regulate the tournament.

Because the law had not been brought to the attention of the Sig Eps the previous two years, during the opening day of the tournament, legal action was brought against the fraternity by Robert Socolofsky, Riley County attorney.

But because the remaining two days of Fite Nite were canceled, the charges were dropped.

After Fite Nite was dropped, the fraternity was advised to seek sanctioning by Golden Gloves. Doing this would assure the Sig Eps they would meet all the regulations governing prize fights, Porter said.

"We contacted Jim Beasley who is the president of Golden Gloves and he said they would be happy to sanction us," Porter said. "He has seen Fite Night and was impressed with the precautions we take and how organized we are."

AFTER BEASLEY AGREED, the Sig Eps' attorney, Dave Gaumer, contacted Socolofsky and City Attorney Bob Frost to confirm the laws which would allow Fite Nite, if sanctioned by Golden Gloves.

"They said they didn't foresee any problems with the state law if we are sanctioned," Porter said.

Working with Beasley and the city, the Sig Eps drafted a written agreement allowing Fite Nite.

The Fifth Street Exchange was the activity's location in 1981 and 1982. The first Fite Nite in 1980 was staged at the National Guard Armory. The Sig Eps considered returning to the armory, but because of the location, they thought it to be an inconvenience for fans.

"We checked on places in town and found the Elks Club owned the Houston Street building, so we decided to talk to them," he said.

CONTACT WITH THE Elks Lodge were successful. The Sig Eps obtained the right to hold Fite Nite in what used to be the Fifth Street Exchange.

"Fite Nite is very successful and that's why we didn't cancel it because of last year's disappointment," Porter said.

On the first and only day last year, the proceeds almost totaled the amount raised in the three days of the 1981 tournament.

"There are also going to be some changes in Fite Nite," Porter said.

Unlike the past years, Fite Nite will now have three major sponsors instead of two.

"It will be called the Sig Ep-Miller Beer-Golden Gloves Fite Nite," he said.

Miller Beer, the third major sponsor of Fite Nite, takes care of most expenses. The company supplies prizes for boxers and donates some equipment.

OTHER CHANGES ARE to be made in Fite Nite, according to Porter. Brackets will be limited to assure no boxer will fight twice on the same night. Headgear also will be a mandatory part of the boxers' attire.

"We're going for safety this year," Porter said. "We don't want to overload the brackets so boxers won't have to fight twice a night. Golden Gloves don't fight twice a night, and it's a lot safer this way."

Physicals will also be mandatory.

"Doctors will be on hand to give physicals to boxers before they fight. This way, we can make sure a fighter is in good health before he climbs into the ring," Porter said.

One aspect of Fite Nite which will not change is it will be limited to fraternities and will not be open to boxers from other living groups.

"The reason for limiting Fite Nite to fraternities is that we wouldn't have enough time. It lasts three days now. If we opened it up, it would go at least a week," Porter said. "We're not biased to fraternities, we just don't have time."

The Sig Ep Fite Nite will consist of at least 40 boxers, according to Porter. "This, as far as I know, is one of the largest boxing tournaments put on in the state of Kansas."

Commission ponders bidding on phone building

By MICHELE SAUER
Collegian Reporter

City and county commissioners continued discussing the possibility of purchasing the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. building in a city commission work session Tuesday.

The building near the intersection of Fourth Street and Poyntz Avenue would house the Riley County Health Department and other city and county agencies.

"We are concerned with two deadlines," Darrell Westervelt, county commissioner, said. "We need to decide what to do about finding a permanent home for the health department and we need to decide whether to bid on the phone company building."

In the last meeting between the two commissions, the idea of creating a building commission was discussed.

"We should decide if we want to create a public building commission," Mayor Eugene Klingler said. "This would be an autonomous group functioning under state law. The building commission would be comprised of the city and county commissioners and possibly a representative from the state architecture department."

The building commission could only get funds by issuing bonds, William Frost, city attorney, said. If a building commission was created and a building purchased, Frost said, the city and county could buy the building and transfer ownership to the commission.

City commissioner Suzanne Lindamood was concerned about the methods used to find a home for the health department.

"Do we need this much space?" Lindamood asked. "What are our space needs? I think we may be working backwards. We found a building — let's buy it now and figure out what to do with it later."

Commissioner Russell Reitz defended the telephone building and said the space would be filled quickly.

Another problem with the decision of purchasing the building is lack of time. Frost said if a building commission was created there would not be time to get all the legal things done to create the commission and purchase the building.

Another problem associated with acquiring the building is parking.

"The immmediate parking situation (at the telephone building) may be satisfactory," Charles Murphy, administrator for the health department, said. "With other services in the building the parking may be inadequate, especially for customers. The parking is marginal at best, but not any worse than where we are."

Westervelt suggested a representative from each commission get together and work up a proposal to present at the next intergovernmental meeting.

Klingler agreed and appointed Wanda Fateley, city commissioner, to represent the city. Marjorie Morse, county commissioner, designated Westervelt to represent the county.

"I'll crank some projections through the computer to help the representatives decide what to do," City Manager Don Harmon said.

If the recommendation takes longer than a week, a special intergovernmental meeting may be called, Klingler said.

Gary Stith, community development director, presented the commissioners with the finished copy of the Community Development Block Grant funding application, for the second item on the agenda.

"I'm satisfied with this form," Stith said.

Bernie Hayen, finance director, discussed the capital improvement plan and operating budget for 1984.

"Let's stay within the timetable," Hayen said. "Then we'll have an approved budget in July. I want to focus primarily on 1984 requests."

Study reveals needs in University child care, calls for more attention to family problems

By JUNE WALTZ
Collegian Reporter

Although the University has adequate child care programs for children of faculty, staff and students, there is a need for more to be done in the area, a recent study found.

The study is the result of a year of studies by a child care task force established last year by the Commission on the Status of Women, Ann Bristow, assistant professor of psychology and task force chairwoman, said.

"The task force recognizes the quality of child care offered and the flexibility of schedules provided by the facilities operating on campus, but there is a need for developing additional arrangements to utilize the involvement of faculty, staff and students," Bristow said.

An area of major concern the report established is child care for Jardine Terrace residents.

"An area of particular concern is the needs of Jardine residents, especially the foreign student population," Bristow said. "The task force believes that the University must be more sensitive to the problems of the families of the foreign students who are recruited."

Single parents and parents on limited incomes are two specific needs the task force would like to focus on and create an awareness on the part of the University of these particular needs, Bristow said.

"ONE OF THE recommendations of the task force is that one paid professional staff position be created to oversee cooperative child care programs at K-State. The major responsibility would be to supervise the Jardine cooperative," she said.

Other duties for the new position would be establishing more child care cooperatives for the University, she said, particularly for students who are willing to work in such cooperatives but do not have the time to develop the programs. Additional space may be needed if more co-ops are to operate on campus, Bristow said.

Convenient and high-quality child care is a benefit to the University, the report indicated. Programs in the colleges of Home Economics and Education incorporate the practical experience with children which may be provided at campus facilities.

RESEARCH AND professional activities by faculty members of the two colleges could also make good use of new child care programs, according to the study.

The report recommended establishing a comprehensive child care program and expanding existing programs. The recommendations include infant care, before and after school care, flextime (scheduled drop-ins), full day care and half day care for kindergarten children.

Existing University child care programs are the Stonehouse Child Care Center and the Early Childhood Laboratory. The ECL building is located behind Justin Hall and the program is funded by Student Governing Association. Children of students are given enrollment priority at ECL and faculty children are given priority to enroll at Stonehouse.

"The Commission on the Status of Women is a presidential advisory committee appointed by President Duane Acker. The purpose of the Commission on the Status of Women is to review roles, needs and opportunities of women at the University, make recommendations for positive action, change and to create an understanding of women's needs," Bristow said.

"The commission has no operating budget because it acts only in an advisory capacity."

According to Sandra Coyner, director of Women's Studies, the commission has been "very involved in the shaping" this year of the Women Studies program and the LaFemme Clinic.

Group's 'screeching' baffles audience

'Manic Flagellate' provides music in bizarre form

By CATHY KARLIN
Staff Writer

In a performance worthy of its name, the Manic Flagellate made a creatively obnoxious debut at Monday's Nooner in the Catskeller. True to their title, the six members seemed determined to "whip and scourge" their instruments to no discernible rhythm or sequence.

Throughout their performance, members of the group wandered around the stage switching instruments and fiddling with the electrical equipment. The grinding, screeching sound of their improvised numbers prompted more than one member of the audience to ask, "Is that music or is it noise?"

The group's first song, "Abandon Hope All Ye Who Enter Here," began with prerecorded music followed by piano. One musician, Crash King, was attired in dark slacks, a brown and black geometrically patterned vest, black wig and white-rimmed cat-eye glasses with black lenses. He maneuvered the synthesizer so it emitted crescendoing rumbles which sounded very much like the roar of racing cars at a speedway.

Periodically he would lean down to hit the cymbal and the side of a drum with crashing blows. After a while he moved to the front of the stage and attacked an aluminum object with two hammers. Another member of the group stood beside him and poured broken glass into and out of two buckets.

MEANWHILE, another musician jumped up and down in a box full of crushed beer cans while shaking a marimba. The rest traded off playing the piano, bass guitar, snare drum, car spring and railroad tie.

Near the end of the 18-minute song, one of the group walked backstage to a small television set and tuned it in to "As The World Turns." The man at the piano stopped playing and began to watch the program. Gradually, the rest of the group stopped playing.

In their second number, called "Princess Di," the group showed a little more cohesion, but not much. Two of them gathered at the microphone and made jungle-like yells through long tubes, then threw them down and began yipping. The sounds of the synthesizer in the background varied from video-game-like beeps and trills to the drone of a helicopter landing. Near the end the song, King repeatedly yelled "Princess Di!" into the microphone and was eventually joined by the rest of the group who chimed in on "Di!"

BEFORE ITS last song, "Brother, Have You Got a Dollar," the group threw fake money to the audience. Then as the rest of the band pounded away on the synthesizer, piano and miscellaneous percussion, one member walked through the audience collecting bogus money.

After the performance, members of the group introduced themselves as Matt Dog, Flamin' A, junior in electrical engineering, Z, Flappy Jack, Crash King and Bill, senior in computer science. They said they play for Hispanic glass art... Roy VanDeest, junior in economics, appears to be multiplied as he studies near one of the Hispanic glass and iron sculptures on display at Farrell Library.

Festival features Hispanic artwork at library, Union

An exhibit valued at nearly $75,000, on loan from the Mexican Cultural Institute in San Antonio, Texas, is on display in Farrell Library through Friday. The exhibit, on the fifth floor, is shown in conjunction with Hispanic Cultural Awareness Week at K-State.

Following a letter by Raul Guevara, outreach coordinator for minority affairs, to the institute asking for art representing Hispanic culture, a combination of seven artists' work was suggested.

Of those seven, three were selected and eventually put on loan to the Minority Affairs office, according to John Carrasco, junior in political science and history.

The artists are Abel Bustos, Feliciano Bejar and Alejo Jacobo.

Other work of Bustos is also on display in the Union Courtyard display between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Likewise, Jacobo's work will be on display at Raoul's restaurant in Aggieville until the end of the month.

The three artists' work is displayed for the specific purpose of expanding art appreciation of Hispanic culture at K-State, Carrasco said.

The exhibit includes 15 black and white acrylics by Jacobo, 34 collected engravings by Bustos and a collecton of stained-glass works by Bejar.

The work of these artists has received rave reviews from critics. One critic, Alfonso Montes, said of Bustos' work, "His imagination has n limits. He is a young artist who continues to excel. With simple designs often very fundamental, he beautifully expresses the aesthetic perspective which obsesses him...This is certain: Abel Butos is an important artist."

Carrasco said, "We are trying to share a part of ourselves with you. That's basically what it is all about."

Throughout the week, different aspects of the Hispanic culture will be displayed on different parts of the campus. The art exhibit is only one part of the festival.

relaxation and enjoyment.

"Actually, we're just a part of this band," Dog said. "There's a lot of other people who couldn't be here today."

"We can never be as a whole, you know, because there's so many people in our band we can never be in one place at one time," Flamin' A said. "We're distributed throughout the Midwest."

"THE MEANING (of the music) is that it doesn't matter if you know what it means," Crash King said.

"This is the only time we've ever planned to give a performance," Dog said.

"I'd like to play at the opening of a mall," Crash King said.

The Manic Flagellate never went through an audition in order to play at the Nooner, which is probably the only reason the group was allowed on stage.

A major flaw in the group's performance, besides the music, is that members spent most of the time playing with their backs to the audience. The obvious lack of regard for a polished, cohesive appearance was highlighted in the last number when Bill walked off the stage, went upstairs to buy a drink and came back on stage in the middle of the song.

Though their overall sound was reminiscent of a piano-accompanied car crash, Manic Flagellate was fascinating and rather amusing to watch. Another reason I am glad I saw Manic Flagellate is that hearing it will make me appreciate the sometimes-mediocre talent of other amateur performers much more.

MTV: Cable music system hooks up to hearts, TV sets; 'viewers' plug in for musical videos, concerts, news

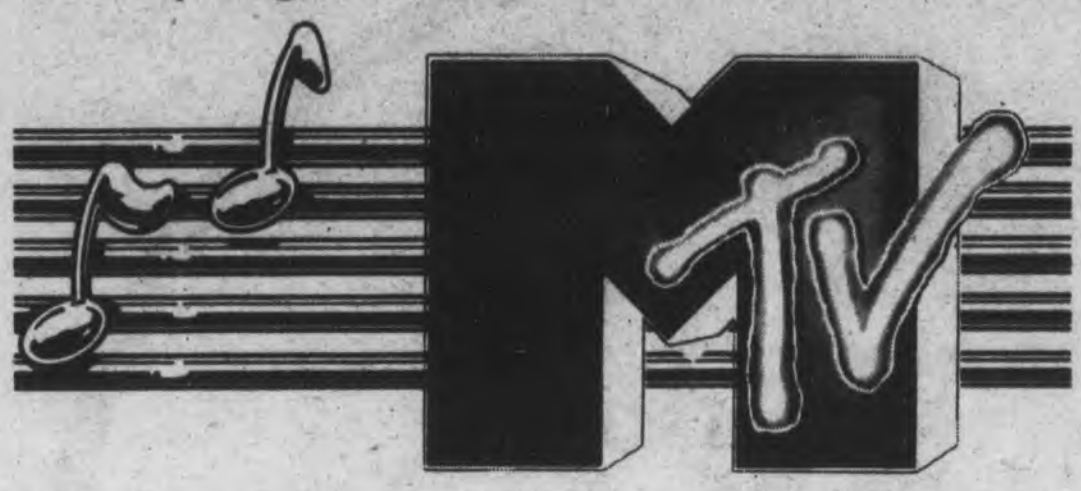
As members of the rock group Go-Go glide along a stage in their new attire resembling that of the group KISS, Hall and Oates add a little rhythm to their already successful act as they sing their hit song "One on One."



As the two groups continue their on-screen performances, a video disc jockey or "vee-jay" announces what has just happened on MTV.

MTV (Music Television), Warner Amex Satellite's 24-hour stereo pop-music channel, has withstood controversial talk to become one of the hottest music services on the scene.

Designed for the 12- to 34-year-old contemporary music buff, MTV programs are unlike other cable programs in that they are the only cable channels that offer concerts and films in FM stereo.

With a library of more than 500 video clips featuring well-known, popular rock artists such as Blondie, The Rolling Stones, and REO Speedwagon, MTV has developed into a gold mine for many cable companies. It has grabbed the hearts of many young Americans from around the nation.

Since August 1981, MTV has hooked onto 315 cable systems. Of those systems, the new service has attracted more than 2.5 million subscribers, mostly young adults and teen-agers within an 11-city area.

RUN BY FIVE video disc jockeys, MTV offers a wide variety of programming for audiences to watch. Video records, music news and the concert scene are three target areas the channel uses in its programming. The video records are televised presentations of music, featuring artists performing or acting out their songs. Music news and other information are delivered by the VJs and six reporters who give updates each hour on the latest happenings in the music industry, concert dates, and new album releases. In addition, they interview major artists.

Besides video records and news, MTV also offers a full program of concerts and movies. The Saturday night concert series presents premiere showings of the latest groups on the music scene, featuring their past and current hit songs in an hour-long program. Both live and taped, these concerts take place at some of the most exclusive clubs in the country.

MTV'S OWN "Liner Notes" program is also a highly watched show. A monthly review of the music scene, "Liner Notes" are exclusive interviews with special guests in the MTV studio, backstage and on featured locations. The program has featured such stars as Fleetwood Mac and Rod Stewart.

Other MTV programming includes "Profiles in Rock" and the Sunday night movie series. "Profiles in Rock" is a half-hour segment introducing in-depth interviews and the music of artists or bands. The movie series presents an assortment of movies featuring music-oriented feature films and cult classics, as well as films of popular concerts from past years.

Because of its popularity, MTV has spread in all parts of the country. In Manhattan, the channel has slowly, but surely, reached the homes of many residents — K-State students in particular.

SHIRLEY NORRIS, senior in history, said MTV is a new and unusual type of entertainment.

"When I first saw MTV, I thought it was an interesting concept," Norris said. "If you're interested in a specific group or performer, or you're wondering what is going on in the music scene, you can always turn to MTV to find out."

Even though the channel has gained much popularity among the young adult, Norris said she feels the channel needs to widen the types of music it carries.

"I think they need to broaden their horizons more," she said. "I like to see more soul and Country and Western artists. I'm not saying it's bad that they use mostly rock'n'roll, but I think people would watch it more if they had different types of music."

NOT ONLY HAS MTV become popular in homes of students, but it has also become popular in local entertainment spots. A good example is at Brothers Tavern, the only bar in Aggieville which offers MTV.

According to Clint Dixon, junior in business administration and bartender at Brothers, the new system has helped bring business to the bar.

"I think it has definitely helped our business, particularly in the afternoons," Dixon said. "A lot of the times, we'll usually have 15 to 20 people, mostly females, who will come in to watch it. It doesn't make any difference what type of people are there to watch it. A lot of the people who don't come in to watch our bands are usually the people who come in only to watch MTV."

'The British are coming' to take the Oscars

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The British are coming," warned producer David Puttnam when his "Chariots of Fire" won last year's Oscar for best picture. He was right, and they won again this year.

The Motion Picture Academy on Monday night bestowed eight Oscars on the British-made epic "Gandhi," including a pair to Richard Attenborough for directing and producing the best motion picture of 1982. Ben Kingsley, who portrayed India's spiritual leader, won as best actor, and John Briley for his original screenplay.

Of course Americans won Oscars, too: Meryl Streep, best actress for "Sophie's Choice," and supporting players Louis Gossett Jr. for "An Officer and a Gentleman" and Jessica Lange for "Tootsie."

The 55th awards proved a decided hit with television viewers. The overnight Nielsen rating in New York was 45.4 and the share was 71 percent of sets in use. The ABC telecast had a Chicago rating of 47.3 and a 68 share; in Los Angeles, 46.5 with a 66 share.

Clutching his Oscar before reporters backstage at the Music Center, Kingsley admitted, "My knuckles are white around this gentleman. It is a sublime act of possession."

The English-Indian actor complimented the American film community for its "act of friendship" in handing its highest prizes to the British. He added that his countrymen could reciprocate: "I hope it's a nudge against certain restrictive practices." He referred to British Equity limitations against American actors in England.

Streep, six months pregnant with her second child, won her second Oscar. Backstage she held the statuette on her hip and said wearily, "The baby has been kicking all night long." In 1979, she was voted best supporting actress for "Kramer vs. Kramer."

Group promotes creative theater for older adults

By JEFF ENDACOTT
Collegian Reporter

Many senior citizens in search of creative outlets are forming theatrical groups to remain active in society, and K-State is helping them.

Aiding in development of senior acting groups are the University's speech department and the North Central-Flint Hills Area Agency on Aging. The two groups presented the Intergenerational Theatre Workshop at the Manhattan Holidome Tuesday.

Senior Center managers from North Central's 18-county area were briefed on goals and procedures of setting up senior adult theater groups by Norman Fedder, professor of theater, and members of Barn Players, a senior group from the Kansas City area.

Fedder explained a senior theater group's purpose is to provide the senior citizen with personal and social development. He and three of his students began organizing a group for senior citizens to perform with at the semester's beginning.

Grace Schricker, senior in family and child development, is one of those helping Fedder start Senior Adult Theater. She said the group has read a play written by Chloris Killian, graduate in theater arts, five times at the Manhattan Senior Service Center.

"We hope older people will see us and they will come in and take it over," Schricker said. Eventually all of the group will be senior citizens, she said.

The group performed Killian's play Tuesday after the workshop. It takes place during the 1920s in a small western Kansas town. "Just a Song at Twilight" portrays typical Kansas attitudes toward unions at the time, Killian said.

Currently, John Fox, a former professional actor, is the only senior citizen involved in Senior Adult Theater. Fox acted in off-Broadway summer stock during the 1940s and 1960s, and worked on various odd jobs. He sat in on a reading of "Just a Song at Twilight" and then talked to Fedder about joining the group, Fox said.

Linda McCann, senior in life sciences, is another of Fedder's volunteer actors standing in until more senior citizens become involved. While taking Fedder's Theater for Special Populations class, McCann said, she suggested a theater project which would involve the elderly. As one of Senior Adult Theater originators, McCann said she hopes the group will eventually be able to perform for elderly in Manhattan nursing and retirement homes.

"We emphasize creative living through creative drama," Fedder said. This means the importance of an activity isn't the performance, but the benefits participants receive by sharing creativity, he said. Fedder suggested theater group organizers could involve senior citizens by beginning with Bible or poetry readings, then working into skits, followed by short plays.

The Barn Players began the theater workshop by performing two short plays. Ann Lahey and Clyde Glandon acted "Mrs. Lazer's Caller," a drama about an elderly widow with health problems. Florence Yount and Ben Pener performed "Close Down Set-Up of Emma" which dealt with two neighbors being evicted from an aging hotel.

Winnie Laas, the Barn Players' spokeswoman, does the group's booking. In its fifth year as an acting troupe, the Barn Players is giving more than 150 performances, mostly at nursing homes and hospitals, Laas said. The group's 15 members donate their time, she said.

Forces of nature affect creations of versatile artist

The forces of nature are at work.

Dale Leys, associate professor of art at Murray State University, Murray, Kentucky, spoke to about 30 people in the Union Little Theatre Tuesday night on how the forces of nature affected his work.

Besides speaking on his art, Leys was promoting his works which are on display in the Union Art Gallery until Friday.

"I have always had an interest in art for as long as I can remember, for better or worse," Leys said about how he began.

The types of work Leys likes to do are paintings, drawings and sculptures. Metal, vegetables, sky and water are a few topics that interest him.

"The works I did when I was a 'hippie' were affected by the political climate in the early '70s. I had an objective to my art then. Until recently my paintings were non-objective. I am now starting to see structure in my work again," he said.

The fact that Leys grew up around Lake Michigan helped his interest. "I liked Michigan's shoreline and how blue from the water and blue from the sky met," he said. He began combining images of shoreline and metal in his drawings while in high school.

"In 1970 I was a freshman at Layton School of Art and Design, and I figured I would be a crack-shot illustrator. I remember one rainy day I was in the art building and I walked by a room full of advanced students. They were listening to Janis Joplin and working on their paintings. That is when I decided on what I wanted to paint," he said.

When applying for graduate school, Leys counted on his paintings to help him qualify. Yet the University of Wisconsin accepted him for his drawings.

"The size of some my works has helped with my notoriety," he said.

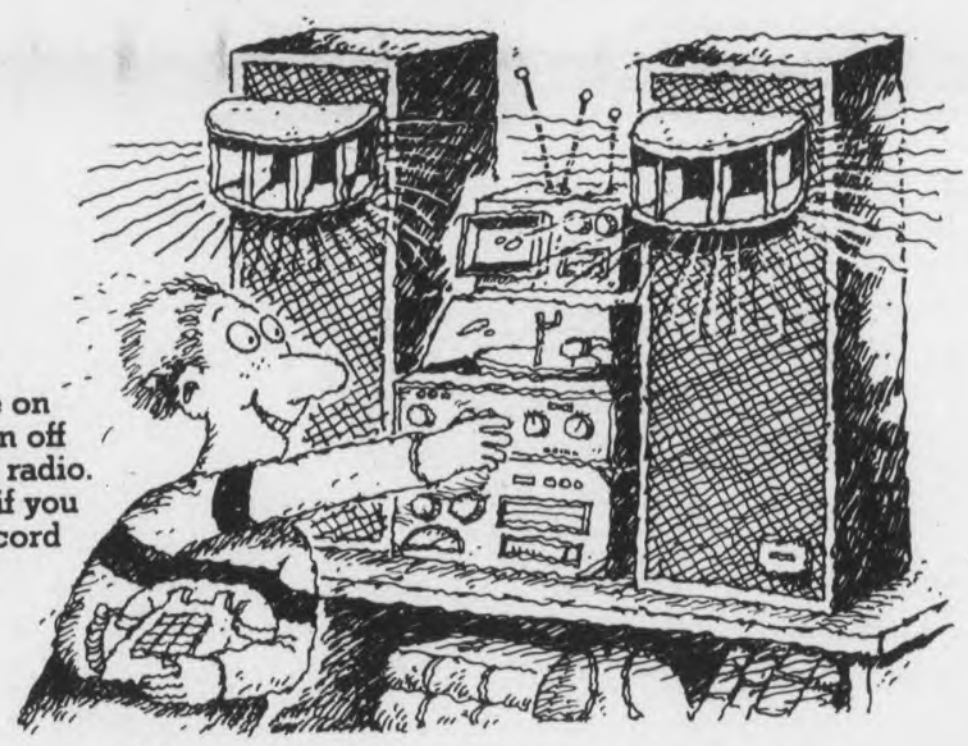
His work ranges from 15 by 21 inches to 4 by 6 feet.

"Whatever format is appropriate, then I use it. The more intimate work is smaller than larger ones," he said.

Leys said he experienced moments of depression in undergraduate and graduate school. "It's to be expected, part of the process. Yet you must be diligent and continue on to get through them."

Each time depression set in for Leys, he would discover a new way of presenting his material. Silver point, which is done with a silver wire on masonite, was a new process which helped him.

When it came to sculpture, Leys was reluctant to try this new area. After attempting it with metal and wood he decided this type of work was OK.



Get a happier parent in 5 easy steps.

Step 1: Clear all but one or two of your most sedate friends from the room. (We believe it's an innocent study group... the question is, would your parents believe it?)

Step 2: Wade through the pizza boxes, magazines and dirty clothes to locate the phone. (HINT: If you spot the cord, just follow it. There's generally a phone at the other end.)

Step 3: Lower volume on stereo and turn off television and radio. Bonus points if you change the record from rock to classical.

Step 4: Pick up receiver (perhaps wiping peanut butter and jelly off first?) and dial number.

Step 5: Say, "Hi Mom, it's me!"

So obvious. So simple.
So why don't you do it?

Tennis team gets back on track with home win

Staff/Andy Nelson

Backhand return... Jeff Jackard grimaces as he returns the shot of Southwest Missouri State University's Rod Vaught during their singles match Tuesday afternoon. Jackard won the match 60, 6-4, and the K-State team won the dual meet, 7-2, upping its overall record to 6-9.

The men's tennis team, rebounding off a winless weekend in Oklahoma, scored a 7-2 victory over Southwest Missouri State Tuesday at the Washburn courts in Manhattan. The win pushed the Wildcats' record to 6-9 on the season.

Players battled the changing weather conditions throughout the afternoon. Besides having to deal with the wind, they also had trouble with the temperature, which dropped from 70 degrees at the start of the meet to the 50s by the end of the afternoon.

K-State also did without the services of Mark Hassenflu, No. 5 singles player who had to take a test, and Gary Hassenflu, whose injured knee kept him from playing in his No. 3 singles spot. The changes didn't hinder the team, however, according to Wildcat coach Steve Snodgrass, who said it gave some of the other players a chance to participate.

The four regular players had wins in the singles competition. Jeff Jackard, in the No. 1 spot, beat Rod Vaught handily in straight sets, 6-0, 6-4. K-State's Curt Thompson played John Isaacs in the No. 2 spot, winning 7-6 on a 7-3 tiebreaker in the first set. Thompson had an easier time in the second set, winning by 6-3.

Kris James had a rougher go of things in No. 3 singles, beating John Steinmeyer 6-3 in the first set, losing the second set by 6-4, and coming back to win the final set 5-2.

Brady Tinker played the most exciting match of the day, according to Snodgrass. Tinker lost the first set to David Chamberlain, 7-5, but won the next two sets by 7-6 scores.

Snodgrass said, Tinker had "one heck of a match," winning a 9-7 tiebreaker in the second set and an 8-6 tiebreaker in the third.

"That was a good highlight of the day," Snodgrass said.

Kent Smith and Clark Renfro, stand-ins for the absent players, had the two losses for K-State. Smith lost to Paul Nahon 6-4, 7-5, while Renfro fell to Mike Carey 6-1, 6-3.

The Wildcats won all three doubles matches. The No. 1 team of Jackard and James had no problems with Vaught and Nahon, putting them away 6-1, 6-4. The No. 2 team of Thompson and Gary Hassenflu — back into action after sitting out the singles competition — beat Isaacs and Steinmeyer 7-5, 7-5. Tinker and Smith, comprising the No. 3 team, beat Chamberlain and Brian Burton, 6-3, 7-6, winning the final set with a 7-2 tiebreaker.

After 15 meets, freshman Kris James has the best mark on the team with a 7-8 record, .460 on the season. James usually plays in the No. 4 singles position.

Next action for the team will be Friday against the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs.

Royals, Cardinals win in major league play

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Frank White's tie-breaking single triggered a four-run eighth inning that lifted the Kansas City Royals to a 5-1 victory Tuesday night over the Boston Red Sox.

George Brett opened the eighth by doubling off Boston starter John Tudor, 0-1. One out later, Hal McRae was walked intentionally, and White then singled to left to score Brett. Don Slaught walked to load the bases, and Jerry Martin greeted reliever Luis Aponte with a two-run single.

A single by John Wathan reloaded the bases, and Aponte walked Willie Wilson to force in pinch-runner Joe Simpson with the inning's fourth run.

The victory went to Mike Armstrong, 1-1, who relieved Royals starter Steve Renko to begin the seventh. Dan Quisenberry pitched a scoreless ninth.

Tudor allowed the Royals only one hit through the first three innings before Amos Otis and Hal McRae singled leading off the fourth. Otis went to third on Frank White's doubleplay grounder, and Tudor then uncorked a wild pitch that brought in Otis to make the score 1-1.

KEITH HERNANDEZ bowled over catcher Tony Pena with the winning run of the 10th inning and St. Louis then put down a bases-loaded, no-out Pittsburgh threat in the bottom of the inning to hand the Pirates their first loss of the season, 4-3, Tuesday.

Hernandez doubled to left off reliever Jim Bibby, the third Pirate pitcher, to lead off the 10th. He moved to third on Darrell Porter's fly to center, then, following a walk, dashed home on Ken Oberkfell's sacrifice fly to short center.

The Pirates, playing their home opener before 46,869 fans, had taken a 2-0 lead on a sacrifice fly and solo home run by Brian Harper.

Reliever Jim Bibby, 1-1, took the loss, while reliever Bruce Sutter, 1-0, got the victory with Rasmussen picking up his first save of the season.

TOM BROOKENS collected two singles, a double and a homer, and he and Glenn Wilson drove in three runs apiece as the Detroit Tigers defeated New York 13-2 Tuesday, spoiling Billy Martin's home debut in his third term as manager of the Yankees.

Mike Ivie, Alan Trammell and Lou Whitaker each had two RBIs for the Tigers, who pounded loser Ron Guidry, 0-1, for six runs in 5 1-3 innings in his second consecutive poor outing. In eight innings this season, Guidry has allowed 10 runs and 13 hits for an earned run average of 11.25.

LARRY MILBOURNE'S bases-loaded single off reliever Neil Allen with two out in the bottom of the 10th inning gave the Philadelphia Phillies a come-from-behind

JoJo White to remain on KU coaching staff

LAWRENCE (AP) — JoJo White, whose future was up in the air after Larry Brown was named head basketball coach at the University of Kansas last week, will return as an assistant coach next season.

Brown announced Tuesday that both White and Bob Hill, assistants under former Coach Ted Owens, would be retained in their current positions at KU.

White, 37, a former Kansas and National Basketball Association star, has been with the Jayhawks for the past two seasons, while Hill, 34, has six years' experience in the KU program.

"I certainly appreciate all of the work and efforts that Ted Owens put into making the Kansas basketball program what it is," Brown said. "And in order to keep the progress at its high level of achievement, I felt it necessary to keep continuity among the staff and players.

"Bob and JoJo have certainly made their mark on Kansas basketball and hopefully through all of our efforts we will continue to build the Kansas tradition."

White, a two-time All-American at KU and later a standout with Boston in the NBA, was instrumental in recruiting such players as Kerry Boagni, Ron Kellogg and Calvin Thompson.

After Owens was fired March 21 following 19 seasons at KU, White was known to be interested in the head coaching job. He had helped get an oral commitment from highly recruited Curtis Aiken, a high-scoring guard from Buffalo, N.Y., but after Owens was fired, Aiken said he would come to KU only if White was hired as head coach.

But his coach at Bennett High School, Larry Veronica, indicated Monday that Aiken might still go to KU if White was retained as an assistant.

"He wanted to play under JoJo White," Veronica said. "He wants JoJo to refine his guard skills. I don't think it mattered whether JoJo was the head coach or the assistant. Curt got the impression that White would be the head coach in the next few years.

"Curt was not thinking he was going to be the head coach this next year, just as long as he is on the staff. He (Aiken) plays a lot like JoJo did, and I could understand why he would want to play for him."

Brown reportedly was headed to Buffalo later Tuesday to discuss the situation with Aiken. The second signing period for high school basketball letters of intent begins Wednesday.

Hill, 34, who headed the recruiting program under Owens, had earlier interviewed for the head coaching job at Cleveland State but did not get the job.

Hill came to KU in 1977 after two seasons as an assistant at Pittsburgh. He lettered in both basketball and baseball at Bowling Green University and later played briefly in the San Diego Padres farm system.

K-State softball crew takes double-header from Topeka team

K-State's softball team, playing its first games in three weeks because of inclement weather, won a double-header over Washburn, 3-1 and 7-2, Tuesday.

In the first game, Kelly Scoles drove in two runs to supplement the pitching of Janel Anderson, who held Washburn to one run on seven hits. Cathy Hinson had two hits for the 'Cats.

Wildcat coach Ralph Currie said his team did well against Washburn pitcher Laura Klamm, although the Wildcats had some trouble getting things rolling. "They had a real good pitcher...probably the best in the state," Currie said of Klamm.

Anderson and Amy Fischer combined to throw a four-hitter in the second game, as Scoles and Luann Fox each had two RBIs to power the Wildcats to their 7-2 victory. Rachelle Borders went 3-3 at the plate for K-State.

"THERE IS NOTHING WE CAN DO"

The issue of freedom of speech and expression has been the hottest issue on the K-State campus lately. Through letters and actions, different people from the President of the University to students have been commenting on this issue for days now.

While the reason for this sudden rising concern is the incident over Zaki Yamni's speech, for most Iranian students who are against the Islamic Republic, this issue has been a primary matter for years. For a long time now anti-regime Iranian students on this campus as well as other campuses in the United States and other countries have been identified and harrassed by the agents of Khomeini's regime. Not long ago one of the lackies of the Islamic Republic writing in a letter to the Collegian openly thanked a photographer for taking pictures of students who were opposing the Islamic Republic and admitted that "... it is a fact that we Moslems have been identifying these groups both inside and outside Iran by the Imam Khomeini's order." This letter, along with reports of stabbings at K.U., harrassments, and many other provocative acts toward dissident Iranian students by agents of the regime were brought to the attention of K-State students and especially the officials and administration. During many meetings and discussions they had become informed of a lack of security and protection. Above all, they became aware of how these kinds of activities by some despicable pro-Khomeini elements are carried out in order to violate the freedom of speech and expression of the anti-regime Iranian students. The response to these claims was the usual "There is nothing we can do."

The afternoon of Zaki Yamni's lecture the thugs of the regime attacked dissident students in the lobby of the K-State Union. Prior to the attack campus security was informed at least three different times and did nothing to stop it. This attack took place in full view of many students and six plainclothes police officers. The police stood by and did nothing to stop the attack while the attackers simply walked away. Later, at the insistence of the victims, seven of the attackers were arrested and charged. However, the county attorney's office dropped the charges and released a statement saying that because of "differences" between attackers and victims, "Little ultimate resolution would result from trial of these individuals," and "consequently, on balance, our office has determined that the cost of such prosecutions greatly outweighs any possible benefit to the community." The statement added, however, that "this decision does not affect the four individuals being charged for disrupting the assembly in McCain."

It seems that freedom in general and freedom of speech in particular varies based on the people involved. It is given a price tag. The Sheikh's freedom of speech, no matter how reactionary should be protected even if 2000 people have to be evacuated from McCain with discriminatory measures then being used to decide who should be allowed to re-enter. Some people, in particular Iranians, were prohibited from re-entering if they did not "look right" even if they had proper identification. Ironically, the freedom of speech of some students that is being violated by some hoodlum agents is too costly and does not serve any purpose. In this case, "there is nothing they can do."

4-3 victory Tuesday over the New York Mets.

With one out in the 10th, Mike Schmidt walked. After Von Hayes flied out to center, pinch-hitter Tony Perez ripped a double into the left field corner. Greg Gross was walked intentionally, but Milbourne then ripped a 1-2 pitch from Allen, 0-1, over the head of shortstop Bob Bailor to score Schmidt with the winning run and give Ron Reed his first victory against no losses.

KEITH MORELAND cracked a three-run homer in the first inning and Steve Trout scattered nine hits over 8⅓ innings for his first National League victory as the Chicago Cubs gained their first triumph of the season Tuesday by beating the Expos 5-0 in Montreal's chilly home opener Tuesday.

The Cubs, winless in their first six starts, got to Montreal starter Bill Gullickson, 1-1, early. Ryne Sandberg, the leadoff batter, got a triple when Montreal center fielder Andre Dawson missed an attempt for a shoestring catch and the ball rolled behind him. Scott Thompson followed with a ground out to shortstop, scoring Sandberg.

PAUL MOLITOR'S third hit of the day, a double to right, drove in Jim Gantner with the winning run, and Robin Yount hit a two-run homer to lead the Milwaukee Brewers to a 6-5 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays Tuesday afternoon.

Gantner led off the eighth with a double to right-center, also his third hit of the game, and scored on Molitor's double down the right field line.

Don Sutton evened his record at 1-1, while Jamie Easterly came on in the ninth to record his first save of the year. Mike Morgan, 0-1, took the loss.

RICK HONEYCUTT scattered seven hits and Dave Hostetler drove in both runs with a home run and bases-loaded walk to spark the Texas Rangers to their sixth victory in seven games, a 2-1 decision Tuesday over the Cleveland Indians.

Honeycutt, who has now won his first two starts by allowing only two runs in 15 innings, struck out three and walked one. Odell Jones came on in the ninth to post his second save.

Bert Blyleven, 0-2, suffered the defeat, allowing both Ranger runs while yielding seven hits over the first seven innings.

Hostetler led off the Texas fourth inning with a line drive over the center field fence, giving the Rangers a 1-0 lead. The shot was Hostetler's first home run since Aug. 17 of last season.

ROOKIE RIGHT-HANDER Rick Behenna allowed two hits in five innings and singled twice in his major-league debut as the Atlanta Braves trimmed the Cincinnati Reds 4-1 Tuesday.

It was the sixth victory in a row for Atlanta, which has not lost since dropping its opener.

Behenna, who jumped from Class AA to the majors, yielded only two singles to Cesar Cedeno and an unearned run in his five innings. The 23-year-old pitcher singled in the first inning in his first major-league at-bat and drove in an Atlanta run in a three-run fourth.

RICK DEMPSEY'S tie-breaking, two-run double in a three-run seventh inning lifted the Baltimore Orioles to a 10-8 victory Tuesday, spoiling the Chicago White Sox home opener.

The White Sox had overcome an early seven-run defecit and had gone ahead 8-7 on a run-scoring double by Harold Baines in the sixth inning before the Orioles came back with three in the seventh.

EVERYONE WELCOME!

AGRICULTURALISTS . . .

You're Needed All Over the World.

Ask Peace Corps volunteers why their agriculture degrees or farm backgrounds are needed in developing nations. Ask them how their knowledge of crops, livestock production, farm mechanics or beekeeping methods help alleviate hunger, increase personal income and develop technical skills. They'll tell you of the rewards of seeing direct results of their efforts. They'll tell you Peace Corps is the toughest job you'll ever love.

For info. call person-to-person collect for Ken: 816/374-4556.

proval of the report will take, but that it would make little difference in the outcome.

Addabbo and Herbert Scoville, a former deputy CIA director who has campaigned against the MX for years, said the "Midgetman" approach was worthy of study as a separate issue.

While the panel's proposed compromise solution has prompted some MX critics, such as Reps. Les Aspin, D-Wis., and Albert Gore, D-Tenn., to soften their opposition, Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore., told reporters he thought the MX-"Midgetman" linkage could be a trick.

"Either the commission has given a face-saving device to the president ... or on the other hand it's a bait-and-switch operation in which ... once the (MX) production lines are created they may not end up being closed," AuCoin said.

OTHER OPPONENTS, including Reps. Bill Green, R-N.Y., and Nicholas Mavroules, D-Mass., noted that Congress in 1981 had scuttled a plan to base 40 MX missiles temporarily in Minuteman silos because of their presumed vulnerability to Soviet attack.

The silo basing plan, they said, would force the MX to be used as a first-strike weapon and destabilize the nuclear standoff with the Soviets.

The administration's proposed budget for fiscal 1984, which starts Oct. 1, includes nearly $2.9 billion in MX production funds, $3.4 billion in development money and $390 million in related construction.

Accelerator

other countries coming to see the lab and its accelerator.

Plans are being made to expand the lab and increase its energy output four times more than the current energy capacity, he said.

IF FUNDING can be obtained from the DOE, a booster for the accelerator known as the CRYEBIS will be built for the lab.

The CRYEBIS — which stands for cryogenic electron beam ion source — would also be able to produce a larger number of ions so more experiments could be conducted, Richard said.

The lab will also seek DOE funding for a second energy source, the superconducting LINAC, linear accelerator.

The LINAC would be separate from the tandem and CRYEBIS and its energy would be used for additional experiments, Richard said.

If funding is received for both projects, he said, the lab should be able to build the CRYEBIS at K-State. Some parts for the LINAC would have to come from a federally funded lab in Washington since it would be too expensive for the K-State lab to try and build such parts, he said.

THE LAB is asking the DOE for $2.6 million for the LINAC and $600,000 for the CRYEBIS, Richard said. Four more staff members will then be needed to help maintain both accelerators, which means more money for salaries will be needed, he said.

Richard said the lab is asking for the minimum amount needed for both accelerators.

If funding for the program is considered in the 1985 budget, funds may be granted by 1988, he said.

"Once we receive funds, we should be able to begin building right away," Richard said, adding that he was optimistic about the DOE accepting the proposal for both accelerators.

Acker says Legislature is key to funding issues

Chance for academic fee 'significant'

By DOUG WARD
Editor

Although a final decision will not be made until after the clean-up session of the Kansas Legislature, President Duane Acker said Wednesday, there is a "significant chance" an academic services fee will be implemented for the fall semester.

Acker said the fee could range from "zero to $15" and would be charged in lieu of any special or lab fees on specific courses which had been earlier proposed.

Kansas Board of Regents policy states that before any fees can be implemented for the fall semester, the item must be up for first reading at the April meeting. Acker has requested a delay on first reading of a specific fee until the May regents meeting.

The delay is needed because the appropriations bill passed by the Legislature has yet to be signed by Gov. John Carlin, and Acker said legislators can still make adjustments in funding if they deem it necessary.

"I can't say at this point 'what is needed' because that's the reason we're asking for a delay in submitting a proposal (to the regents) — so we can complete the legislative session," Acker said.

"We just want to be sure they (legislators) have completed their work before we make any proposition," he said.

Acker said he is also asking for a delay to get additional faculty and student input and waiting for a report from a special regents task force which is expected to make a recommendation on fees this week.

"WITH THOSE THREE pieces of information yet to be established (legislative session, University input and task force report), we thought it was prudent to simply ask for a delay in making our recommendation regarding both the Holton Hall fee and the academic services fee until the May meeting."

At the Friday regents meeting, the University of Kansas, Wichita State University and Emporia State University are scheduled to ask the board for lab fees in areas such as computer science, engineering and architecture and design.

Acker said K-State had considered similar lab fees, but because of a "difference in approach," would opt for across-the-board assessment if additional fees are deemed necessary.

"As we take a look at these, it just seems to us internally...that individual fees would be more costly to administer (than a uniform academic service fee)," Acker said.

STANLEY KOPLIK, regents executive director, said he did not know whether the board would ask for uniformity among all schools in assigning fees but said the matter will be discussed.

He said there is "always a danger" in allowing each institution to have its own fee because the schools look at one another when deciding on fees.

"I don't think we should adjust fees on any campus just because somebody else has a fee," Koplik said. "I think I'd rather

OOE should keep ahead of inflation

By TOM HARMS
News Editor

President Duane Acker, in a press conference Wednesday, said although he is not fully satisfied with the long pull of the appropriations bill passed by the Kansas Legislature for the University, in recognition of tough economic times some good will come from the action.

Acker said the Other Operating Expenditures appropriation, as it stands, will be a 6.5 percent increase over last year.

"This will probably be the first time in many, many years that the increase has exceeded, if ever so slightly, the consumer price index or the inflation rate of the country," he said.

DURING THE PAST seven years, Acker said, the CPI has gone up 70 percent while all the increases in OOE have only totaled 39 percent in the same time period.

"We have been slipping most severely in our ability to buy equipment, supplies and other expenses we need for teaching, research and extension."

Acker said the appropriations bill includes approximately $565,000 to accommodate the increase in enrollment at K-State during the fall semester of 1981.

The bill also provides about $530,000 for the occupation of new space such as Durland Hall, Phase II, he said. This includes janitorial staff, maintenance, supplies and utilities.

Under the heading of high technology, $305,000 will be available to K-State.

Acker said the Legislature approved $1 million of the $1.5 million proposed by Gov.

President Duane Acker

John Carlin for high technology which requires 150 percent private funds to match state funds.

"OUR EMPHASIS WILL be to use that money to build on established areas of strength. Certainly with $305,000 you don't go out and start a new program and expect to be exceedingly productive in terms of

Informational health exhibits draw about 700 for screening

Staff/Andy Nelson

Checking them out... Doug Haddan, sophomore in industrial engineering, has his ears checked by Dee Dee McGugin, graduate in audiology, during Health Fair '83 Wednesday in the Union Ballroom.

As her pulse rate climbed above 120 beats per minute while pedaling an exercise bike, Carmen Waldmann, freshman in natural resources management,. waited for her pulse rate to level off. When it did, she found herself to be in good shape, using information provided by the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation at its exhibit at Health Fair '83.

Waldmann said she attended out of "curiosity." "I just wanted to see how fit I was."

Approximately 30 exhibits ranging from blood pressure and anemia testing to cancer and car child restraint devices were set up all day Wednesday in the Union Ballroom.

"I've heard a lot of positive responses from people (about the fair)," Cindy Culver, Lafene health educator, said.

About 700 people, the same amount as last year's event, attended the fair, which was sponsored by Lafene Student Health Center and staffed by students, faculty, staff and Manhattan professionals. Culver estimated about 100 people worked throughout the day.

Approximately half of those who attended the fair were older people from the University and Manhattan, Culver said.

Students viewed the fair as a way to check themselves.

"I just wanted to see how I was doing. I haven't been sick for a long time so I haven't had an examination for quite awhile," Laura Harris, senior in life sciences, said.

Dr. Guy Smith, Lafene physician, said he thinks the fair is a good idea.

"I think it's a wonderful opportunity for people concerned about their health to get some information. Perhaps this will induce some of them to make some lifestyle changes that could affect their health," he said.

Dr. Jerry Pettle, a Manhattan dentist, estimated he had checked 30 people in just one hour late Wednesday morning.

"It's accomplishing its purpose. It's a pretty good screening thing," Pettle said.

Deadline approaches for filing loan requests

Deadline for applications for Direct Student Loan programs for the summer term is April 22, Robert Evans, director of student financial assistance, said.

"Several DSL cancellations of the fall and spring semester have resulted in a little bit more money than normal to be used for students this summer," Evans said.

The extra money left over from the cancellations provided funds for the summer term.

"This is the first summer since 1980 that a DSL can be available to students," Evans said.

Only students who previously had an application on file are eligible for the DSL, he said.

Other loans, such as the Guaranteed Student Loan, are being accepted now and will continue to be processed into the summer semester.

A Pell Grant, Evans said, may be requested by students with an unused eligibility from the 1982-83 school term.

"Students who didn't attend full time both fall and spring semesters, or who only attended a half of these terms have not used their Pell grant to its extent."

If this is the case, their Pell grant may be applied toward the summer semester, he said.

A student may also begin requesting emergency student loans the first day of registration, June 6. The largest amount loaned under the emergency loan is two-thirds of the student's fees, he said.

Senate to hear budget allocations, vote on draft amendment tonight

Student Senate is scheduled to hear tentative allocations for at least six fund-seeking groups at 6 tonight in the Union Big Eight Room. Groups whose budget requests and recommendations will be discussed are: Legal Services, University Student Resource Center, Off-Campus Student Association, Consumer Relations Board, Sports Club Council and Women's Resource Center. Budget hearings for Fine Arts Council and Recreational Services are to be on call.

A resolution calling for senate support of the Soloman amendment is also scheduled for voting.

The Soloman amendment states that a student must be in compliance with the Selective Service Act before becoming eligible to receive federal financial assistance.

Senate chairwoman Lori Leu said she "anticipates a lot of people speaking" on this resolution during the open period.

A postponed bill from last Thursday's meeting, calling for the allocation of $182.01 to the National Society of Architectural Engineers to fund its national conference at K-State, is to be voted on. The conference is scheduled for August.

In first readings, a bill calling for the allocation of $1,230 to fund the Folklife Festival is to be heard. The festival, sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education, is to be held in Manhattan April 22-24. The bill also states that students will be admitted half price to the festival in exchange for the funding.

Other senate business on the agenda includes two appointment approvals — delegates to the Associated Students of Kansas legislative assembly at Pittsburg State University April 15-16 and the student body president's cabinet.

KCC worries about increasing phone rates

TOPEKA — Concerned that federal policy changes will have "a dramatic impact" and drive telephone rates up, the Kansas Corporation Commission on Wednesday asked the Federal Communications Commission for a formal inquiry into the policy changes and their effect on Kansas consumers.

In a petition filed with the federal commission, the KCC said it was "concerned that telephone public utilities in Kansas will not be able to provide service at reasonable rates due to changes in FCC policies" and the three-member state panel asked for an impact study.

The KCC wants the Kansas investigation to study the "cumulative impact of the several federal actions on universal telephone service." Universal service, as mandated by Congress in the Communications Act of 1934, means telephone service available to every household at an affordable price.

Federal telecommunications regulatory policy changes, and court-ordered divestiture on Kansas ratepayers served by Southwestern Bell could result in rate increases of 122-181 percent, the KCC said. The commission fears basic rates will double and triple as the policy changes are implemented.

Pete Loux, chairman commission, said that even though American Telephone and Telegraph has abandoned universal service as a corporate goal and national policy is to deregulate the telephone industry, regulators "have a duty to insure that basic telephone service remains affordable and available to everyone who wants it."

Food stamp cuts hit 'poorest of poor'

WASHINGTON — The $1.1 billion President Reagan wants to cut from food stamps next year will come mostly from the meal budgets of millions of poor Americans, rather than a clampdown, as he claims, on "waste and corruption," according to a report Wednesday by congressional budget analysts.

The report, the starkest to date on the impact of the food stamp proposal, shows the plan slashing $190 million in benefits next year from nearly 2 million of the nation's poorest households. Overall, it says, the cut would take $874 million from nearly two-thirds of the 7.9 million households now receiving the nutrition assistance.

Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., chairman of the House Agriculture nutrition subcommittee, said the Congressional Budget Office findings clearly refute the administration's position that the spending cut would not hurt those who need the food aid. Instead, he said, it hits "the poorest of the poor."

Agriculture Secretary John Block disagreed. "We stand on the statements we've made before," he told The Associated Press. "There's a substantial savings to come from reducing the error rates, and that's what we're proposing."

Holocaust survivors pause to remember

WASHINGTON — Speaking in Yiddish on the steps of the Capitol, a young congressman asked Jewish survivors of the Holocaust Wednesday to remember the gentiles who risked their lives to save Jews — like his father — from the Nazis.

Rep. Sam Gejdenson, born in 1948 in a camp for displaced persons in Germany, won the hearts of his audience of thousands by speaking to them in a fading language once known to virtually every Jew in pre-World War II Europe.

Gejdenson, a Democrat from Connecticut, took part in a ceremony in which the government turned over to the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council two abandoned government buildings near the Jefferson Memorial.

They will become the site of a Holocaust museum and memorial, to be built with $75 million raised in private contributions.

Vice President George Bush presided over the transfer, saying to the survivors: "We join with you — God's remnants — in speaking out" against Adolf Hitler's attempt to exterminate an entire people.

Familiar style used in Topeka bank holdup

TOPEKA — A young man armed with a handgun robbed a Fidelity State Bank branch of an undetermined amount of money Wednesday in a holdup resembling six other recent robberies in Kansas and Missouri, authorities said.

The man, clad in a blue jacket and jeans but wearing no mask, walked into the bank about 2:15 p.m., displayed the gun, then fled on foot with the money a short time later, police said.

Nobody was injured in the holdup, authorities said.

Witnesses said the robber, who hid the gun under a red bandanna, was a white male in his 20s with dark hair and a mustache.

Authorities were unable to confirm whether the man was the person believed to have robbed a half-dozen banks and savings and loan offices in Topeka, Lawrence, St. Joseph, Mo., and Columbia, Mo., since March 4.

Weather

It's time to move to Florida. It will be cloudy and cold today, with snow flurries possible. The high will be around 40 and low in the upper-20s. Northwest winds will gust to 15 to 30 mph and it will be clearing and colder tonight.

Soloman proposal calls for attention

The Associated Students of Kansas lobbying organization has asked each of the student senates of Kansas universities to take a stand on the Soloman Amendment.

If a resolution introduced by John Kohler, campus director of ASK, passes senate tonight, it will show K-State in support of the amendment.

The amendment stipulates that males born after Dec. 31, 1959, who are at least 18 years old and request federal financial aid, must be registered with the Selective Service.

Student senators should think long and hard about voting in favor of such a measure, and the student body should let its senators know how it feels about such an expression.

The Soloman Amendment is clearly a discriminatory move which has no place in federal lawbooks. The amendment discriminates against males, specifically those of college age, and against those who find it necessary to apply for financial aid.

Although the law has passed, a federal judge in Minnesota placed a temporary injunction on it. The law will now be tried in federal court.

However, the inquisition has begun. The question has already appeared on applications for financial aid, and although men are not now required to answer the question, they may, if the court rules the law constitutional, have to prove in writing that they are registered with the Selective Service.

Rep. Gerald Soloman's argument in favor of this law is that young men who do not comply with federal law should not receive federal financial assistance. He may also be quietly hoping that it will save the government a great deal of money and will provide incentive for men to register for the draft.

If Kohler takes K-State's support of this law to the next ASK legislative assembly at Pittsburg State University on April 15 and 16, the resolution will be representing the entire University, not just the Student Senate. If you are not in favor of the passage of this resolution, call your senator today and make your displeasure known.

The University of Kansas and Wichita State University have already stood in opposition to this law, and K-State's support of it would be a sad comment on our knowledge of, and interest in, national issues.

Soloman amendment has moral implications

Editor,

Today, Student Senate will decide on an unprecedented law, a resolution in support of the U.S. Congress' Soloman amendment which was passed last July. It would make it impossible for those refusing to register for the draft to obtain fnancial aid. Since implementation, a court injunction in Minnesota has ruled that the amendment is possibly unconstitutional.

I am concerned that the major intention of the amendment to reduce the number of non-registering males has constitutional, equal rights and even moral implications!

First of all, the Fifth Amendment protects against self-incrimination in a court of law. I would venture to say that the financial aid form could be used against a poor, male college student. Also, it seems unfair that women would not have to deal with this question when applying for financial aid, thus giving them an unfair advantage. Finally, I question the moral rights that could be stripped of conscientious objectors who are forced to apply for financial aid.

Basically, this amendment focuses severely on a very small segment of the U.S. population; that being poor, male college students. This law fails to reveal rich, male college students and males who do not attend college. I challenge every student to voice his opinion on this crucial issue, after all, it's your right!

It's our University; our opinions count

"In the spring, the Kansas Legislature passed a bill appropriating approximately $1.5 million from the state's general welfare fund to finance the replacement of the 51-year-old building." — 1969 Royal Purple, p. 36.

The castle sits empty on the hill, waiting to be restored. Birds fly where students once walked, laughed, worked and studied. Ivy covers some of the outer walls, like a stunned, stubborn prize fighter clings to the ropes, waiting for the bell to sound — waiting for new hope.

I remember when I first saw Nichols Gymnasium. It was at night, after Maynard Ferguson rocked McCain Auditorium in 1976 with his brand of jazz.

I walked out of McCain feeling alive, full of music and the kind of exhilaration and hyperactivity that no man-made drug can produce. I had met the baritone saxophone player in a unique way — he bumped my head with his horn when the band went into the audience to play. I was envied by the other members of the high school band I was with — I was a freshman. A senior should have been so lucky, some muttered.

SOMEHOW, IN MY DAZE, I became separated from the rest of the group. I looked around, saw no one, and decided to find my own way back to the bus. I walked around McCain and stopped. I was facing this dark building. It looked like...a castle.

It was then some members of my group walked out of McCain. I joined them, saying nothing of my discovery. After all, I was only a dumb freshman, and only dumb freshmen get lost on a college campus at night.

A couple of years later, in a copy of the K-Stater, I read an article about Nichols. There, in the alumni magazine, was a picture of the thing I saw that night. I was interested, and read.

Nichols burned Dec. 13, 1968. The cause of the fire: arson. Reason for the destruction: unknown. I couldn't believe it. Who would do this to such a neat building?

The article discussed how students were fighting a decision to raze the ruins. "Save Our Castle" was the theme. It was then I decided if I ever attended K-State that I would also fight to save Nichols.

"The overwhelming feeling was that Nichols is an important landmark on the K-State campus. These students do not want to see Nichols torn down." — Student Body President Greg Musil, in a letter to University President Duane Acker, quoted in the 1980 Royal Purple, p. 9.

After I graduated from high school and junior college, I came to K-State. I saw "The Castle" for the first time in daylight. It reminded me of the medieval castles found in Europe. Its level of disrepair, however, brought me back to reality. Stuff was growing in it. Its iron support beams were rusted — some warped and twisted by the fire that consumed it that cold December night.

That year, an architectural firm developed plans to build a separate building inside Nichols' shell. It seemed as though Nichols was saved.

Then, the economy took a nosedive. Funds were scarce. Some suggested scrapping the idea. Others recommended postponing the project indefinitely.

Fortunately, it wasn't seen that way by most.

This January, the Board of Regents requested $3.7 million to rebuild Nichols (the actual rebuilding cost is approximately $6.2 million). Gov. John Carlin recommended $1.5 million.

"Warren Corman, regents director of facilities, said construction would start in January 1984 if the Legislature appropriates the $1.5 million requested by the governor. However, he said construction could start this July if lawmakers provide funding as requested by the regents." — "Regents approve Nichols restoration," Collegian, Feb. 21, 1983, p. 1.

Unfortunately, Nichols backers are going to take half a loaf. The Legislature passed Carlin's recommendation, which is far from the amount needed to fully restore the building. But, half a loaf is better than no loaf at all, as I have learned in the arena of life.

The important thing to remember in this is students made the difference. When Nichols was in danger of being torn down in 1979, students protested in front of Anderson Hall and traveled to Topeka to lobby legislators. It worked.

The Collegian, through editorials and a special section this spring, has tried to bring students the most information possible about the issue.

I have tried to do my part, by writing an editorial, this column and by giving a persuasive speech to a public speaking class.

The castle will once again breathe with academia. But, there are many conquests awaiting students.

For example: lab fees, Holton Hall renovation fee, renovation of Willard and Weber halls, increases in tuition, increases in residence hall fees, cuts in student aid...the list goes on and on. Will students let these issues pass them by, or will they become involved in changing policy?

All it takes to become involved is communication. Write to your legislator — a 13-cent postcard is all it takes. Call him. Call your student senator(s). Call or write the administration. All are here to serve you. Let them do so.

Student involvement helped save Nichols. Let's make it work again.

Fee proposal lies in confusion

Confusion surrounds the proposed academic support fee, and I emphasize "proposed" because I wonder if anyone is really sure what exactly will happen during the Kansas Board of Regent's meeting this month.

My first experience with the proposed academic support fee was two weeks ago during a Faculty Senate executive meeting, when a letter from Provost Owen Koeppe was distributed to the members, addressing a $15 fee proposed by the University of Kansas. The letter asked for input concerning the need for a similiar fee at Kansas State.

One of the first questions I received from Faculty Senate President Van Withee was, "How do the students feel about this?" I admit my frustration because this was the first time I had heard about the academic support fee. My initial concern was that students were not even aware of the possibility of the fee being assessed in the fall semester, let alone given an opportunity to provide input into the matter.

ADDING TO my frustration, Koeppe's letter was received by the committee only two days before the deadline for submitting items for the regents' agenda.

April is the month the board hears first readings on increases to tuition and student fees. I had two days to solicit student sentiment and then voice these concerns to President Duane Acker.

Following a meeting with the president, a conference with the vice presidents of the University and various students was held to help solicit the needed student input. It was during this time the students present voiced appreciation for the need of the fees, but had concerns as to the feasibility and financial impact of the academic fee.

Some of the questions which must be answered include: What will the Legislature do following the implementation of the fees? Will they see the money collected from the students as a supplement to state funding and then proceed to cut back funds from the areas outlined in the fee proposal? If so, that just shifts the financial burden from the state to the students.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT question is, "How will the money be allocated?" Will it be a free-for-all between the library and the departments most deserving of equipment? An allocation board should allocate the funds, and most importantly students must have representation on this board to provide assistance in delegating where their money will go.

To add to the confusion, the proposal for an academic fee is not on the agenda for the April meeting. The item currently on the agenda is a request of a month's delay to analyze the final appropriations of the legislative term. So students are again left in the dark. With the month delay, final action will not be taken until the June meeting and then it will be too late to inform students of any fee increases before they return to school in the fall. This contradicts the original intent of the Board to evaluate fee adjustments in April and to take final action in May so students are not "surprised" at any increases when they return in the fall.

STUDENTS HAVE expressed great concern about the quality of education at K-State, and are willing to finance their share of education as long as they can see tangible results from fee increases.

For example, tuition went up 22 percent last fall, yet we still are not sure faculty salaries will increase at a reasonable rate, or if enough funding will go into Other Operating Expenditures so students won't have to go to a copy center to pick up a class syllabus.

This is the latest in the never-ending saga of student fees. I hope the information will allow you to become aware of the situation and begin to ask questions that will lead to action. I am a big believer in student voice at K-State. However, before we speak we must be aware of the details of the decisions directly affecting students, especially when the issues concern increasing our tuition and fees.

Writer gets honorary degree, donates painting

By SUE SCHMITT
Staff Writer

It took Velma Carson 68 years to get her college degree.

Carson, who now lives in New York, attended Kansas State Agricultural College, from 1915 to 1919, but did not receive her degree because she refused to take a class required for women. Last spring she received an honorary degree from the University.

"At the beginning of my last semester, the registrar told me I had to take a three-hour kitchen gardening class; I took a music appreciation class instead. I had a wonderful time with that class. I've always loved music," Carson said.

Carson said she attended K-State because she was from a farm, and was not able to go anywhere else. She chose journalism as her major because of her love of writing and because there were no other majors offered by the college she was interested in.

"In those days K-State was a trade school. You had to start in something technical such as home ec, engineering or veterinary medicine. It was almost impossible to get a degree in fine arts," she said. "I didn't like any trade offered to me except journalism."

AS A STUDENT, Carson was outspoken and active. In her senior year, she was named editor of the Royal Purple.

"They gave me the choice of being either the editor of the Royal Purple or the Collegian. I chose the Royal Purple. At that time the men were usually given important positions, but most of them were at war," she said.

Although she left school without a diploma, Carson was good natured about it.

"All my friends asked me, 'Weren't you unhappy with everybody graduating?' And I told them, 'I never even noticed,'" she said.

Even without a degree, she had little trouble succeeding in her field. Carson has reported for most of the nation's major newspapers, done promotional work and written plays, fiction and poetry. She is perhaps best known for her poetry. Although her writing has been published in many major publications, Carson said she often received little or no credit for her work.

Because she was a woman working in a predominantly male occupation, her byline seldom appeared with her stories, she said.

"I did a lot of writing and much of the work for the men I worked for, but they got most of the credit for it."

Carson said she also wrote under pen names, but her name has appeared on her more important works.

"I signed my name to the things I really cared about," she said.

AT 87, CARSON still writes regularly, but now has to dictate her work because of blindness.

She received an honorary degree from K-State after Robert Steinbauer, head of the music department, read an article about her love of music and the music appreciation class she forfeited her degree to take.

To show her gratitude, Carson wanted to donate an oil painting to the University, but K-State was unable to accept the gift. Because of funding cuts, there was no curator to monitor or accept art, according to Marjorie Morse, county commissioner and a close friend. Carson left the painting in Morse's care.

However, the painting did find a campus home. Morse said the painting is now hanging in Steinbauer's office.

Someone from the music department saw the painting at Morse's home and told Steinbauer about the trouble she was having in trying to give it to the University. Steinbauer offered to take it.

"It tied in very nicely that Dr. Steinbauer has the painting" because he helped Carson receive her degree, Morse said.

The painting, by John Fulton, is a Kansas scene of a family traveling by covered wagon. The artist and his wife were Carson's close friends.

"The painting was done by the husband of an old colleague. She and I grew up together, journalistically, in Chicago. She married John Fulton, who was an illustrator. His great-grandfather was Robert Fulton, the inventor of the steam boat," Carson said.

Former Kansas House Speaker's documents 'put to little use' by Farrell Library patrons

By STUART McKINNON
Collegian Reporter

Fourteen years of legislative history are stuffed into 35 boxes in the Special Collections section of Farrell Library.

Letters, charts, memos and bills documenting Wendell Lady's career in the Kansas House of Representatives range in topics from abortion to marijuana and alcohol to the severance tax.

Available to the public since last month, the articles have been put to little use.

"I don't think any of the students have used them yet, but any time you have historical records they're an asset," Joseph Unekis, assistant professor of political science, said. "It gives the students original resources to work from and valuable training in source documents.

"The fact that we have this resource enriches the University," he said.

The abortion file contains letters from citizens expressing their concerns and ideas. A Manhattan minister wrote Lady, urging him not to give in to the Roman Catholics attempt to impose their beliefs upon a theological society that doesn't share those beliefs.

The minister wrote that while he was reluctant to support abortion, he believed in religious liberty and urged Lady to do the same.

Many letters in the file say no government at any level should interfere with birth control and family planning.

The anti-abortion point of view was taken by a man who wrote, asking Lady if he cared if his own children lived or died. Approximately 1 million mothers each year want their children to die — so they have abortions, the man wrote.

Another controversial issue brought out in the letters was on the drive to raise the legal drinking age from 18 to 21.

An emotional plea to raise the drinking age came from a mother who said four of her son's friends were killed in an alcohol-related car accident.

Persons younger than 21 led the charge from the opposition, bringing up the facts that they are eligible to be drafted, pay taxes and vote at 18 and should be allowed to drink.

One man wrote, "If the problem is drunk driving, then damn it, meet that issue head on. Did you ever think that perhaps it is the illegal nature of the act that makes it more exciting, and thus, encourages abuse? If it passes, I'm going to open an illegal bar in my room."

A standard reply, stating Lady's opinion on an issue, was sent to those who voiced their opinions.

Other letters brought the legislator praise from his constituents.

One letter praised his actions: "Each time I've intended to write with regard to a specific issue you've done well without any direction."

A 1982 letter from a large industrial employer in Overland Park about a bill allowing employees to walk off the job and still receive unemployment benefits brought a reply of disappointment from Lady.

"The governor's action on this bill disappoints me as well. It appears now our only solution to having the situation resolved is to elect a new governor," Lady wrote.

Alumni drummer accents city's musical history

By CANDIDA MASSIMINO
Contributing Writer

He's a part of Manhattan history. His name is associated with a music scholarship, K-State's alumni band, Manhattan's Municipal Band and the "oldest band member award."

Charlie Moorman, a K-State alumnus, former public school music teacher and professional drummer, can often be found in McCain Auditorium, talking to students and faculty about music and teaching. He also frequents downtown Manhattan, where through private music lessons, he continues his 50-year teaching profession.

"About six years ago, I resigned from the 'oldest band member award' contest because nobody had a chance with me around. Since I plan on being around for another 20 or so years, I thought I'd give someone else a break," Moorman said.

However, the alumni band has set up a scholarship in Moorman's name.

Born in Smith Center in December 1902, Moorman's family moved to Manhattan when he was three. He was educated in Manhattan's public schools and later at K-State (then the Kansas State Agricultural College).

"I went to grade school where the junior high is now. The junior high and high school were under the same roof back then," Moorman said. After his graduation in 1921, he began college the following fall.

"THIS IS MY alma mater, and I have played in the alumni band ever since I graduated."

Moorman's musical career began in Manhattan, and job opportunities have led him all over the country. He is a founding member of the Manhattan Municipal Band and is a regularly featured soloist.

"Before the first World War, the Boy Scouts wanted to form a fife and drum corps. It must have been 1915. I was the biggest of the bunch, so I got the bass drum to carry. During the war, we would play at the train depot for the troops who would pass through.

"About that time, we were trying to get a city band together. The college director suggested that we boys get a petition going to raise a band tax. Well, soon after, the law was passed. That's how the present city band got started. I'm the only founding person left," Moorman said.

Downtown drums... Charlie Moorman, a K-State alumnus, teaches drum techniques to Glenn Davis, son of Al Davis, a K-State instructor. Moorman gives lessons at a downtown music shop.

MOORMAN PLAYED in Manhattan theaters in the 1920s.

"There was the Marshall Theatre in the building where (J.C.) Penney's is now. The Marshall showed silent films, and I played in the orchestras that accompanied them. The theater also had road shows and vaudeville," Moorman said.

During the Depression, talking pictures became popular, putting many orchestras out of work.

"At that time I was doing a lot of concert work with symphonies and bands, and I tell you, it's a lot nicer being in the inside looking out than on the outside looking in," Moorman said.

He was working at a time when many musicians were unemployed.

"It was a bad time. Thousands of men were out of work with nothing to do. I'd go down to Florida in the winter months because there were still jobs to be had there, and I played with some circuses. There were so many good musicians out of work because of the Depression and talkies...I was just lucky," Moorman said.

DURING WORLD WAR II, Moorman played with the Denver Symphony. He left Colorado after the war, moving to Oregon where he taught for many years. After retir-

'The Magician' illustrates operatic concentration on vocals

By SEAN REILLY
Collegian Reporter

Moving away from drama, operas are beginning to concentrate on vocal expression, according to Alun Hoddinott, composer of "The Magician."

Wednesday night the KSU Opera Workshop presented the one-act opera in All Faiths Chapel before a near-capacity crowd.

Hoddinott went on to explain the differences in operas of the 1800s and the early 1900s.

"Back in the 1800s two performers or groups would sing different songs simultaneously," Hoddinott said. "This would make it hard for the listener to distinguish what was going on. But in the 1900s they are getting away from that technique."

Review

John Morgan can be credited with the libretto which involves three characters — Sesto, an aging magician; Adriana, his wife; and Angelo, his assistant.

In the opera, Sesto discovers his wife and Angelo are cheating on him. Because of this, he soon begins to question who and what is reality. Meanwhile Adriana and Angelo are planning Sesto's death.

However, Sesto finds out about the plot to kill him and decides to kill Angelo. This is an important time for Sesto when "Magic becomes truth. Illusion becomes reality," in scene three.

In the last scene, the question of reality vs. magic remains unsolved for the audience with the death of Angelo. He volunteers to step in Sesto's magic box and is stabbed to death unknowingly by Adriana. Magic or reality?

Quality of the play was good. Yet it was evident the chapel is not the best location for an opera.

The singing by Sesto, William Myers, instructor of music; Adriana, Susan Graber, junior in music education; and Angelo, Brent Weber, junior in music education, was quite sufficient. However, the chapel hid the singers' voices within the building's structure.

Myers does a fine job of portraying a magician, but it was difficult to see the emotional stress he was under with the possible loss of his wife and his plans to murder Angelo.

Graber is convincing as a lady who is mainly interested in her own happiness. She gave the idea that she would seek whatever measure neccessary to achieve freedom, love and ambition.

The most difficult character to analyze was Weber. Acting like a meek and mild person, Weber does everything for Adriana in the name of love, but we're not sure why.

Although hard work went into the props, they may have looked better enlarged or more developed. Again, space was lacking.

Staging and directing done by Tomas Hernandez, associate professor of speech, was fine. Hernandez showed his talents by organizing a play in such a small area.

Despite the cramped area, the group is to be commended. When problems, though small, were present the group was able to continue without interruption.

Regents meet today; Acker requests delay of fee consideration

The Kansas Board of Regents will meet today and Friday to discuss requests from several of the regents institutions to consider special fees. The fees will be considered in first readings by the Fiscal Affairs Committee and will be acted upon at the May meeting.

The University of Kansas is requesting that the board consider for final action at the May meeting a $15 fee per semester for students majoring in Architecture and Urban Design and a $3 fee per credit hour for engineering majors enrolled in engineering courses. KU has asked for a one-month delay in submitting a request for an academic service fee for support of library acquisitions, instructional equipment and instructional computing.

The delay in the request is due to the uncertainty of Other Operating Expenditures appropriations from the Kansas Legislature, according to the agenda. KU's Student Senate voted in favor of the proposed fee.

President Duane Acker has also asked for a delay on submitting a request for a proposed academic services fee "to finance library acquisitions, computer and other equipment and student program needs for fiscal year 1984." Acker said, in a press conference Wednesday, he wants to wait until the Legislature has adjourned and the appropriations bill has been signed into law by Gov. John Carlin before proposing a special fee for K-State. He said he also hopes to get student and faculty input before making the request.

Wichita State University will be requesting in first readings a computer laboratory fee of $20 effective in fall 1983. WSU will also request consideration of ratification of an existing returned check fee of $10, to become effective in fall 1983.

In other K-State business, the Facilities Committee will consider the reassignment of fiscal year 1983 Major Repairs, Special Maintenance and Remodeling funds to repair storm damage west of Farrell Library, repair and paint exterior walls of the power plant and Burt Hall, replace underlayment and floor covering in Seaton Hall and replace controls in the elevator in Willard Hall. Funds for these repairs would come from remaining funds for earlier repairs and replacements in Kedzie Hall, King Hall and Farrell.

Acker will also recommend that an audit fee of $1 per credit hour per semester be discontinued.

The regents will also be asked to approve emeritus appointments, tenure appointments, changes in rank, sabbatical leaves and changes in rank for all the institutions under its control.

Professor calls Reaganomics 'cruel joke'; blames capitalism for economic distress

By LARRY BOYD
Collegian Reporter

Although Reaganomics is "a very cruel joke," capitalism is the real reason the United States is in economic trouble, John Exdell, assistant professor of philosophy, said Wednesday.

Exdell spoke to approximately 60 people in the Union Catskeller on "An Alternative to Reaganomics" as part of a UPC "Let's Talk About It" program.

"It's high time that we begin to dedicate our thoughts and energies to replacing the present system (capitalism) with one that operates to satisfy human needs," he said.

Exdell suggested a new economic system, social democracy, should replace capitalism.

Social democracy calls for the establishment of a national investment fund derived from a progressive taxation system to curve the authority of the business class and benefit a great majority of people.

According to Exdell, this will become "effective by obtaining parital public ownership and any industry that is subsidized."

The new system would allow the government and the public some control over the policies of major corporations in exchange for subsidies. As a result, he said, the government would get potential equity in the firms and have some say in the corporation's policies.

Exdell said this would "re-industrialize society and make it more competitive but would also direct the policies of our corporations for the satisfaction of human needs."

SOCIAL DEMOCRACY is a feasible political alternative for the late 1980s and early 1990s, he added.

He stressed that human needs are not being met in the United States today because capitalism "creates economic inequality of income."

"Too much purchasing power is put in the power of people who save too much of it and not enough purchasing power in the hands of the people who might use it," he said.

The solution that Reaganomics calls for, Exdell said, involves cutting government services, regulations and taxes for corporations.

Exdell said supporters of Reaganomics tend to favor a recession because it lowers wages and makes our exports more competitive on the world market.

"THAT IS THE STRATEGY which underlies the most powerful and influential people in our society, who are willing to see Reagan embark on this program that is causing so much difficulty to many Americans.

"The strategy is basically to shift resources from the majority of people in society to the wealthy and the powerful, who are to invest that money in new equipment and launch the new surge into the economic future.

"They (Reaganomics supporters) argue that America will be able to compete with Germany, Sweden and Japan. The flaw in the argument is that business does not invest in much new equipment even after its tax cuts and even with its new savings. Our country's present productive apparatus is being used at only 70 percent capacity.

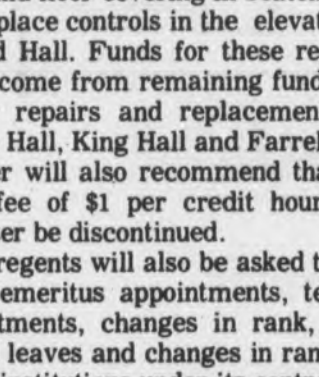
"The problem is, there are inadequate profitable investment opportunities for the people who control investment in the society and, as a result, they're not investing."

SOCIAL DEMOCRACY, Exdell said, would be a "radically different system that uses the enormous potentially beneficial production capacities of an industrial system to serve human needs apart from the need to make profits for a handful of people."

Exdell proposed democratic socialism as another alternative, adding that it is the most desirable but least probable alternative.

Workers under democratic socialism would control the companies they work for, he said. This system would call for a new labor system to eliminate the current system where "the majority are assigned drudgery and a minority are given interesting work."

With democratic socialism, everyone would be given jobs, eliminating unemployment and, as a result, the work week could be reduced, he said.



The salary gap between managers and workers would be no more than three to one instead of today's 500 to one, he said.

The most likely but least desirable alternative calls for progressive taxation to develop a national investment fund or a "pool of capital." This pool would enable money to be directed to those high-tech industries which compete in the international market.

This last system is "less cruel and pointless" than Reaganomics, he said.

Fee

see a policy, ultimately, that's much more uniform because I don't believe our needs are that much different from campus to campus."

Acker said no fee would be implemented at K-State without a fair amount of input from faculty, staff and students.

"THE CONCEPT HAS been beat around a little bit and discussed quite a bit," Acker said. "I think at this point, additional input would be most valuable when we know exactly what our base is and what the regents are considering for the fall of 1984.

"If we are forced by the tight economic situation to make a recommendation for an academic fee, I don't want to simply lock it in for perpetuity."

Acker said he would consider the fee an "emergency measure" and it would be a temporary charge if it could be supplanted by legislative appropriations.

The fee proposal was announced at a Student Senate meeting on March 31, however, Jerry Katlin, student body president, said because senate was unclear about any details of the fee, no action was taken.

"Until a specific proposal has been made, it's hard for senate to take any action," Katlin said.

IN A LETTER to Van Withee, president of Faculty Senate, Provost Owen Koeppe asked for reaction from Faculty Senate on an academic services fee.

In the letter, Koeppe said KU is considering requesting an academic services fee of $15 per student per semester. Funds generated by this fee would be used for the purchase of instructional equipment and library books.

Koeppe wrote that Acker is considering a similar fee at K-State which would generate approximately $500,000 per year. "If we do request the fee, we will probably request it for only one year. This will allow us to reevaluate the need for the fee next year after we know more about appropriations from the Legislature a year from now."

ON MARCH 31, the Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning reviewed the proposed fee as outlined in the letter from Koeppe, and decided that if such a fee were implemented, it should be assessed only for the 1983-84 academic year and that funds generated by the fee be used "solely for the library and for instructional equipment and supplies. Significant input should be solicited from K-State faculty members to identify guidelines for distribution of the funds obtained from the proposed service fee," the committee wrote in a report.

The proposal was scheduled to be brought up at a full Faculty Senate meeting on Tuesday, however, the session was adjourned before any discussion was heard on the matter.

IF A DELAY on proposing a fee is granted to K-State, final action on the fee assessment would be taken at the June regents meeting.

KU requested a similar delay on a proposal to establish an academic services fee so it may wait until it knows the exact amount of Other Operating Expenditures that will be available and for the results of a student referendum on the proposed fee, according to Friday's agenda.

Koplik said he didn't know whether the delay would be granted, but said because the regents fee schedules are in a period of transition and this is the first review of fees in 1983, the postponement may be worthy of consideration.

"I think the reason for the delay may be legitimate as it relates to legislative action," Koplik said. "I would hope this would not become a practice — that every year we're going to delay acting on fees until the Legislature takes its action because I don't think that's the way to set fees."

When asked whether additional fees were needed by the regents institutions, Koplik said that "money is needed."

"Whether it comes through the Legislature or comes from fees, its still money. My concern is the spread between who pays what share of the burden. But I don't have any qualms about the fact that our institutions need more money."

Acker

research and development," he said.

The programs in which the money will be used will be worked out with faculty and administrative leadership, Acker said, adding that there will be a council formed at the state level to review these decisions.

Acker said the University plans to spend a high proportion of the additional funding on equipment and operating expenses with a minimal amount spent on personnel.

"Assuming that the Legislature's and governor's attention to high tech is a long-term program, it will continue and there is growth potential to it.

"WE ANTICIPATE THERE will be additional investments in high tech in research and development in the regent system in subsequent years. That, of course, will affect how we invest money for the long term," he said.

Acker said he will see to it that the University will guide the research programs.

"We will have a lot of input from industry. It is important to have research programs that will foster the development of high technology industries — manufacturing and development — in the state of Kansas," he said.

OTHER APPROPRIATIONS in the bill include $1.5 million in capital improvements to begin work on Nichols Gymnasium.

"Our staff is proceeding to work with the state director of architectural services to advertise for bids. No date has been set for this.

"Detailed drawings (of Nichols) have been approved by the state director and the regents. Nothing should keep us from moving down the road and getting bids in by early July," Acker said.

Also appropriated was $125,000 for preliminary planning of a new chemistry/biochemistry building, $113,000 for preliminary planning and renovation of Weber Hall, $112,000 for repair of the roof of Weber Arena and the west wing of Weber.

Yet to be decided by the Legislature is faculty and student salaries and wages.

"The regents recommended a 9 and 7 percent increase in salary for unclassified and classified employees. The current discussion is in the neighborhood of 4 percent.

"We continue to press for the higher figures. We are aware that 4 percent, effective Jan. 1, has been discussed but we continue to press for a year-long increase," Acker said.

There has been no action, Acker said, on the $700,000 work-study program proposed by Carlin and said he expects discussion to begin in the closing session of the Legislature.

"The action taken by the Legislature (on work study) will depend on the kind of feedback it gets this week, Monday and Tuesday by students and others," he said.

"One of the reasons for this interim recess is for the Legislature to get reaction."

Mongrel reggae, funk album has offbeat charm

By JIM MELIZA
Collegian Reviewer

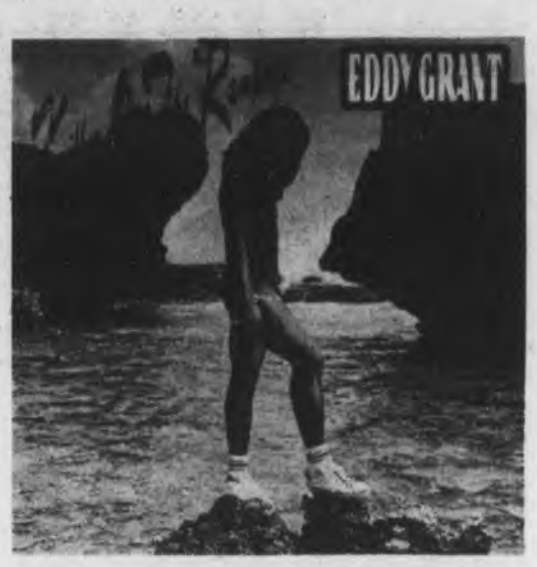
Eddy Grant is peering out of his window. What he sees and reports on his new album, "Killer on the Rampage," is not exactly encouraging.

From his studio in St. Philip, Barbados, Grant's window gives him a street level outlook on life. This detached observation doesn't inspire as much rage as the song titles might suggest; however, it does influence him. This influence results in a hollow-sounding tone that dominates the album.

Review

"Killer on the Rampage" is full of a hybrid music whose parents are reggae and funk. As the mongrel offspring of such a marriage, this collection of songs has an offbeat charm. It is neither as overpowering as funk nor as hypnotic as reggae. Still, this particular fusion exhibits some strong danceable qualities.

Grant acted as producer on this record and therefore is responsible for the balance of the mix. His tendency to emphasize vocals creates an atmosphere of closeness.



However, there is a drawback to this technique. Those who aren't accustomed to the insistent rhythms of funk or reggae may be struck with a sense of claustrophobia.

Grant seems to be haunted by scenes of unrest. The single, "Electric Avenue," is a recounting of the London street violence. The division between the haves and the have-nots is the apparent cause for the riots in the summer of 1981. In the song, the lyrics "Can't afford the things on TV/Deep in my heart I abhor you/Can't get food for the kid," are punctuated by background vocals chanting "electric avenue."

On the other hand, the title song takes that violent image of a killer and uses it to label some rival suitor. He acknowledges someone is trying to divide his relationship.

"Killer on the Rampage" is an album about surviving. Even though Grant doesn't seem to be threatened at every point in time, he nonetheless had to fight to achieve his position. It is an album that exhibits some strong compositions. At its worst, it is merely mediocre.

Recent playing of the "Electric Avenue" video on MTV may bolster the airplay across the country. This is only appropriate as Eddy Grant deserves to be heard.

ing there, temporarily, he moved back to Manhattan.

"I never dreamed of staying here, but I got so much work, I couldn't afford not to," he said.

Moorman's first job teaching in public schools was in Goodman in 1934. The average teaching salary in Kansas at the time was between $60 and $90 a month. His next job was in Steamboat Springs, Colo.

"I started out with 12 students, and by October that number had dwindled down to six. Nobody liked coming after school for band because of the great amount of snow. One day I realized these kids were born with skis on their feet, so I asked the students to bring their skis to band, and we would do marching band formations outside. By Christmas I had 65 students in my band," Moorman said.

After a long career as a formal educator, Moorman has continued to teach. He now gives students private instruction, usually drum lessons, at a downtown music shop and in homes. He specializes in working with beginning players. In addition, he is continuing his own education at K-State, taking a percussion methods class.

"I enjoy classes here. I believe they knock the cobwebs out of my head. Teachers are going out more prepared than we did years ago. But, of course, if they hadn't made progress in 50 years, something would be wrong," he said.

Moorman, who met his wife while he was playing in an orchestra at a dance, described a family "curse."

"There is this curse, and all you have to do to get it is make me mad. It is something you don't want...May all of your children be drummers. Mine are." Moorman said.

Basketball recruiting pays off with two signees

Although the first day of the basketball harvest season was not especially bountiful for K-State, the crop was of high quality. The men's and women's teams both signed one player on the first day of national letter-of-intent signing.

The men's signee was Eric Watson, a 6-foot-3 jumping-jack guard from Allen County Community College. The Lady 'Cats added a blue-chipper to its program with the signing of Sue Leiding from Tulsa, Okla.

Watson, a native of Brooklyn, Ill., transferred to Allen County after playing his first year of collegiate basketball at Arkansas State University. At Allen, he averaged 19.2 points a game last season, along with seven rebounds, shooting 50 percent from the floor and 67 percent from the line.

He is probably better known, however, for his jumping ability. Watson has a vertical leap of 40 inches and had as many as five dunks in one game last season enroute to being named an all-league performer in the Jayhawk Junior College Conference.

Watson played high school basketball at Lovejoy High School in East St. Louis, Ill., the same school that current K-State assistant basketball coach Darryl Winston attended. He averaged 28 points per game his senior year.

Head coach Jack Hartman was pleased with the signing of Watson to a letter of intent.

"Eric is an outstanding athlete and a tremendous basketball player," Hartman said. "He'll help us in many different ways."

A highly recruited player, Watson chose K-State after narrowing his choices to Missouri, Texas and Southern Illinois universities.

Another happy coach on the University campus was Lady 'Cat leader Lynn Hickey. She had reason to be with the signing of Leiding, a 6-2 center, to her team.

Leiding led Union High School to a 19-7 season which ended in the area finals. She was the leading scorer in Oklahoma in both 4A and 5A basketball, averaging 35 points and five rebounds a game, and scored 2,567 points in her four-year career. Her all-game high was against Ponca City as a junior, where she tallied 56 points.

She earned a handful of honors, including all-metro, and was twice tabbed all-city and all-conference. Her play for the Lady Redskins in tournament action netted her numerous all-tourney team accolades, including two MVP awards.

"Sue is the best center prospect in the Midwest," Hickey said. "She is a strong, physical player and even though she has been competing under Oklahoma's six-player rules, she has lots of potential.

"We saw her in a summer camp two years ago and have liked her playing abilities ever since. She is a welcome addition to the team," Hickey added.

Leiding hails from an athletic family. One of her brothers played football at Missouri, another at Texas and her sister played volleyball at Missouri. After narrowing her list of schools down, Leiding chose K-State over Texas, Missouri and Oklahoma universities.

Degner transfers; basketball team to lose big man

K-State sophomore center Neal Degner has informed head men's basketball coach Jack Hartman of his intentions to transfer to another school, Hartman announced Wednesday.

Degner, a native of Milwaukee, Wis., averaged 3.6 points for the Wildcats this past season. He played in 22 games and started in six of them.

According to Hartman, Degner believes that he might receive more playing time at another school and said he doesn't think he fits into K-State's plans for the future.

"Neal came to me and informed me of his intentions and I wish him nothing but success," Hartman said. "I'm sorry that K-State didn't work out as well as we had intended it to be for him. Neal's a good youngster and I'm sure he'll have success wherever he goes."

With the loss of Degner, K-State will lose its second center in two months. Les Craft, the leading scorer this past season has graduated, leaving a hole in the middle position.

According to Hartman, the loss of Degner shouldn't affect his squad's performance.

Women's track squad lands three recruits

The K-State women's track squad landed the services of three top-notch athletes on the first day of national letter-on-intent signing. Two state cross country champs, Nancy Hoffman and Mary Schaeffer, and last year's No. 1 prep javelin thrower, Julie Waage, all signed with the Wildcats.

Hoffman, a Westmoreland native, captured the state 1A cross country crown this fall with a time of 11:56. She capped off last year's track season as state 1A champ in the two-mile run and was runner-up in the mile.

Schaeffer, from Kansas City's Washington High School, earned the 6A cross country title, clocking in at 11:15 in only her second year of running.

Both are expected to be major contributors to K-State's cross country squad, which finished 13th at the NCAA National Championship this year.

Waage, a prep at David Douglas High School in Portland, Ore., became the No. 1 girl's javelin thrower in the nation a year ago with a toss of 164-9. She also won the state title in her specialty.

That mark would stand as second-best on the K-State honor roll behind Susie Norton's Big Eight record of 168-10 set in 1975.

Like Schaeffer, Waage is only in her second year of competing in track.

"We are thrilled to sign these three athletes on the first day possible," said Coach Steve Miller. "It is exciting to be able to land two of the state's best distance runners. Both Nancy and Mary will play important roles on next year's team since we are losing two of our top runners. We didn't have a javelin thrower this year, so we went after the best and were fortunate to get Julie. She will be a big boost to the field portion of our program."

Dickey hires ninth assistant coach; K-State grad joins football program

Former Wildcat football player and graduate assistant Bob Long was selected by K-State head football coach Jim Dickey to be the team's newest assistant coach.

Long will begin his duties at K-State Aug. 1 in accordance with new NCAA regulations which allow a member school to have nine full-time assistants.

Long, who was the head football coach at Wyandotte High School in Kansas City, Kan., last season, played football for the 'Cats in 1968 and '69 and lettered both seasons. From his split end position, he caught two passes his junior year and 11 passes his final season.

Upon graduation, Long served as a graduate assistant coach to Vince Gibson and then accepted the head coaching job at St. John's Military School in Salina. He stayed there two seasons before taking a similar position at Blue Valley High School in Stanley. After an eight-year stint there, he became the defensive coordinator at Coffeyville Junior College in 1981 before returning to his high school alma mater, Wyandotte, as the head coach.

Long's coaching responsibilities at K-State will be the tight ends. According to Dickey, he will have an immediate impact on the program.

"Bob is one of the fine high school coaches in Kansas," Dickey said. "He is very aggressive and enthusiastic, and I see him helping us immediately in both recruiting and on-the-field coaching."

Red Sox crush Royals, 18-4

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Glenn Hoffmann went 5-for-6, Jim Rice slugged a tremendous home run and a triple and the Boston Red Sox pounded out 21 hits and took advantage of five Kansas City errors in shattering the Royals 18-4 Wednesday night in below-freezing weather.

Rice, Rick Miller and Wade Boggs each knocked in three runs as the wind-chill factor dropped to 10 degrees late in the game. The start of the game was delayed 48 minutes by a cold rain.

Rice's opposite-field triple drove in Wade Boggs with Boston's first run in the first inning as Boston began its onslaught against Paul Splittorff, 0-1, who was shelled for eight runs in 3⅓ innings. Rice scored on Splittorff's wild pitch to make it 2-0.

Rice's first homer of the season, a 425-foot blast to left-center, capped a five-run fifth.

Rookie Mike Brown, 1-0, got the victory in his second major-league start. Bob Stanley recorded his first save with 3⅔ innings of relief.

Dwight Evans doubled and scored on Tony Armas' single to give the Red Sox a 3-1 lead in the third. The Red Sox poured across four runs in the fourth, four in the seventh and three more in the ninth. It was the most runs Boston ever had scored in Royals Stadium.

JOHNY GRUBB doubled home the tying and lead runs off New York relief ace Rich Gossage with two outs in the seventh inning and then scored on Larry Herndon's single as the Detroit Tigers defeated the Yankees 7-5 in a fight-marred game Wednesday night.

Loser George Frazier, 0-1, walked Tom Brookens and Alan Trammell with one out in the seventh, bringing on Gossage.

Lou Whitaker struck out but Grubb ripped a line drive to left-center, scoring both runners, and Herndon followed with his RBI single. Glenn Wilson homered off Gossage in the eighth for Detroit's final run.

Detroit reliever Dave Rozema's first pitch to Dave Winfield sailed over the Yankee slugger's head. Winfield charged the mound and threw a right-hand punch at Rozema as both teams poured onto the field. Winfield was ejected and Rozema was given an official warning by plate umpire Dale Ford. There were no further incidents.

JOAQUIN ANDUJAR hurled a seven-hitter Wednesday and George Hendrick had five hits, including two home runs, as the St. Louis Cardinals handed the Pittsburgh Pirates their second straight loss, 9-1.

Andujar, 2-0, hurled his second complete game and has allowed just one earned run in 18 innings this season. He retired 13 consecutive batters during one stretch.

Hendrick, going 5-for-5, had a solo home run in the seventh inning, a two-run shot in the ninth and also drove in a run during a five-run fifth inning as the Cardinals knocked out Pirates' starter Lee Tunnell, 0-1.

BO DIAZ greeted reliever Neil Allen with a grand slam with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, capping a five-run rally and powering the Philadelphia Phillies to a 10-9 victory over the New York Mets Wednesday night.

In other games, the Atlanta Braves smashed the Cincinnati Reds 6-1 Wednesday for their seventh victory in a row, the Cleveland Indians rallied for a 4-3 victory over the Texas Rangers, the Toronto Blue Jays eased to a 7-2 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers, and the Oakland A's rallied for a 5-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

KU loses recruiting battle; Curtis Aiken signs with Pitt

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Curtis Aiken, the high school point guard coveted by dozens of NCAA Division I colleges, signed a letter of intent Wednesday to attend the University of Pittsburgh because he said he believed he would have a chance to start as a freshman.

"I wanted to play in the Big East (Conference) all along," Aiken said.

Aiken made a verbal commitment March 4 to attend the Uniersity of Kansas, but he pulled back when Coach Ted Owens was fired March 21 and the status of assistant coach Jo Jo White, who recruited Aiken, was left up in the air.

White since has been hired by new Coach Larry Brown, former coach of the National Basketball Association New Jersey Nets.

"I felt like I was getting into a situation that was unstable in terms of the direction of the program," Aiken said.

"I know he (Brown) is a good coach. The thing about it is he doesn't know about Curtis Aiken. He's taking someone else's word on me.

"They are going to have to spend time rebuilding a program," the 5-foot-11-inch senior said. "I don't want to get into a situation like that."

Pitt coach Roy Chipman, who was here Tuesday night along with Brown to urge Aiken to attend their schools, was delighted.

"I think he's a great player," Chipman said. "I don't think there's any question" that Aiken, the highest scoring player in city scholastic basketball history and the fifth-highest scorer in state scholastic history, can start as a freshman, he said.

"In my opinion, he's one of the best high school point guards in the country," he added.

Aiken averaged nearly 40 points a game last season at Bennett High School, posting a city record 65 points in one game. The slick ballhandler scored 40 points or more nine other times this season.

Aiken tallied 2,130 points in his career and was named to Parade Magazine's All-America team and a backup on McDonald's All-America team. He got the top rating at Howard Garfinkle's Famous 5-Star basketball camp last summer.

British athlete learns U.S. system, leads 'Cat track team in long jump

By TRACY ALLEN
Assistant Sports Editor

Despite coming from a foreign country and leaving her husband behind, Kelly Wenlock has adjusted well to her new surroundings as a long jumper for the K-State women's track team.

Wenlock, K-State's record-holding long jumper, hasn't had any problems in making herself known in the track and field scene around the world.

Raised in London, Wenlock has been considered one of the top British track and field athletes ever to compete in the United States. Before her arrival in the United States, she established herself as an international-caliber jumper when she placed eighth in the 1980 Olympic trials at Crystal Palace in London.

Coming alone to the United States can be a difficult adjustment for athletes from overseas countries. But according to Wenlock, leaving her family and husband behind and traveling to America was worth the costs.

"My main reason for coming to the United States and K-State was because I wanted to improve my jumping and I wanted to get my degree," Wenlock said. "I also knew Kim Haggar (former K-State long jumper), and she told me how nice the people were here."

FOR WENLOCK, the adjustment from English track and field to U.S. track and field has been a pleasant experience.

"It (track and field) is a lot bigger over here," Wenlock said. "In England, you usually only run for a club, where here you can run for a club or for a team. It seems that people take it more seriously here."

Head coach Steve Miller believes Wenlock has adjusted well to the new surroundings. "In Europe, the competition is in the summer, and she has had to adjust competing during the school year," he said. "But I think she has adjusted well to the change."

Wenlock's decision to come to K-State paid off for the talented athlete. As a freshman, Wenlock became the Wildcats' all-time leading long jumper as she broke the school record in women's long jump with a leap of 19-6.

BESIDES BREAKING the school record, Wenlock set some other records in her first year as a Wildcat. Being the first woman in the conference to crack the 20-foot barrier, she owns the Ahearn Field House, K-State Indoor, Big Eight Indoor, K-State Outdoor and R.V. Christian Track records. The Christian track record came at the KSU Invitational when she jumped 20-11, which placed her in the top 15 long jumpers in the country.

Wenlock continued her success on the track as she won the Big Eight Indoor Championships with a leap of 20-6 and placed second in the outdoor meet with a 20-3¼ jump.

Her accomplishments didn't fade, as she traveled to both NCAA Indoor and Outdoor Championships. At the outdoor meet, Wenlock finished seventh.

Since being at K-State, Wenlock has continued to improve on her jumping skills, as well as her strength. "I feel that my technique is better this year than last year," she said. "I've always been a strong athlete and I think that I have even improved more on my strength."

THE ATHLETE still believes she has some weaknesses that she needs to improve on. "I think I could be a much faster sprinter than what I am," she said.

According to field-event coach Greg Kraft, Wenlock's performance has not been as strong this year. "Kelly has been off to a slow start this year," Kraft said. "But that might be because the Big Eight is probably one of the toughest conferences to compete in."

But even with the slow start, Wenlock is still far ahead of her performance from when she arrived in the United States. "Last year she made a big improvement in her jumping," Kraft added. "She is jumping 6 inches better than she has ever jumped in her life."

Kraft agreed that strength is one of Wenlock's main assets, describing her as "a very strong and powerful jumper." And her only weakness, according to Kraft, lies in her schedule.

"KELLY HAS such a long season that she has to spread herself thin," Kraft said. "By the time she finishes competing in one meet she has to go and compete in another meet. There are times when she has had to compete until July."

Miller said intensity is one of Wenlock's strengths as a jumper. "When she's on top of her game, she can be very good," he said.

Kraft and Miller said they believe Wenlock has a shot at making the Olympics, but Wenlock's mind is not on the Games.

"It's so difficult to tell what will happen," Wenlock said. "I would like to compete, but all I'm trying to do is improve on my jumping and get my degree."

Kraft has no doubts about the Wildcat jumper making the Games. "I definitely think she has the tools to make the English team," Kraft said. "If she can keep her weight and jumping under control, she can do almost anything."

House votes against modification proposal for nuclear resolution

WASHINGTON (AP) — With plenty of votes to spare, the House on Wednesday rejected efforts to dilute a nuclear freeze resolution labeled "a formula for permanent insecurity" by President Reagan.

House Democratic leaders remained confident of victory for the largely symbolic call for a "mutual and verifiable" halt in the arms race. But, with 39 amendments still pending, the House quit work on the measure in the early evening, putting off further consideration until next week.

By 229-190, the Democratic-run chamber rejected a major modification proposed by Rep. Elliot H. Levitas, D-Ga., that would have permitted older nuclear weapons to be replaced by newer ones in lieu of a flat freeze, with the new ones replacing the old ones in a one-for-two "strategic build-down."

Later, the House turned back, 219-195, a bid by Rep. Hank Brown, R-Colo., that would have endorsed the administration's insistence on reductions in U.S. and Soviet arsenals in advance of any freeze.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said the resolution would "win quite easily" in a final vote despite furious lobbying by the president.

Blackjack dealer Jeanine Taylor, sophomore in biology education, waits to "hit" a player with another card, during Casino Night at Derby Food Center. The event was part of Spring Fling activities which will continue today with Union Day. Events are scheduled from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Kansas delegation expresses view on nuclear arms freeze resolution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Bob Whittaker made no bones about the political aspect of his decision to back a nuclear weapons freeze resolution similar to one he opposed last year.

"For myself, I think you can't remove politics from it," the Augusta, Kan., Republican said Wednesday.

One difference in this year's freeze proposal is that it stipulates that such a halt to nuclear weapons deployment be a negotiated one that requires some action on the part of the Soviet Union, Whittaker said.

But another difference is in his district: the lines were redrawn last year to add to his southeast Kansas turf a Mennonite community that has spoken out strongly for the freeze.

The change in position means that the Kansas delegation probably will line up 3-2 in favor of the issue when it comes up for a vote in the House next week. The body recessed late Wednesday after its second day of debate on the largely symbolic, nonbinding resolution.

Democrats Dan Glickman and Jim Slattery said they also would vote for the measure, while Republicans Larry Winn and Pat Roberts said they would oppose it.

Whittaker noted that House members "are all over the field in how they interpret" the resolution, which essentially would direct the White House to pursue a "mutual, verifiable" freeze in its arms negotiations.

Glickman said that although he also supports the measure, "it is the most overstated proposition I've seen since I've been in the House. It is...just an attempt to let the world and the president know we'd like to get to the arms table" without specifying what should happen to any specific weapons system.

Commissioners back off from firearms resolution

By BETH BAKER
Staff Writer

After hearing opposition to a county resolution prohibiting the discharge of firearms on any platted land outside any city limits in Riley County, county commissioners said on Thursday they would not sign the resolution in its current form.

Before a plot of land of 30 acres or fewer is sold it must be platted, according to Marjorie Morse, commission chairwoman.

A design plan for the land's development must be outlined and approved by a planning board and the county commissioners if the land is under the county jurisdiction, she said.

Primary purpose for platting land is to establish who will be responsible for the upkeep of roads — the county, township or city, she explained.

Commissioners were bombarded with questions and accusations Thursday during a public hearing about the proposal. More than 100 people attended the hearing at the Riley County Courthouse.

The resolution, drafted by Dan Myers, county counselor,

Regents universities face probable tuition increases in 1984

When the Fiscal Affairs Committee of the Kansas Board of Regents meets today, a recommendation for a tuition increase for the fall of 1984 may be in the offing.

The Special Committee on Tuition and Fees, consisting of two regents, two university presidents and two students, will make a report to the Fiscal Affairs Committee and make its recommendation for action for the 1984-85 academic year.

"It wouldn't surprise me if they did propose an increase for fall '84," Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents, said. "I personally do not see how we can get along without one.

"But I also personally subscribe, for the time being, to the guideline of systemwide fees which would average about 25 percent (of the total cost of education), he said. "I think that's a very reasonable goal."

Koplik said students at regents schools currently pay approximately 22.5 percent of the total cost of their education. After a 20 percent tuition increase in the fall of 1983, student-paid monies will account for about 24 percent of the total cost.

"I figure it would take about a 10 percent increase (in tuition) to get to 25 percent for the fall of '84," Koplik said.

Regent Jordan Haines, chairman of the Fiscal Affairs Committee, said he is "under the impression" that a recommendation for a tuition increase will be made today.

"Students are not going to greet it (fee increase) with great enthusiasm," Haines said. He added that he sympathizes with students for having to pay more tuition, but said costs at K-State are still lower than costs at other Big Eight schools.

Haines said K-State tuition in the fall of 1983 will be $410, compared with $560 at at the University of Colorado, $540 at the University of Nebraska, and $610 at the University of Missouri.

K-State's tuition is currently $342, but it will increase by 20 percent next fall. In 1982, the regents estimated this 20 percent increase in all schools under their jurisdiction would generate approximately $10 million for fiscal 1984.

Haines said a 5 to 10 percent tuition increase is anticipated for the fall of 1984, which would generate approximately $4 million for regents coffers.

Haines said he believes students should be paying a "reasonable amount" and that the 25 percent fee-cost ratio is "not a perfect target" and is actually on "the lower end" of what students should be paying.

When the 1983 tuition increase was being discussed in April 1982, then-Regent Glee Smith said, "The 25 percent fee-cost ratio adopted several years ago was developed as an average. It has turned out to be a ceiling."

Haines said the proposal for an increase in 1984 will go to the Fiscal Affairs Committee when it meets at 10 a.m. today in the Jayhawk Room of the University of Kansas Student Union. It will be tabled for 30 days to allow for public comment.

Final action on the proposal will then be scheduled for the May 13 meeting of the regents.

Senate roll-call vote approves Soloman resolution

By LISA HOOKER
Government Editor

Student Senate narrowly passed a resolution Thursday in support of the Soloman Amendment after a ruling from Robert's Rules of Order.

In a roll-call vote, 29 votes were cast in favor of the resolution, 28 were cast in opposition, and there was one abstention. However, according to Robert's Rules, an abstention is not counted as a vote, and the number of votes was decreased from 58 to 57, thus making 29 a majority vote.

Associated Students of Kansas, a student lobbying organization, asked its campus directors to determine a stand from each of the universities' student senates concerning the amendment.

John Kohler, sponsor of the bill and campus director of the ASK, said he believes other areas need to be sought to achieve compliance with the Selective Service Act.

"But that doesn't mean we should be unwilling to support enforcement in this area just because other areas are lacking," Kohler said. He added that all the student senates of the institutions under the Board of Regents had opposed the amendment except K-State and Fort Hays State University.

He added, however, that the campus directors of ASK at these universities had indicated most of the controversy concerning the amendment had centered around the burden of proving registration with Selective Service.

In other business, senate approved 15 delegates to the ASK legislative assembly at Pittsburg State University this weekend. It also approved seven members of the student body president's cabinet.

Senate heard first reading of a bill that would allocate $1,230 to the Division of Continuing Education for the Folklife Festival, scheduled at CiCo Park on April 23-24. In exchange for funding, the Division of Continuing Education has agreed to admit students to the festival for half price.

Mark Terril, chairman of the Finance Committee, said the committee does not believe sponsoring such an activity is fair because students have to pay to gain admittance.

"It is not our policy to make donations," Terril said.

A bill that, as amended, would have allocated $152.45 to the National Society of Architectural Engineers for its national conference failed. The conference is scheduled for August 12-14 at K-State.

Senate moved into tentative allocations considering Legal Services, University Student Resource Center, Off-Campus Student Association, Consumer Relations Board, Sports Club Council and Women's Resource Center.

Terril explained the various accounts that the Finance Committee works from before allocations are considered.

The Reserves for Contingencies account is held for any group that finds it necessary to approach senate for funds during the year. The Reserves for Capital Outlay account is for one-time major purchases, such as the choral risers senate funded earlier this semester. Another account, Reserves for Nichols Gym, was originated in 1975 and reapproved this year as "a symbol to the Legislature that we want that (Nichols) rebuilt," Terril said. Reserves for Long-Standing Maintenance is an account that is held at $10,000 and is used in the case of extreme budget conditions, such as a drop in enrollment.

Resource center offers class credit, lab experience in efforts to improve existing services before fall

By DOUG BARTON
Collegian Reporter

Beginning next semester, University Learning Network and Sexuality Education and Counseling Service, the University peer sex counseling service, will take on a new image in the form of one comprehensive center.

In addition to uniting the two facilities, the new center will also include information on career planning, wellness, alcohol and other drugs, minority resources and academic assistance.

According to Fred Newton, associate professor of student development, all the existing services will be retained and improved as new services are added.

Newton's plans include added staff and a microcomputer.

"We're going from what I call the horse and buggy days of index cards to the age of the microcomputer," Newton said.

Susan Angle, counselor for student development, said the organizers of the center are planning on about 60 volunteers to help with its duties. In addition to those 60 students, there will be about 10 paid positions, she said.

Two types of volunteers will work at the center — information specialists and paraprofessionals. The information specialists will be required to answer reference questions and look up facts. The paraprofessionals will serve more as counselors and will be more extensively trained, Angle said.

COLLEGE CREDIT will be available for those paraprofessional volunteers who are willing to take a class. These students will be asked to volunteer for two semesters and take classes dealing with career exploration, study skills and counseling. Participation at the resource center will be considered the lab for the class and five hours of credit will be given for the two semesters of work.

Of the 60 volunteers, it is hoped that about 20 to 25 will be interested in becoming paraprofessionals.

"The thing that is really important, I think, is that this will be a student-to-student service," Newton said.

Students can ask questions ranging from "What do I major in to work in oil production?" to "Can someone help me improve my scores on multiple choice tests?" he said.

THE CENTER will also have some limited access to video tapes which will provide recorded statements from K-State alumni on what it is like to work in different fields such as forestry or veterinary medicine. Students will then be able to view the tapes and see what their potential jobs might be like.

The center will be situated in the basement of Holton Hall and will have facilities for walk-in services.

According to Angle, the appearance of the center will depend a lot on how the Kansas Board of Regents treats the Holton Hall fee issue.

"If the Holton Hall fee issue passes the regents, the center might be high on the list of priorities for that money," she said.

If the center does not receive any new money, both Newton and Angle said the services would still move into the basement of Holton and "make do."

THE NAMES of the existing services — ULN and SECS — are scheduled to be phased out, Newton said.

The people involved with the center are currently looking at the name U-LEARN, which would stand for University Learning Enhancement and Resource Network. This proposal is scheduled to receive final approval in a meeting today.

The center is scheduled to start operations July 1 and should be fully operational by the start of the fall term, Newton said.

Correction

It was incorrectly reported in Thursday's Collegian that Direct Student Loans are available for the summer session. The story should have said that National Direct Student Loans are available.

Applications for summer NDSLs are due April 22, and should be turned in at Fairchild 116. This is the first summer since 1980 that NDSLs are available to students, according to Robert Evans, director of student financial assistance.

Evans said that so far, approximately 70 requests for NDSLs have been turned in, but he said he expects three or four times that many by the deadline.

Cattlemen get signals of grain price hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cattle producers are getting signals from the Agriculture Department that costs may edge higher as the government's payment-in-kind program to cut grain output takes effect.

The latest was on Thursday when Agriculture Secretary John R. Block told industry leaders that his experts think "higher feed prices initially will result in lower feeder cattle prices" through part of 1984.

"We all know that large numbers of young animals will be coming off wheat graze-out acreage late in the spring," Block told a meeting of the board of directors of the National Cattlemen's Association.

"Most of those animals probably will go into feedlots for at least a short period of time," Block said. "However, cattle feeders may be reluctant to fill their lots at current feeder cattle prices. That could mean that feeder cattle prices will be under pressure well into next year."

But Block added that "any higher feed prices caused by PIK will not be reflected in higher break-even prices until the second half of this year" and in 1984.

"In time, as consumer demand rises with economic recovery, and meat output is tempered, cattle prices should strengthen."

Block said that "though times have been tough for everyone in agriculture, we all know that livestock producers fared better than many other farmers over the past year or so." Part of the reason, he said, was the record grain harvests of the past two years — which meant lower feed costs.

The latest USDA projections show that prices of feed steers on the Omaha, Neb., market may average about the same as the 1982 average.

Judge overturns 'handicapped baby' regulation

WASHINGTON — A federal judge overturned a Reagan administration regulation Thursday designed to assure that severely handicapped infants are not denied food or medical treatment, saying it is "arbitrary and capricious."

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell said the Department of Health and Human Services failed to use proper procedures in implementing the regulation, since it did not seek public comment.

Secretary Margaret Heckler of HHS said the decision would be appealed.

"There may well be defects in medical procedures and hospital policies governing treatment of seriously disabled newborns in some hospitals," Gesell concluded in his decision.

"The solution does not, however, lie in a hasty, ill-considered "Hotline' informer rule."

The lawsuit was brought by the American Academy of Pediatrics, the National Association of Children's Hospitals and Related Institutions and Children's Hospital National Medical Center of Washington, D.C.

The rules were published on March 7 and took effect 15 days later. They required 6,400 hospitals receiving federal money to post notices warning that failing to provide food or treatment to a handicapped infant might be a violation of the law and could lead to prosecution.

Withholding on interest would be 'too costly'

SALINA — A Salina banker who met with President Reagan this week said he told the president the intent of tax withholding on interest income is good but that the process would be too costly.

Gerald Shadwick, president of the First National Bank of Salina, was one of 11 bankers who met with the president Wednesday to discuss the withholding bill that is scheduled to go into effect July 1.

Shadwick told a news conference at his bank Thursday that the intent of the bill — getting money from tax cheaters — is good but that figures indicate withholding would cost the banking industry $1 billion to $2 billion a year. He said other figures indicate withholding would generate $2 billion to $3 billion in additional revenue each year.

Nearly as much revenue could be raised, Shadwick said, without intruding in the lives of ordinary citizens by updating the Internal Revenue Service computers to make it easier to find tax cheaters and by making all banks use machine-readable forms for their interest statements.

Shadwick urged that Congress delay the withholding provisions for two years while accurate figures on costs and benefits are formulated.

Solidarity calls for nationwide demonstrations

GDANSK, Poland — Lech Walesa's wife was frisked then questioned by Gdansk police for three hours Thursday. Meanwhile, the Solidarity underground in Warsaw called for nationwide anti-government demonstrations May 1.

Danuta Walesa said police questioned her about her husband's contacts with underground union leaders. She said Walesa, chief of the outlawed union, also was body-searched prior to nearly five hours' interrogation Wednesday.

The underground leaders Walesa met with over the weekend said in a communique handed to Western reporters in Warsaw that Poles should demonstrate across the country May 1 to show the people's unity against the regime.

Reached by phone at his apartment in Gdansk, Walesa refused to publicly endorse the call for protest, but indicated he did not oppose it.

"Those who signed it support it," Walesa said. "But you must understand, I am distancing myself from it, and also you must understand why I am saying this now."

President becomes grandfather second time

LOS ANGELES — President Reagan's son Michael has announced the arrival of the president's second grandchild, a 6-pound, 14-ounce girl.

Michael Reagan, 38, said Wednesday that his 32-year-old wife, Colleen, gave birth Tuesday at West Hills Hospital in Canoga Park.

The baby was named Ashley Marie Reagan.

Ashley Marie is the couple's second child. Their son Cameron was born in May 1978.

She's shooting for best offer on Annie's gun

ROYAL OAK, Mich. — A suburban Detroit woman plans to sell a 16-gauge, double-barrel shotgun that belonged to her great-aunt, sharpshooter Annie Oakley.

Bess Moses Edwards, 60, said she'll take the best offer she can get and Chet Parker, director of the Michigan Antique Arms Collectors, said he thinks the weapon will fetch $40,000 to $60,000.

The 1883 Parker Bros. shotgun belonged to Oakley, the star of Buffalo Bill's traveling Wild West Show, nearly a century ago.

Not paying taxes? How uncivilized!

This is a plea for all citizens to revert to a barbaric, primitive lifestyle, one free of W-2s, 1040s, Schedule C's and, headache of all headaches — taxes.

Yes. Today, April 15, is the day when mail carriers groan under the burden of last-minute "care packages," all labeled "rush order" and earmarked for national Internal Revenue Service centers in attempts to beat the midnight tax deadline.

While the philosophy of why Americans should pay taxes is noble — input into a central governing body to warrant programs and services beneficial to all the community — the output often comes out smelling far worse than roses.

Objections to the tax system are deserving. Paying hard-earned dollars into an impersonal, inefficient distribution system in which local needs are often buried under the more important task of building MX missiles substantiates taxpayers' gripes.

However, too often it's always the bad points of a system which are highlighted, and applause is rarely offered. While taxpayers' frustrations are legitimate, I challenge anyone to adopt another system offering a better solution.

But, all is not lost; a reasonable alternative does exist. A quote by Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes sums it all up: "Taxes are what we pay for a civilized society."

It's time to get out the clubs and loincloths.

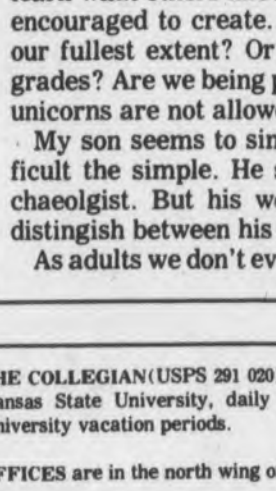
9-in-12 option needed

Editor,



Two recent letters to the faculty from the office of Vice President for Business Affairs have discussed some of the positive aspects of abolising the choice of receiving one's nine months pay in 12 payments. These letters do not touch upon any bad features. I wish to point out one, and there are probably more.

By requiring faculty to give up the 9-in-12 option, each such faculty member (in the year it is done) will add three-fourths of one month's salary to that year's total income and therefore, will pay more in taxes, both federal and state. For example, a $36,000 salary for a single person with no exemptions or reductions would be in approximately the 40 percent federal tax bracket, and the income tax on the three-fourths month pay ($3,000) at 40 percent is $1,200. Moreover, there is still the state income tax to figure.

In a time of stress on the budget of each faculty member at K-State, who needs more taxes!

Come on, Anderson Hall, think first before you decide to change things, and, while thinking about it, remember the effects upon staff and faculty.

Unicorns do exist

Alice: "Don't adults ever see unicorns?"

Mom: "Only through their children."

To make your children see reality, without stifling their imagination or their dreams, is one of the most difficult tasks a parent faces. At times it is almost impossible.

An untitled play by Sharon Fleming brought to my attention the fact that a time will come when I must teach my son the difference between what is real, and that which is unreal. I always knew that I would have to. I guess I just hadn't thought much about it before now. At his tender age of "almost five" the time seems far away. He still dreams of Star Wars and dinosaurs.

While I thought about how to teach Sean the difference, I began to wonder if the time for me to see unicorns had passed. Must I look through my son's eyes to have an imagination? Is my mind so cluttered in the real world that I have lost my ability to dream?

IN THIS UNIVERSITY SETTING, we are expected to learn what others know and with this knowledge we are encouraged to create. But are we allowed to create to our fullest extent? Or are we stifled by deadlines and grades? Are we being prepared for the real world where unicorns are not allowed?

My son seems to simplify the difficult and make difficult the simple. He sees no problem in being an archaeolgist. But his world crumbles because he can't distingish between his left and right shoe.

As adults we don't even think about which foot the shoe fits, but if we were to dream of finding dinosaur bones, we would only find ways of saying, "it can't be done," "I haven't the time," "there's no money in it."

Perhaps we dream of other things. A nice house with a white picket fence, a two-year-old car in the garage and a nice nest egg to retire with.

But for some of us unicorns do exsist. We refuse to be stopped by the reaching of one goal. We set our sights higher, we strive to grow. And while we're growing we stop to watch our children grow and dream. Through their dreams they generate a kind of energy to push us to be better, to set our goals higher, to be different, unique and have our own ideas.

THOSE WHO DO NOT SEE unicorns have tunnel vision. They see things in one dimension and refuse to accept, let alone try to understand, someone who sees things differently. Or they explain the world by simply saying, "That is the way it is, someday you will understand." How confined these people are, how little they will grow. And the worse thing is that these people stop their children from seeing unicorns. They stunt their children's growth before it begins.

Those who choose not to see unicorns must not stop their children from doing so. They must not push their negativeness onto their children. They must make an exception and see their children's dreams, for one day, those dreams may become a reality. How horrible the thought of a dream that could have been, being destroyed by those who refuse to see unicorns.

!!..THOSE KIDS WOULD JUST LOVE IT IF I DIDN'T SHOW UP ONE MORNING. THAT'S WHY I GO, DAY AFTER DAY."

Book theft: campus pilferage a major problem

Legal measures exist for victim; personalized texts aid in search

By CURTIS BALDWIN
Collegian Reporter

Delice Allen, sophomore in architecture and design, left her backpack in one of the cubicles outside the Union Bookstore while she stepped in.

When she returned to the cubicles, her backpack was gone. It had been stolen.

"I was just in there for five or 10 minutes and came back out and it was gone," Allen said.

Allen is not alone in being the victim of textbook theft at K-State.

"Last semester we probably had 20 people fill out stolen book reports," Dan Walters, textbook manager at Varney's Bookstore in Aggieville, said.

WALTERS SAID HE believes more books are stolen and the reports Varney's received were just the tip of the iceberg.

"I suspect there's double if not triple that. Some people might think if they tell the Union Bookstore, that may take care of it. Or if they tell the police or the campus police, we may never hear of any of those reports."

According to Walters, most books are stolen in ones or twos. Reports list classrooms, fraternities and sororities, Farrell Library, Ahearn Field House, Union Bookstore and residence halls as scenes of the crime.

To determine if a book is stolen, Walters said, Varney's must first buy the textbook back.

"What we'll do at the end of the semester when somebody comes in to sell a book, they have to have either a valid K-State ID or a valid driver's license and they can't sell the book without that. That's our accountability," he said.

"EACH BOOK WE BUY has an ID number or driver's license number of the person who sold us that book," Walters said. "Once the books are sold back, the store has record of who sold it to them."

Walters emphasized the importance of being able to identify the book.

"The key part is here on the form. It says any distinguishing marks, written name, author and title," Walters said. "If somebody can identify the book as stolen, we can trace it back directly to the person who stole it."

Walters said many students don't know the authors and titles of their books.

"If somebody had distinguishing marks on the book and can make it so we can tell it from other books we bought back, then there's hope that we might be able to find it if it was sold back here.

"SOME PEOPLE HAVE their names in the book, which is good, but some people can black that out," he said.

Walters said he would like to see students personalize their books so they can be identified if stolen.

"I'd say write your name on the inside of the cover sheet — it's something they can't tear out," he said.

Another measure Walters suggested students should take is to make up some kind of identification code. An example of a code would be circling a page number and putting personal initials near the circle.

Walters pointed out that marks described as highlighted in yellow and where the book was bought are not good enough.

Jerry Fields, textbook manager for the Union Bookstore, said he agreed with Walters that personalization of textbooks is important if the thief is to be found.

"Put your name on the spine of the book or buy an embosser," Fields said.

FIELDS SAID THE most obvious way to prevent book theft is not to leave the book unattended.

He was quick to add, "When you live with your books 180 days of the year, there are always going to be times when the books are open to theft.

"We buy back books all year round. We buy as an agent for a book wholesaler. So you can bring books in any time during the year and we'll quote you a price on them. At the end of the semester, during dead week and final week, we buy back for our store," he said.

Higher prices paid by bookstores for textbooks during dead week and finals week, Walters explained, are the reason for the high rate of book thefts during that period.

"We give the highest prices when we buy back for our stock for the coming semester," he said.

WHILE MOST STUDENTS express shock and disbelief over having their books stolen, Walters said not all have remained clueless as to "who dunnit."

"A lot of times people come in and they think they know who did it. And they're wanting to get the official report in and get back to the people. Sometimes they are right and sometimes they aren't."

Walters recalled one time when the students were right.

"I remember a year ago, somebody had gone through a fraternity early in the morning and stole a bunch of books and some of the guys were ready to take him out and let him have it. So they followed the proper channels back through. It was him and the authorities were allowed to do justice," he said.

Students are encouraged to reports textbook thefts to Security and Traffic, Lt. James Tubach of Security and Traffic said.

THOUGH FEW CASES of textbook theft are reported and even fewer solved, some book thieves have been caught.

Lungren issued a word of warning to any student who might consider stealing textbooks.

"I certainly caution the students from doing that because they don't stop and think what getting involved would mean. It would go on your record should it go through the civil court system as a misdemeanor or felony theft depending on the dollar amount.

"It's very hard to explain when you're looking for a job," she said.

Hobrock estimates 6,950 volumes disappear from Farrell each year

(Editor's note: A new electronic security system was recently installed in Farrell Library as a more efficient means of stopping book theft. After getting the approval of Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, Collegian Reporter Rhonda Wessel tested the system Wednesday.)

By RHONDA WESSEL
Collegian Reporter

I got caught committing a crime — and not just any crime. I stole state property. Just walked in, took it and walked out.

I tried to steal a book from Farrell Library. I don't even remember the title of it. I didn't need it but took it to see what would happen.

With more than 850,000 books on its shelves, Farrell loses an estimated 6,590 volumes annually to theft, Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said. Hobrock estimated the library loses — after taking in account books lost inside the library and books that are returned — about $54,000 every year due to thefts.

To test Farrell's system, I tried to steal a book.

But nothing happened until I walked through the security gate. It seemed so easy up to that point. The alarm then went off. It was loud, obnoxious and to say the least, embarrassing.

The time was 11:45 a.m. The lobby was full of students, who all turned to stare. Their eyes were cold and accusing. It seemed they were a lynching mob, and I was the first victim to try out the noose.

I refused to surrender my backpack and the evidence, claiming I had nothing to hide and they had no right to search my belongings.

Finally, my backpack was confiscated. The teller took out the book. It was obvious that I stole the book, but the attendant politely, almost too politely, asked if I had checked the book out.

I BEGAN TO LIE. "I don't have my ID, and I don't have the time to go back and get it," I said.

I tried a bribe. "How about a few dollars? I take the book and you forget it happened."

"I won't do that," she said. "That's how we lose books. I'm going to have to go get someone to take care of this."

Luckily for me that someone was Hobrock, whom I had arranged the simulated theft with earlier, and Rachel Moreland, associate professor of Farrell.

Stealing books from Farrell seems to be the fad now. Unless, of course, those 6,590 books have grown legs or wings and decided to leave.

"Over the past five years we have been coding books to go into the computer inventory when it goes on line," Hobrock said. "We have a practical inventory. The total number of books cataloged this year is 122,369," he said. "Of that total, 6,590 are assumed to be stolen because they are not on the shelf and have no record of being checked out."

THE ACTUAL FIGURES are probably higher because with 850,000 volumes it is impossible to take a complete inventory on a regular basis, he said.

"We only know if a book is missing, if a student asks for it and it isn't there. We run a tracer on the book to determine if it is checked out. If it isn't and it can't be located, we naturally assume that it is stolen.

"They are stealing state property and need to be aware of that fact," Hobrock said.

He said there is not a pattern to the types of books that are taken.

"I don't think that they are taking them out of need, but instead are taking them to see if they can beat the system," he said.

NO MATTER WHAT actions the library takes, Moreland said if an individual wants to take a book, he will probably be ingenious enough to find a way to beat the system.

"We know that people have thrown books out the window and have checked out books, waited until they were re-shelved and then took them again," Moreland said.

The library windows have been sealed and a new system has been devised to check the standings of the books.

"If the buzzer goes off and the gate locks, the attendant will ask to see what is in the backpack. We always assume that the student is honest.

"If there is a book in the backpack, the attendant will ask the student to go to the desk and check it out or verify that it has been checked out," Hobrock said.

Cindy Baker, freshman in secondary education and employee of Farrell, said it is not always a stolen book that sets the alarm off.

"THE BUZZER GOES off quite a bit. People get real embarrassed, but it is usually a textbook that sets it off or the book hasn't be completely desensitized after it was checked out.

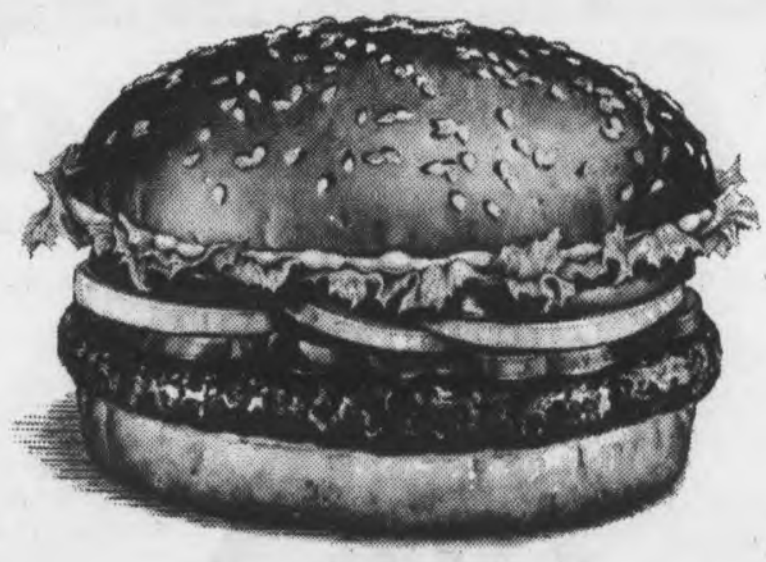
"Most of the books we lose go out the building through other ways besides the front lobby — like the window," she said.

Students give different reasons for taking books out of the library without checking them out.

One student remarked that it was "a challenge" to try to think up different ways to get the books out without getting caught.

"I don't take anything out of the library without checking it out unless they (library personnel) say that I can't check something out. I feel like I pay for their services and the materials in the library so I should be able to check out anything in the library. If I can't, I just take it," another student said.

"I don't think that the people taking these materials realize that they are hurting others. They are also hurting themselves because we have to spend what little money we get on replacements," Hobrock said.



"All I can say is please don't steal books. We are a poorly funded place anyway," he said. "If anyone has books, please bring them back. There will be no questions asked."

Teamster leader in fair condition in KC hospital with lung disorder

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Teamsters President Roy L. Williams, sentenced to prison for his part in a conspiracy to bribe a U.S. senator, was in fair condition Thursday with a chronic lung disorder, officials said.

"Mr. Williams is much improved from when he was admitted," said James Berry, president of the Park Lane Medical Center. "He's still having some breathing discomfort, but he is doing better."

Meanwhile, the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago was considering a motion to stay an order requiring the union leader to turn himself over to authorities at the Medical Center for Federal Prisoners in Springfield, Mo., on Friday. A deputy clerk of the court said a quick decision on the motion seemed likely.

Berry said that, if Williams continued improving, he would be in good enough condition to make the 125-mile trip from Kansas City to Springfield.

Williams, 68, was admitted to the Kansas City hospital's intensive care unit Tuesday with "accute respiratory distress," Berry said. Williams was transferred to a private room Wednesday, and his condition was upgraded from serious to fair on Thursday, Berry added.

He suffers from emphysema, and was receiving routine oxygen and medicinal therapy, Berry said.

Williams is close to the founder of the Park Lane Medical Center, Dr. James A. DiRenna Sr., an osteopathic surgeon who has provided outpatient care under contract to Teamsters Local 41, Williams' base of power since the mid-1950s.

Williams and four others were convicted in December of conspiring to bribe then-Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev., by offering him exclusive rights to buy Teamster-owned Las Vegas land at bargain price, in exchange for his help in defeating a trucking deregulation bill. Cannon was not charged in the case and the bill eventually passed with his support.

Prosecutors contended during the trial that Williams was involved with the crime syndicate in Kansas City. The government case centered on 50 FBI-monitored conversations obtained during 13-months of electronic surveillance.

U.S. District Judge Prentice Marshall in Chicago sentenced Williams in March to 55 years in prison and fined him $29,000. Marshall ordered Williams to appear at the Springfield facility so doctors could examine him and prepare a report within 90 days.

Williams was elected to the $225,000-a-year presidency of the 1.6 million-member union shortly after he was indicted in the bribery-conspiracy case in 1981.

End of gasoline price decline 'almost inevitable'

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A round of price increases this week by big oil companies — coupled with the April 1 boost in gas taxes — almost certainly marked the end to a two-year decline in retail gasoline prices, analysts say.

Oil companies, seeking to increase their profits after a rash of price wars, have raised prices as much as 4 cents a gallon to dealers and distributors.

Those increases come on top of a nickel-a-gallon rise in federal gasoline taxes effective April 1.

Dan Lundberg, publisher of the Lundberg Letter, which keeps track of gasoline prices at 17,000 service stations nationwide, said "it is almost inevitable" that the wholesale price increases as well as the full tax increase will be passed on to customers at the pump.

"We've probably seen the bottom in gasoline prices for now," said William Randol, a petroleum industry analyst at the investment firm First Boston Corp.

Prices began rising last month after the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed on lower prices for its crude oil.

The $5 reduction in OPEC's base price to $29 a barrel, rather than leading to further reductions, appeared to stabilize world crude oil prices by removing the uncertainty caused by OPEC's earlier failure to agree on how to deal with the oil glut. Prices for oil on world spot markets have started to rise.

Rising gasoline prices could reverse some recent gains on inflation. Record declines in gasoline prices in February contributed to a 0.2 percent drop in consumer prices.

Typical of the latest increases was a move Thursday by Amoco Oil Co., the nation's leading gasoline seller, to raise wholesale prices by 1.7 cents a gallon in the Milwaukee area and by 1 cent a gallon in Peoria, Ill. Just a day earlier, Amoco, the marketing arm of Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), raised wholesale prices by a half-cent to 1 cent a gallon in eight other marketing areas, including Chicago, St. Louis, Baltimore and Washington, D.C.

Shell Oil Co. said it has raised wholesale prices by as much as 4 cents a gallon in parts of the West and between 1 and 2½ cents a gallon elsewhere.

Raising prices up to 3 cents a gallon at West Coast locations were Chevron USA, the marketing arm of Standard Oil Co. of California, and Mobil Corp.

Stephan alleges impropriety in Wichita city, school election

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Attorney General Robert Stephan on Thursday said an investigation by his office, in conjunction with Sedgwick County District Attorney Clark Owens, revealed "improper and possibly illegal" activities by an anti-tax group in city and school board elections last week in Wichita.

Although Stephan's spokesman Neil Woerman said "a possible case could be made that bribery occurred," no charges will be filed because state law is not clear on the issue when candidates for local office are involved. The attorney general called for a new state law to revise bribery statutes and prevent future problems in the area.

"We believe this type of conduct is wrong," Stephan said in a prepared statement. "We cannot tolerate the buying and selling of candidates for office.

"Kansas governmental ethics laws clearly make it a crime to offer this kind of 'conditional campaign contribution' to candidates for state office. It would be a crime for any public officer or employee to accept such a bribe. There appears to be a gap in the law, however, in regard to local candidates."

Stephan said the improprieties involved the Wichitabased Home Owners Trust political action group. He said the group offered campaign contributions ranging up to $250 to candidates for Wichita city offices and people running for local school boards.

Candidates were given the money, however, only after each signed a contract agreeing to vote for budgets in the next year that were at least 1 percent lower than the previous year.

"We don't believe we can prosecute HOT for offering its conditional contribution to the Wichita city commmission or school board candidates who were not incumbents," Stephan said.

Nor did he believe he could prosecute Cheri Preston, the lone candidate who accepted a HOT contribution. Mrs. Preston not an incumbent and lost her bid for the Wichita city commission. She later returned the money after becoming concerned that acceptance might violate city ordinance.

Aid-registration link brings 'strong' warning

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Department of Justice has warned the U.S. Department of Education to stop even going through the motions of making male financial aid applicants swear they registered with the Selective Service.

In what one source called a "strongly worded" statement, the Justice Department said any further education department efforts to require young men to register might violate a preliminary injunction issued last month in Minnesota against the law linking military registration to federal financial aid.

In that ruling, U.S. District Court Judge Donald Alsop said the law may violate students' protection against self-incrimination, and enjoined the government from enforcing the law until the full case against the government is heard this July.

Until the recent warning from the Justice Department, however, education officials have been assuming Alsop's injunction applied only to his federal court district in Minnesota, said Department of Education spokesman Duncan Helmrich.

But Justice attorneys now are concerned that any efforts to implement the law may violate the Minnesota injunction.

Helmrich declined to comment on the warning until he receives "official word" from Secretary of Education Terrel Bell.

But the Los Angeles Times reported that as a result of the warning the Deptartment of Education will send letters to more than 6,000 campus financial aid officers around the country to advise them they no longer have to worry about certifying that aid applicants have registered for the draft until the Minnesota case is decided.

More students 'go military,' recruiters say

LAFAYETTE, Ind. — John Lawrence is a senior engineering major about to graduate near the top of one of the top engineering schools in the United States — Purdue.

Lawrence probably wouldn't have much trouble getting an engineering job in May at or above engineers' $25,800 average starting salary.

But Lawrence is going to the Navy instead, for about $4,000 a year less.

"It's perfect," he says. "The money is competitive, and (I know) the Navy is going to take care of me. From the moment I'm sworn in in May, I'll be financially secure."

The vision of one of the nation's most eligible seniors forsaking private industry — or anything else — for the military would have been improbable in years past. This year, however, the armed forces are cleaning up among college students.

ROTC (Reserve Officers Training Corps) enrollment has been creeping upward for years, but this year has spurted higher and faster again.

"Along with the rise in enrollments, there has been a fast rise in the number of ROTC scholarships — very fast," said Army ROTC spokesman Wesley Williams. Indeed, the number has almost doubled since the 1979-80 school year.

Some 43,000 students — 18,000 more than expected — took Army aid in 1982.

"We've come of age," said Navy Recruiting Command Lt. Barton Buechner. "All of our recruiters are getting a much better reception on campus."

"You don't have the 'anti' people on campus anymore," agreed Kansas State ROTC Lt. Col. Don McCann.

"More people go into ROTC because of the money," adds John Keith, also of K-State. "It's a major factor. You better believe it."

The Pentagon, in a recent survey of 5,600 ROTC cadets, found that 43 percent of the cadets listed college financial demands as a contributing factor in their enlistment. Sixty-nine percent listed patriotism as another motivating factor.

Tenure exam causes campus 'mass exodus'

RENO, Nev. — Under a new tenure code, the president of the University of Nevada system can order any faculty member he wants to take a physical or mental exam. Faculty members are enraged about it, and a "mass exodus" may be starting as a result.

"If we had Einstein here, we'd fire him," grouses James Adams, dean of Nevada-Las Vegas' graduate school, adding the brilliant physicist was probably peculiar enough to have ordered to take a mental exam.

The regents have "greatly diminished the hand of the faculty while strengthening their own hand" in running the system, adds Richard Curry, head of Nevada-Reno's Faculty Senate.

If a teacher refused to take an exam, Curry speculated the teacher would be "completely open" to being "dismissed."

The mental exam rule, along with other features of the newly revsed tenure code that, according to the American Association of Universtiy Professors (AAUP), lets the "administration decide without any consultaion that a faculty member is not performing his duties."

Scores of schools and college systems around the country are tinkering with their tenure and faculty codes this year, in part because administrators, scrambling for ways to cut campus costs to balance their budgets, want more flexibility in hiring and firing teachers.

AAUP lawyer Patricia Hollander said she hopes the Nevada regents might be persuaded to drop the mental exam provision "when things cool down." If not, she said she believes the rule may prove "vulnerable" when put to a court test.

Professor's Christian teachings cause controversy

By JUDY MILLS
Collegian Reporter

George Rekers, professor of family and child development, said he believes his recent reassignment of classes is due to the fact that he presents a Christian viewpoint in his undergraduate courses.

Rekers received a memo Nov. 3, 1982, from family and child development head Judy Rollins which stated, "I reassigned you to teach at the graduate level in the spring of 1983 because I believe your research expertise and scholarly knowledge is best understood at the level of competencies which our graduate students exhibit."

Rekers said he "feels that some administrators in this college would like to censor a historical Christian viewpoint on family relationships even though the Kansas people and Kansas law on family issues does reflect a Christian value system."

"I BELIEVE THAT if I didn't have tenure, I would lose my job at the University because I am an outspoken Christian (in my classes)."

The reassignment, Rekers said, was also because of complaints from students in his undergraduate classes who believe that no Christian viewpoint should be taken at all in a state-funded university.

Classes which Rekers no longer teaches are Family Relationships and Sex Roles and Parenting.

Rekers explained that in his classes he presented both a Christian viewpoint and opposing viewpoints on such issues as abortion, homosexuality and family relationships.

"In the course material more than one viewpoint was shown. In an anti-abortion film, Dr. Everet Koop, U.S. Surgeon General, gives reasons why he is against abortion.

"THERE IS ALSO a religious philosopher who presented a historic Christian influence on our laws and history. I showed that film in both classes. I also showed a viewpoint for abortion. The textbooks favored abortion and took an anti-Christian stand," he said.

Rollins said Rekers' class reassignment was unrelated to teaching methods.

"I have talked to Dr. Rekers on several occasions. He has assured me he presents both sides (in his classes). His interpretation and my interpretation on how both sides are presented are different. But this had nothing to do with my rescheduling of his classes," Rollins said.

Next fall, Rekers will resume teaching two undergraduate classes. He said the reasons he will be allowed to teach these courses are budget cuts and the fact there is no one else to teach the courses.

ROLLINS SAID Rekers was given the two undergraduate classes because he requested them. If he would have asked for them in the fall of 1982, Rollins said "he possibly would have gotten them if we would have had the need."

Rekers said the reassignment was intended to intimidate him into being silent. "Because I do have tenure, all they can do is reassign me," he said.

The dean of the College of Home Economics, Ruth Hoeflin, said she didn't know anything about the situation.

"I know nothing about his workload. I really don't know. That's the kind of thing that is left to the department heads," Hoeflin said.

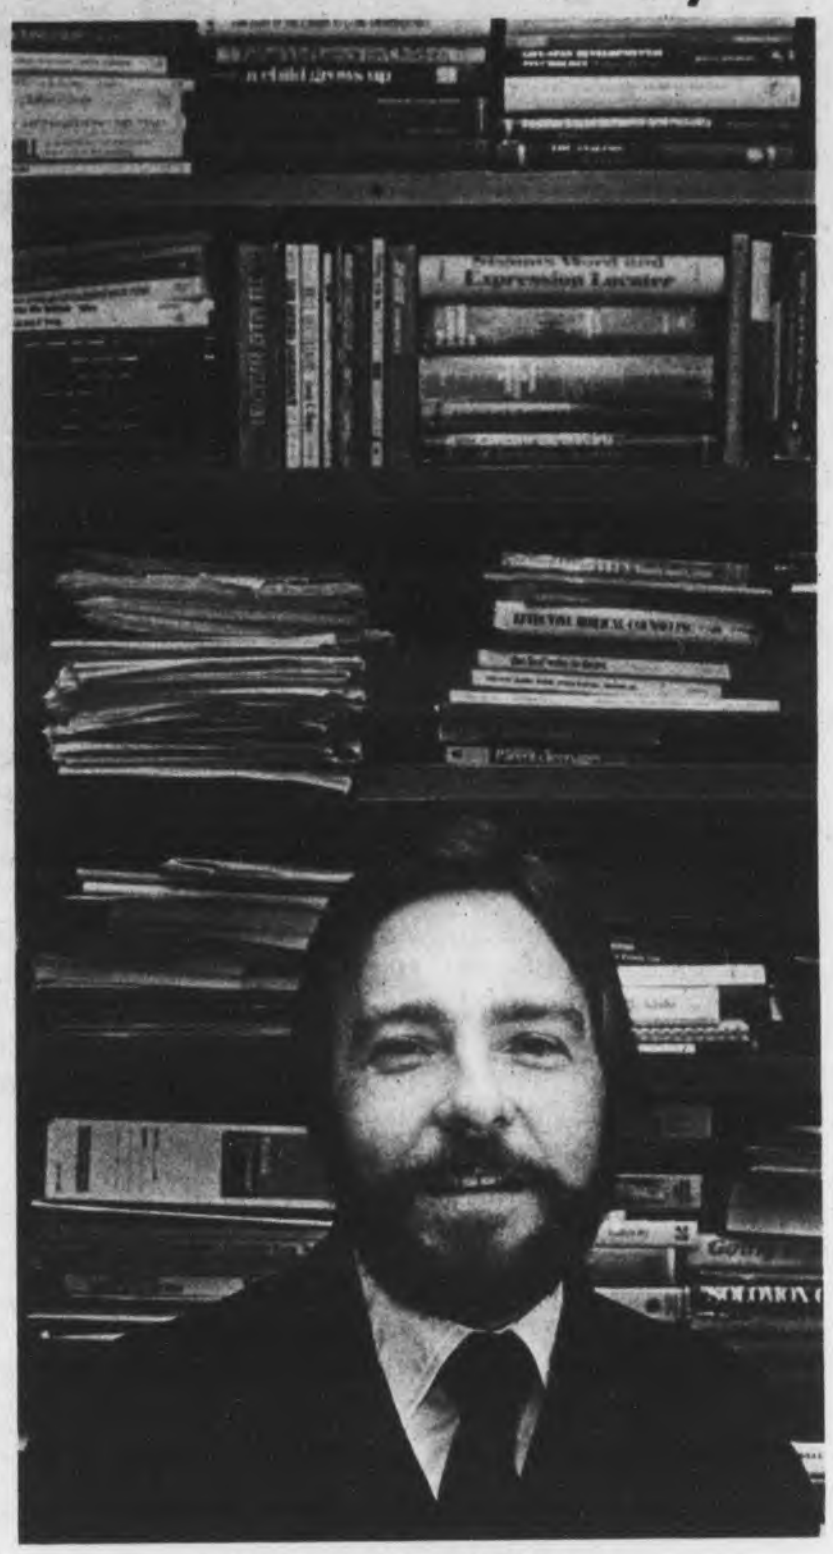
Rekers said several inconsistencies have arisen that point to religious censorship.

"Growing Up Straight" is a family education book written by Rekers for parents and older teen-agers on the topic of how homosexuality can be prevented.

"EARLIER THE SAME semester, there was an ad in the Manhattan Mercury for an autograph party for 'Growing Up Straight' at the Christian Bookstore. The department heads told me to ask the bookstore not to advertise this," Rekers said.

The ad contained the fact that Rekers was a professor at K-State.

"The department head said that I could not publish the fact that I favor heterosexuality. I do take a Christian viewpoint in that book. People might assume that the University has a policy like that," Rekers said.



Rollins said the department "did not try to stop the ad in any way except Rekers' name being associated with the University. His philosophy is not represented in any way by the University.

"I WOULD SAY Dr. Rekers or no one would lose their position because they were an outspoken Christian. If he were to lose his job, it would be because he was no longer doing what he was hired to do," Rollins said.

Rollins said she wants all faculty members in her department to present all of the academic data they have access to "when emotion-laden issues are involved in what they teach.

"It is my belief that they should present both sides of an issue in respect for all students on campus who have different religious and philosophical beliefs," she said.

Tax increase stalls in committee as Republican crosses party lines

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bitterly divided Senate Budget Committee worked itself into a deadlock Thursday night over how much — or even whether — to raise taxes next year after a Democratic-led move to scuttle the remaining installments of President Reagan's tax cuts failed on a tie vote.

The 11-11 tie came when Sen. Mark Andrews, R-N.D., joined all 10 Democrats in calling for a $30 billion tax increase, the amount that would be raised if this year's 10 percent personal income tax cut were repealed. The proposal also was based on the elimination of "indexing" in future years — changes in the tax brackets designed to compensate for the effect of inflation.

"I think we're going to have to increase taxes if we're going to be honest with ourselves," he said. The bid failed when the committee's 11 other Republicans voted no.

In addition to rejecting the $30 billion proposal, the committee rejected proposals for a smaller 1984 tax increase, a larger one and no increase at all.

The Budget Committee does not write tax legislation, but the revenue and expenditure figures it recommends, if adopted by Congress, could all but force a tax bill to be passed to meet the budget.

The result was a deadlock that produced several hours of fruitless private negotiations and an announcement that the committee would give up its work until next week.

"It's obvious we can't strike a balance at this time. We're unable to arrive at anything that looks like a compromise," said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., the committee chairman.

Sources, who asked not to be identified by name, said that in the private talks, Domenici had proposed a $7 billion tax increase for 1984, but Democrats led by Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., had rejected it.

Domenici himself said he was struggling with five committee members who refused to go along with any tax increase, and his own desire to achieve a compromise that the other seven GOP members would accept.

Senate GOP Leader Howard Baker, who was involved in one meeting, was said to be against a 1984 tax boost as high as $7 billion.

The deadlock on taxes came after the panel had completed its tentative spending decisions on a 1984 budget, providing $11.3 billion more for non-defense programs than Reagam wanted and $3.3 billion less for defense.

Overall, the plan called for spending of about $851 billion. The deficit was estimated at $192 billion, although the final figure depended on the panel's final decision on a possible tax increase.

In contrast to the bipartisan spirit that prevailed earlier in the week on many spending proposals, the tax issue provoked sharp debate.

Andrews said higher taxes were essential to reduce deficits and lower interest rates.

But Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo., said Republicans were on the verge of doing "precisely the opposite" of what they promised during the 1980 election campaign that swept Reagan into office and restored GOP rule to the Senate. "We're raising taxes, raising spending and giving the largest deficits" in history, he said.

The plan by Chiles, supported by Andrews and all 10 Democrats, called for a tax hike of $30.2 billion in 1984 and increases totaling nearly $267 billion over five years. Similar to the proposal in the budget approved by the Democratic-controlled House, it is based on the assumption that Congress will repeal both this year's 10 percent tax cut and indexing — a provision that will lower tax rates in the future to account for inflation.

Custodians

Change in hours provides 'better services'

By LARRY BOYD
Collegian Reporter

Changing the University janitors' hours from night to day has "provided better services" to K-State, Al Seely, chief of custodial services, said.

"As a service aspect, the campus community, students and faculty have been very pleased with the changes so far," Seely said.

The changes were made so the University could cut energy costs by having janitors work during the day, he said. This change would allow lights and heating to be shut off at night in campus buildings.

Seely said before the changes in custodial hours were made, many janitors were working from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. Now, after phasing all but 13 workers out of those night shifts — since the program was started Dec. 6, 1982 — most janitors are working from 6 a.m. to 3 p.m.

He said the actual amount of money saved would not be determined until the entire custodial staff is moved from night to day shifts, enabling figures to be compared after a complete changeover.

Fred Ferguson, director of buildings and utilities, did not give an amount saved because of the new janitor hours. However, he said the University's energy consumption is 13.6 percent lower for the first nine months of the current fiscal year, than the average of the last three years.

According to Seely, by May 16 all of the custodial workers will be working the 6 a.m. to 3 p.m. shift, except for three or four support workers who are in charge of locking and unlocking campus buildings.

The new hours were orginally planned to be from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m. but were changed because, Seely said, it "worked better for faculty people because we can get out of their hair."

Seely also said the new hours are the most efficient time to clean the buildings.

"They can keep the buildings cleanest while they're used the most," Seely said. "They (the janitors) are working when the buildings need to be cleaned."

Ferguson agreed.

"As a user, I'm happy with having the janitors working during the day when they can provide better services," he said. "They are around during the day when things need to be done."

Although most of the janitors are happy with the new hours, Seely said, some of the workers would rather work at night. As a result, the 13 workers who are working at night requested to be switched from the night to day shift last.

Because all of the janitors will be working during the day by May 16, Seely said some employees may have to be switched to other University positions which are night jobs.

Seely also pointed out that the new janitors' hours include an hour for lunch, which was not included in the night shift. Hence, the salaries have not changed due to the switch in hours.

THE JOB INTERVIEW
Important now, more than ever.

A tight job market and hard economic times mean fewer job interviews. When you do land an interview, you want to give it your absolute best shot.

Prepare yourself. Study the company. Anticipate questions. Rehearse in your mind answers you might give about your qualifications and contributions you might make to the company. Find ways to volunteer pertinent information about yourself that might not be asked by the interviewer.

Be positive. Put your best foot forward.

And by all means, dress to make a positive impression.

Music festival offers chance to learn

Concert choir students 'nervous,' but eager to sing; composer praises rendition of his world premiere

By HUEY COUNTS
Collegian Reporter

A chance to learn, to hear, to talk first hand with someone you've grown to respect; also a chance to be apprehensive, and a time of trying to measure up to standards already set.

This week music students have had these chances to talk to those they respect. It has also been a week for any student to use the opportunity and attend the music department's Contemporary Music Festival. The festival included lectures, concerts, an opera, a composing workshop and a student recital.

The main attraction of the week were appearances by Alun Hoddinott and Evelyn Petros. Hoddinott is a famous Welsh composer, currently head of the music department at University College, Cardiff, Wales. Petros is a soprano singer of the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

Last Sunday the K-State Concert Choir gave the premiere performance of Hoddinott's composition, "The Growing Weight of Age." The following night the K-State Symphonic Wind Ensemble performed the "Music of Alun Hoddinott."

"I enjoyed both performances very much. The Sunday performance was good and Monday night was stunning, really good," Hoddinott said.

WERE THE PERFORMERS nervous performing Hoddinott's music while he was a member of the audience?

"I was kind of nervous. I was enthusiastic about what we'd done. We only had the music two weeks ahead of time," Carol Heinz, senior in music education, said. "He (Hoddinott) came in Tuesday and said he was pleased with what we'd done and was happy it turned out so well."

Marcia Craft, sophomore in music education, said, "No one else would have noticed if we made a mistake, but he would."

Rod Walker, associate professor of music and choir conductor said he understood his choir's fears, but had confidence in its ability.

"They're a little bit nervous, but they're so trained that it's not that intimidating," he said.

THE FESTIVAL HAS had a positive influence on several students who participated. The influence has come from exposure to the composer and from a feeling of unity in the music department.

"I think, as music students, we need to be exposed to living composers. We need to get their input," Heinz said.

Because of the extra practices, the choir became closer together while they were getting ready for the Sunday performance, Heinz said.

"The festival is a real good opportunity to learn things. Manhattan needs the exposure these famous people bring in," Craft said.

Everyone has different ideas about music and the festival helps bring ideas together, Walker said. Students are able to meet a famous composer and find out how students in his country are taught.

HODDINOTT SHARES the same beliefs.

"When we have guests in my country it is very stimulating. Students like to see different faces. They are always looking forward to a visit from someone they haven't seen," he said.

Marcelle LaVine, sophomore in applied music, found out the need to be organized and prepared for a visiting artist.

"When someone this well-known internationally comes, you have to know what you're doing. It has to be a good program, worth the man's time, if you want famous people to keep coming," she said.

Singer dispels opera doubts; voice carries life, emotions

By SUE SCHMITT
Staff Writer

The reason people love opera is a mystery to many. Evelyn Petros helped solve the mystery Wednesday night. In a near perfect perfomance, Petros captured the hearts of the audience and may have even converted a few doubters to opera lovers.

Review

Petros, a soprano for the Metropolitan Opera, presented an entertaining variety of music ranging from opera to modernistic music in All Faiths Chapel.

The first half of the concert was devoted to a more classical repertoire, while the second half was filled with modern compositions.

The first song was from the Handel opera "Alcina" — and "Tormani a vagheggiar" was performed in true Baroque style.

The second piece by Turina, was a medley of three songs of unrequited love. Although it was sung in Latin, Petros was able to convey the meaning through her vocal expression, diction and dramatic presentation.

The "Jewel Song" was not sung with quite as much emotion, perhaps because it was not about love. From Gounod's famous opera, "Faust," the program noted "Jewel Song" as one of the masterpieces of musical literature for the soprano. The song is about a girl who finds a box of jewels and sings of her joy. Petros showed her versatility as a soprano in this number.

In the Puccini composition, "O mio babbino caro," from the opera "Gianni Schicchi," Petros told a touching story, in Latin, of a young girl begging her father to allow her to marry. Petros sang effortlessly and with meaning.

"Norina's Aria" from "Don Pasquale" by Donizetti is a story about a girl who is reading a book on how a lady should act with a man.

"Well the girl said 'I have no need for this book because I know how to wrap a man around my finger. I know when to cry and when to faint'," Petros explained.

The aria begins in a somber tone, as the girl is reading the book, then she laughs and the music rhythm bounces along as she sings in a flirtatious manner about her skill at manipulating men. Petros' portrayal was effective because of her rapport with the audience.

After intermission, Petros returned with a Ravel series of five Greek folk songs. The movements were short and entertaining.

The first movement was impatient sounding, as the singer prompted her love to hurry to their marriage. "Love, come let us marry, we are young and gay. Dearest, do not tarry, none will say us nay."

Petros' voice floated through the second movement, a peaceful song about a church. In contrast, the third movement was a strong heroic song. The fourth was a tender love song, and the final movement a happy song. Petros performed the final movement with a finesse that conjured up images of dancing and laughing people.

Though the entire performance was enjoyable, Petros seemed to lose contact with her audience in the singing of "Landscapes," by Alun Hoddinott. In contrast to the previous compositions, "Landscapes" was a modern piece, sung in English. The English language sounded clumsy and out of place in the disturbing series of songs about an island in Wales. Although the audience didn't seem quite as comfortable with the more modern music,

Senate confirms Adelman as nation's arms control director

WASHINGTON (AP) — Kenneth L. Adelman was confirmed, 57-42, as the nation's arms control director on Thursday after a long Senate fight over President Reagan's strategic policies as well as the young ambassador's competence and credibility.

Reagan pronounced himself "deeply gratified" and declared "It's my earnest hope that this positive step will mark the beginning of a new bipartisan consensus on the vital issue of nuclear arms reductions."

The president, at an informal news conference, said Adelman would head a "reinvigorated" Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. And "If we are met with reciprocal seriousness of purpose from the Soviet Union, 1983 can be a year of historic importance in securing a more solid and stable peace through arms reductions," Reagan said.

Only Sen. Bob Packwood, who was in his home state of Oregon attending a Republican conference, did not vote on the nomination. Forty-nine Republicans and 8 Democrats supported Adelman; 38 Democrats and 4 Republicans, Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland, Larry Pressler of South Dakota, Mark Andrews of North Dakota and Slade Gorton of Washington, voted against him.

Four Democratic senators with presidential ambitions spoke against Adelman in the closing hours of a three-day debate over the nomination that capped three months of deliberations in committee rooms and corridors.

SENATE DEMOCRATIC Whip Alan Cranston of California argued that Adelman's confirmation "would be a betrayal of the hopes of tens of millions of Americans for swift progress toward a mutual, balanced, verifiable end to the U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms race.'

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said, "We should be putting forward ... not someone who can just get by, but the very finest negotiating team we can possibly assemble. Unless we put forward our best effort, our best team, this may be our last hope for mankind."

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., said Adelman "appears to be more dedicated to an arms buildup than to reducing the hazards of unrestricted competition." His nomination by Reagan, said Hart, "signifies a serious lack of concern for the efficacy of arms control negotiation."

SEN. ERNEST F. HOLLINGS, D-S.C., did not take part in the floor debate but voted against the nomination.

Cranston and Hart are announced candidates for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination. Glenn and Hollings are expected to enter the race shortly.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee who led the fight for the nomination, saying Adelman's confirmation would "vigorously move the Reagan administration toward arms control agreements that can win the approval of the Senate."

Vice President George Bush, who as president of the Senate was empowered to cast a tiebreaking vote, presided over the climactic roll call but his vote was not needed to assure confirmation.

Assistant GOP Leader Ted Stevens of Alaska said he had asked Bush to be present "just in case."

ADELMAN, 36, DEPUTY U.S. ambassador to the United Nations since 1981, was nominated by Reagan on Jan. 12 to succeed the ousted Eugene V. Rostow as director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

At his first hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, on Jan. 27, Adelman testified that he did not know whether nuclear war could be limited, whether the Soviet Union was violating the unratified SALT II arms control treaty or what his response would be if the Soviets proposed eliminating all nuclear weapons.

Critics charged that the nominee, who was a political scientist with the Stanford Research Institute before joining the Reagan administration, would be the least qualified director in the 21-year history of the arms control agency.

At his second hearing, on Feb. 3, he gave more definitive answers, saying he had been "overly cautious" the first time around.

THE CRITICS WERE NOT mollified. On Feb. 24, after a third hearing in which Adelman denied any recollection of a newspaper interview quoting him as calling arms control talks a sham, the Republican-controlled committee refused on a 9-8 vote to endorse him.

To give the Senate a chance to vote, opponents and supporters of Adelman joined in a motion, approved 14-3, to send the nomination to the floor with a recommendation that it be rejected.

The controversy increased when it was disclosed that Edward Rowny, chief U.S. negotiator in strategic arms reduction talks, had given Adelman a memo on Thursday suggesting personnel changes in the agency.

Adelman said he took no action on the memo and Rowny said it was a staff-written paper that he did not agree with. Adelman, however, sent the memo to J. Robinson West, assistant secretary of the interior, with a note saying it represented Rowny's "real views."

Critics, mostly Democrats, charged that the admininistration lacks commitment to the cause of arms control. Adelman's supporters, mainly Republicans, said building up the nation's nuclear arsenal is necessary to give the Soviets a reason to negotiate.

Reagan denies illegal U.S. action to overthrow Nicaraguan regime

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Thursday the United States is not doing anything "to try to overthrow the Nicaraguan government," but is trying to block military supply lines to rebels in neighboring El Salvador.

Reagan declined to go into details of U.S. operations in Central America. But he said his administration is complying with a federal law that forbids U.S. action to overthrow the government of Nicaragua.

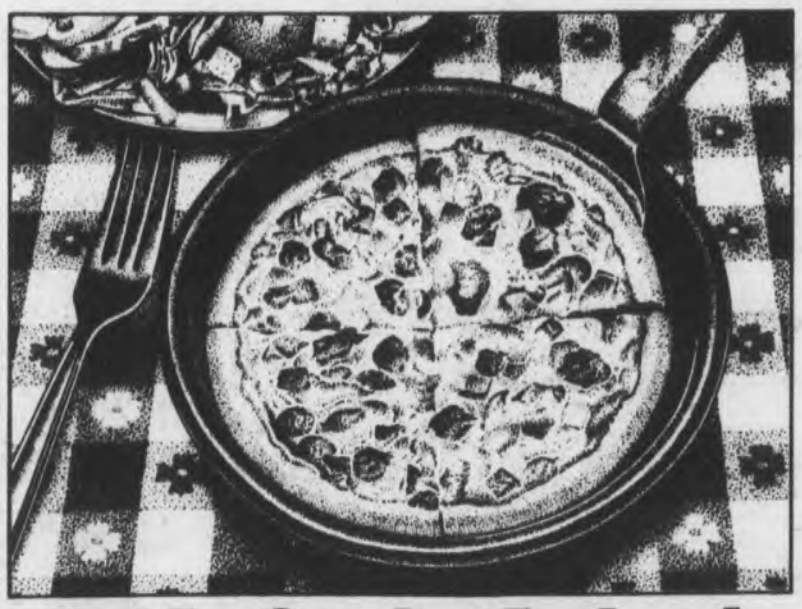
"We are complying with the law," Reagan told a news conference in the White House press room. "We are complying with that fully."

Rep. Edward P. Boland, D-Mass., has said the administration may be acting in violation of the congressional prohibition against any covert operation to overthow the Marxist regime in Nicaragua. Boland sponsored the law.

While Reagan said he is heeding the Boland amendment, he questioned the wisdom of the ban. He said any legislation restricting a president's power to deal with foreign nations impinges on the constitutional powers of his office.

The brief session with reporters was dominated by questions about Nicaragua. Boland has said his House intelligence committee will summon top administration officials to look into U.S. operations in Central America.

Reagan said the whole controversy overlooks realities about the situation there. He said the Nicaraguan regime took power by force, is clearly Marxist, and has reneged on promises that it would not try to overthrow neighboring governments.



"Whatever we are doing in that area is simply ... to interdict supply lines" to rebel forces in El Salvador, Reagan said, and not to bring down the Nicaraguan government.

Man charged with January murders of two Olathe sisters

OLATHE (AP) — An Olathe man was charged Thursday with first-degree murder, rape, aggravated battery, kidnapping and burglary following a 2½ month investigation into the beating deaths of two sisters.

The six felony counts were filed in Johnson County District Court against Michael James Cade, 21, who had been arrested Monday night for a purse-snatching incident at an Olathe restaurant.

The charges followed what police Capt. Jeffrey Herrman called a "major break" in the Jan. 28 slayings, which he described as an apparently random attack.

Cade is accused of breaking into the east Olathe duplex of John and Carole Duffield, slaying 12-year-old Janelle Duffield, beating her 15-year-old brother, Paul Duffield, then kidnapping, raping and slaying their sister, Kelly Duffield, 17.

All three youths are believed to have been beaten with a sledgehammer that was found in an overflow drain at Frisco Lake in Olathe with the body of Kelly Duffield 11 days after the slaying, police said.

Police Capt. Jeffrey Herrman, at a news conference Thursday, declined to disclose details of what led police to consider Cade a suspect in the Duffield slayings.

But, Herrman said, detectives investigating Cade's alleged involvement in the Monday night purse-snatching developed information indicating a possible link to the Duffield killings.

Cade was charged Tuesday with aggravated burglary and robbery in the purse-snatchng, and a purse believed to have taken in the incident was found in Frisco Lake, police said.

At the same time, said police Capt. Bob Patterson, sheriff's Detective Dwight Cobb noticed similarities between Cade's recent behavior and the Duffield slayings.

Cade was on probation for three residential burglaries in which telephone lines had been cut, Patterson said; in the Duffield case, phone lines had also been sliced.

In December, Cade was charged with burglary in connection with a theft from the Central Elementary School in Olathe, in which the school's pet rabbit's throat had been cut. Police found Cade inside the building stacking stereo equipment near a door.

Cade, who is unemployed, graduated from Edwardsville (Ill.) High School but has lived in Olathe for the past couple of years, police said.

The attack on the Duffield children occurred between 11 p.m. and 5 a.m. while their father, John Duffield, was sleeping in an upstairs bedroom, police said. His wife, Carole Duffield, a nurse, was working overnight at the Olathe Community Hospital.

Duffield said about 5 a.m. on Jan. 28 he heard his son gasping, "I can't breathe. I can't breathe." Duffield found Paul brutally beaten in the living room, where he often slept. He was released from a hospital in February.

Janelle's body was found in her bed in the basement, and Kelly was missing. Her frozen body was discovered Feb. 7 by children playing along a spillway.

Opera

Petros sang the song with ease and seemed to convey the message the composer was trying to get across.

The rest of the concert consisted of more entertaining material ranging from a song about a drunk to one about a girl everyone is in love with. In "The 'Tipsy' Song," a song about someone who has had too much to drink, Petros drew laughs from the crowd as she performed like a true lush, stumbling and staggering around the stage.

The audience called Petros back onto the stage for two encores. In her first encore, she performed the Rossini arias, "Una voce poco fa" from the opera "The Barber of Seville." This aria is famed for its demanding range and brilliant ornamentation. Petros stunned the audience with the ease of her performance in the high notes and trills.

Petros' near perfect performance, her entertaining selection of music and her communication with the audience made the evening enjoyable.

U.S. seeks to lessen anti-Americanism in Europe

LONDON (AP) — In Britain, a protester waves the banner "U.S. Death Merchants Go Home." In West Germany, American facilities are daubed with slogans and bombed. In Denmark, protests over El Salvador have cropped up in Fourth of July celebrations.

A resurgence of anti-Americanism in Europe, particularly among the young, has U.S. officials worried that the trans-Atlantic links forged by World War II may be breaking.

The Reagan administration is trying to recast those links — through a program of gentle political persuasion and increased cultural contacts designed to better Europe's understanding of America.

These links have been undermined, some critics say, by cutbacks in foreign language and foreign area studies on both sides of the Atlantic, a decline in standards for the U.S. diplomatic corps and the resulting inability to anticipate developments in foreign countries.

"The realization has dawned that a new generation of political leadership is emerging on both sides of the Atlantic that doesn't have the bonds that came out of a shared experience," said Christopher Snow, cultural affairs officer at the U.S. Embassy in London.

"Their parents were all united in the prosecution of the war effort, then the Marshall Plan and the reconstruction of Europe. But now, young people in Europe and the United States have different concerns."

Support for the United States, especially among young people, has declined in recent years, according to a recent Louis Harris survey done for the International Herald Tribune and the Atlantic Institute, a Paris-based research group.

Asked what was most responsible for current international tensions, 64 percent of West Germans aged 18 to 24 blamed the "U.S. military buildup." That compared to 41 percent among the middle-aged people questioned and 29 percent for those 65 or older.

In France, 25 percent of the youth blamed the "U.S. buildup" compared to 13 percent of those 35 to 49.

As U.S. ambassador to West Germany Arthur F. Burns put it in a Hamburg speech last month, "The tight net of shared values between our two peoples has been sagging, in part, because we are now less intimately involved with each other."

The focus of Burns' concern — and that of the administration he represents — is the anti-nuclear movement attracting demonstrators and opinion poll majorities against NATO's stationing of new U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe.

Of German pacifists, Burns said: "I am appalled by the ignorance that so many of them exhibit about the history even of their own country, to say nothing about their ignorance of the United States."

Ambassador to Ireland Peter Dailey expresses similar views. "I detect an undercurrent of distrust of U.S. policies among Europe's youth, and that really shocks me," he said in a recent interview.

Dailey, a former California public relations executive, was commissioned by President Reagan in January to draft a blueprint for selling the U.S. defense case in Europe.

But some observers have reservations about the Reagan plan.

Former U.S. ambassador to Italy, Richard M. Gardner, writing recently in The New York Times Magazine, fears the administration seeks "a quick advertising fix for a current foreign policy 'crisis' and (has) no comprehensive longterm vision of 'public diplomacy' as a vital element in American foreign policy."

Other American image-building centers on cultural contacts.

The administration recently launched an International Youth Exchange Initiative, headed by U.S. Information Agency chief Charles Z. Wick.

An outgrowth of last year's Versailles summit of the Big Seven industrialized countries, it aims to raise $10 million over three years to double the number of youngsters visiting and studying across the Atlantic.

Gardner says such visits can pay large dividends. Italian Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga and Socalist leader Lelio Lagorio, who backed NATO plans to deploy new U.S. missiles in Italy, had participated in exchange programs for young leaders. "Both told me their visits had been important in changing their hitherto skeptical attitudes toward our country," Gardner said.

In Italy, $400,000 in U.S. government money is being matched by donations from private industry to sponsor 98 Italians, aged 15 to 19, on visits to the United States this year. Ninety Americans in the same age bracket will visit Italy. Embassy officials say they expect a substantial budget increase for next year.

In Belgium, the U.S. Embassy hopes to arrange a swap of professors and students between the University of Pennsylvania and the University of Louvain.

Thirty-eight tours funded by the U.S. government have brought European legislators and journalists to NATO headquarters in Brussels for briefings on military strategy.

The Turkish government has recently joined in the Fulbright scholarship program for postgraduate study in the United States. U.S. officials also are helping develop American studies programs in Turkish schools.

In West Germany, America Haus facilities in Frankfurt and Munich lend American books, show U.S. movies and offer guest speakers.

Programs like the Fulbright, Marshall, Harkness and Kennedy scholarships bring some 4,000 to 5,000 Britons study in America each year, with 3,000 Americans attending British schools.

Denmark's Rebild Society, founded by emigrants to the United States, holds one of Europe's largest celebrations of U.S. Independence Day. In past years, it has attracted 50,000 people. Last year, 5,000 came, and there were protests over U.S. policies in Central America.

Floods demonstrate vulnerability of centralized telephone system

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A flooded basement and the failure of a $2 fuse crippled the long distance telecommunications system of this city for 10 hours last week and severed its link with a nuclear attack warning system.

The breakdown demonstrated the vulnerability of centralized telephone systems in 90 U.S. cities where similar computer switching machines sit in guarded, windowless buildings, according to AT&T officials.

The core of the long-distance telephone system — a computer carrying thousands of circuits, including priority government lines — has survived floods, hurricanes, tornados and blackouts across the country.

But when 11 inches of rain brought widespread flooding to Louisiana, the system failed.

"I've never been through a set of circumstances like that and I thought I'd seen everything," said Art Ammon, manager of the Network Operations Center at AT&T headquarters in Bedminster, N.J. "We've never had anything quite this devastating."

Technology and centralization have made telephone systems more efficient but also more vulnerable to floods, $2 fuses — and terrorism or nuclear attack, according to Ammon.

"There is concern on the part of government — and it's probably a legitimate one — about the reliability of the communications switch network," Ammon said.

"It's a fact that if you lose one of those control units, as we did last week, that some critical lines are going to be lost."

AT&T and the government are studying ways to switch long distance calls through smaller phone offices in cases of emergency, which is not now possible, Ammon said.

On Thursday, April 7, an intricate system of backups failed. The worst-case scenario unfolded.

South Central Bell Telephone's $12 million long-distance switching computer, called a 4ESS, had to be shut down, knocking out 30,000 telephone circuits into and out of southeastern Louisiana. Some of the circuits carried high-level government traffic, Ammon said.

The FAA airport control tower lost its computer link to Houston and outlying towers. Shipping operations were paralyzed. The mayor couldn't telephone the governor.

And for 3 hours and 56 minutes, southeast Louisiana was cut off from the National Warning System which alerts the public to nuclear attack or accidental missile launch. The Federal Emergency Management Agency office in Baton Rouge, La., used single-band radio backup to keep in touch with New Orleans.

ARCOSANTI WORKSHOP PROGRAMS 83

Arcosanti is a unique environment designed by Paolo Soleri intergrating living, learning and doing in the urban laboratory that is being constructed with the aid of volunteer labor in Arizona. The following five week workshops are offered for 1983.

CONSTRUCTION: Focus is on skills development from plan reading to finish work. Staff architects and skilled craftspeople guide participants in building.

AGRICULTURE: Arid lands agriculture using organic techniques: Greenhouse, field preparation, irrigation, biological pest control, harvest and solar dry herbs and vegetables from 10 acres of field crops, orchards and vines.

DATES: Construction/Agriculture run concurrently: June 6, July 11, August 15, September 12, October 10 and November 7.

The workshops are designed around a core curriculum explaining Soleri's concepts and the purpose for building Arcosanti.

Commission

at the request of the commission, was approved by commissioners in early March but not signed or published in order to give opposition a chance to respond, Morse said.

Notification of a previous hearing was published and was attended by those in favor of the resolution, she said.

Commissioners have been receiving complaints about the misuse of firearms "for several years" and recently received a petition from residents in the University Park subdivision part of the county, Morse said. The subdivision is located north of Manhattan.

County Commissioner Darrell Westervelt said the commission "acted hastily in adopting this resolution but we didn't do so intentionally. I perceive there is not much support for this resolution or any similar one."

He said if a resolution was adopted he would hope it would be in a "much-modified form" with a more specific definition of firearms and a better explanation of the designated areas which would be affected.

Robert Robel, professor of biology, summed up several of the issues opposed during the meeting and made several recommendations to the commission.

Legal avenues are already available to concerned people because a public nuisance complaint could be filed, he said.

The University Park area could also adopt laws pertaining only to that area and not to all of Riley County if the majority of people in that area wish to do so.

The subdivision already has covenants prohibiting use of firearms in the area.

He suggested the commission, if it was "compelled to adopt some form of resolution," adopt one that more adequately addressed the problem of misuse of firearms in residentially developed platted areas.

Before people could get any action taken against someone they believed was a public nuisance, the offense would probably have to have been repeated several times, Myers said. It is also at the discretion of the county attorney whether a person is violating the public nuisance law, he added.

Morse said if the commission decided "to go ahead and adopt another resolution, we could change descriptions and not include platted agricultural areas."

Residential, industrial and commercial platted areas would be included, she said.

Robel said the definition of firearm should be restricted to "an instrument used in propulsion of shot or bullets by the acton of gunpowder exploded within it."

As the resolution currently reads, firearm means an "instrument used in the propulsion of shot, shell, or bullets by the action of gunpowder exploded within it."

The meaning also includes BB or pellet guns, whether in pistol or rifle form, bows and any steel-tipped arrows, spring guns, slingshots, blowpipes or similar device or instrument used for the projection of stones, pebbles, shot, peas, beans or other hard objects.

Citizens at the meeting said this definition could also include baseballs and golf clubs.

Others at the meeting said the resolution — by stating the "specific intent to discharge or fire a firearm need not be proven to find a person guilty" — is proving a person guilty before trial.

"Basically you're saying just because I have a gun, I'm guilty. That's bordering on insanity," Jim Spillman, Riley, said. "That means you might as well plead guilty to rape while you're at it because you got the equipment."

Robert Larsen, vice president of Riley County Fish and Game Association, read the opinion of his group to commissioners.

The resolution contains ambiguous words and there are laws already dealing with this issue that provide adequate protection, he said.

Larsen also stressed the issue seems to be something neighbors could work out for themselves.

Morse said she and the other commissioners would confer with Myers to see if there are other laws already pertaining to this matter.

"I think the other laws pertain more to destruction. There is not a law that addresses the concern of fear of having guns fired. This is our understanding and we will certainly research it further," she said.

"All we're trying to do is to protect the people who are scared to let their children play in the yard and yet we want to protect the rights of those who do want to shoot a gun," Morse added.

Mike Daumen, who lives in University Park and signed the petition asking for commissioners to act on the issue, said he is still in favor of the objectives of the petition but the resolution drafted is not worded properly.

His wife, Linda Daumen, said she also signed the petition but because of the way the resolution is worded, her son could not even go out into their backyard and practice with his BB gun even with the proper backstop and supervision.

The petition was mainly organized, she said, because people who were not University Park residents were shooting their guns in the area, she explained.

Myers pointed out there are similar laws governing the use of firearms in cities.

"The purpose of the resolution as I drafted it was to give the county commissioners something to work on," he said.

And Rosalys Rieger, county commissioner, said, "It is a starting point."

Gridders to play in intrasquad scrimmage Saturday

Like all other varsity sports at K-State, the football squad has been hampered by Mother Nature this spring.

Despite the mild confusion the weather has caused, the Wildcats' annual spring intrasquad scrimmage is still set for 1:30 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

To date, the Wildcats have practiced eight times, twice indoors, and have had two sessions canceled because of inclement weather.

However, thanks to the Brandeberry Indoor Workout facility and Monday practice sessions, the 'Cats are somewhat on schedule as far as practices go. What they are behind in, said head coach Jim Dickey, is quality practice time.

"The weather has been a handicap in both getting practices in and the type of work we do in the practices," Dickey said. "But there has been great spirit and enthusiasm. There is no doubt in my mind that the players' attitude right now is at an all-time high. They had a taste of success last season and they want to continue it again this year.

"I'm satisfied with the limited amount of progress we've made this spring," Dickey added. "We haven't had a lot of contact or scrimmaging yet but that will change tomorrow. We haven't had to spend too much time conditioning, either, because all of the kids are in such great shape thanks to their strong off-season conditioning program. We are stronger and faster as a squad than we've ever been before."

Although it's early, several players have caught Dickey's eye as he evaluates his talent for the 1983 season.

On offense, center Jim Northcutt, flanker Eric Mack, tailback Greg Dageforde and quarterbacks Doug Bogue and Donnie Campbell have had a good spring.

Defensively, end L.E. Madison, free safety Barton Hundley and linebacker Stu Peters have stood out in the early going.

Despite good performance by several players, K-State has been hit by the injury bug.

Defensive tackle George Fowler suffered a torn ligament in his left knee last week in practice and will be out of action this spring and next fall.

Another defensive tackle, Rob Kauffelt, is also out for the rest of the spring with his dislocated right shoulder. Also not participating this spring because of injuries last fall is starting tailback Iosefatu Faraimo.

On the positive side, quarterback Stan Weber is back out on the practice field after a year's absence. Like Fowler, Weber has been out with a knee injury. But Weber is back practicing in a limited capacity and should be at full strength next fall, Dickey said.

Track squads to compete in OU meet

Dismal weather has hampered K-State's track teams in all but one meet this outdoor season and with the conference championship less than a month away, the weather has become a critical issue.

Saturday, both the men's and women's squads will compete in the John Jacobs Invitational at the University of Oklahoma, Norman.

The meet will be open to both high school and college participants. Competing in the college events will be host Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Kansas, Arkansas, several Oklahoma colleges, Nebraska and K-State.

At the KSU Invitational a week ago, both 'Cat teams turned in fine performances. Bright spots in the abbreviated meet came in the form of Greg Bartlett's school-record heave of 63-2¾ in the shot put, Julius Mercer's 13.8 clocking in the 110-meter high hurdles and Deb Pihl's 3,000-meter time of 9:36.8.

Head coach Steve Miller said he expects the meet to be an important step for his teams.

"This is probably the pivotal meet of the year," Miller said. "It is critical that we get some national qualifiers this weekend. It's also a good meet from the angle of competing against other Big Eight teams."

Miller also expects the meet to be important in regard to the national meet.

"We've just got to get some people qualified in this meet. Both of our teams can score at nationals, but we might not be there unless we can get a good meet in," Miller said.

Coloradoans to entertain 'Cat netters

Men's and women's tennis squads look forward to more positive results in duals this weekend after getting two of their most dreaded opponents out of the way last weekend.

The women will host a dual against Cloud County Community College at 2 p.m. today at the Washburn Recreation courts. Women's coach Steve Webb said the competition will provide the 'Cats with an opportunity to even their 6-7 season mark.

Also on the agenda for the women will be Colorado. The 'Cats will meet the Buffaloes at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Coach Steve Snodgrass' men netters will also court some Colorado teams

(See TENNIS, p. 17)

Baseball team to play conference-leading Sooners

K-State's baseball team takes to the road for the first time in the Big Eight, playing the conference-leading Oklahoma Sooners in two double-headers Saturday and Sunday at L. Dale Mitchell Park.

Oklahoma paces the conference at 6-2 and stands at 22-12. Third baseman Jay Searcy, outfielder Ron Leon, pitcher-first baseman Ray Hayward and outfielder Paul Williams headline a team hitting attack of .311. The Sooners have won their last three out of four games.

The 'Cats stand at 16-9 overall and 0-4 in the Big Eight. K-State has dropped a pair of games to Nebraska and Oklahoma State at home in the conference.

"We haven't played as well as we can in our last two Big Eight series," Wildcat coach Dave Baker said. "We need to get better hitting and pitching. We need to play better baseball."

this weekend. Air Force Academy will be host to the 'Cats, 5-9, in a dual today before Colorado hosts the Wildcats in a dual on Saturday.

"We're going out to Colorado thinking we can win both of those matches," Snodgrass said. "Air Force is always fair competition. And Colorado has a lot of new players this year, as well as a new coach."

Snodgrass said his squad is excited about the weekend competition. "We really want to win all of these this week. It will help us toward our goal to be around the .500 mark," he said.

THERE'S THREE Sigma Chis above the rest, in the G-Phi's book, they're the best. J.W., Bruce and Brian, you're the men, with you behind us, we'll surely win! Thanks for all the things you've done, with us you three are number one! Love your Psyched Gamma Phis. (138)

KEECH—SUNDAY nite you'll start to fight. I have confidence you'll do alright. When it's all through just remember there will still be no beer for you. Good luck! Apooh. (138)

PUIFA 100%, 21 = Happy Birthday Tony! From your TTH Buddies. (138)

R.P. HAPPY 21st. Sorry you had such a bad week. Tomorrow will be better. ILYL. (138)

GREG SCHMIDT, Good luck on fight night. This will surely be a warning for Sugar Ray to stay in retirement, Stallone to find a new career and for you to go straight to Hollywood for "Rocky 4" or to Madison Square Garden for the extra heavyweight championship fight against Larry Hinkel. Good luck. The Smith House. (138)

MARK LONG—Happy 23! Hope your birthday is a special one. (138)

ROBERT G.—Good luck on the EIT. Survive and we'll celebrate. Thinking of you constantly. ILY, Peg. (138)

DIANNE—HAPPY 22nd birthday to my little CDR who is a very special person who has made my life more enjoyable than I could have possibly imagined. I love and care for you very, very much. Love, Dan. (138)

TO THE G-Phis and our coaches. Derby Days is well under way—and once again, we've been awesome! Tuttle Puddle is the place today, then Saturday—rise and shine for the beer breakfast. Keep those smiling faces on and we're sure to take 1st. (138)

PARTY: IF you lived on Moore Four in 79-80 and 80-81 come to the 4th Annual (and last?) Moore Four Depression party, Saturday, April 23, 1983. Contact Mike S., Jerry M., or Ron W. for more information. (138)

RICK—HERE'S to a good time in Lincoln—no matter what time we leave. And the best of luck with your test on Saturday. T.D. P.S. Now—what about the pizza? (138)

DEBORAH JEAN—Happy 19. Here's to Eureka (I have found it) and all the fun to come—AAE. (138)

LITTLE SISTERS of Minerva: No meeting Sunday, but get excited for the Pre-Paddy Murphy Party Thursday the 21st at 8:00. (138)

KAPPA SIG Boxers: Good luck in your divisions. Remember, "Eye of the Tiger." Win or lose we're damn proud! Starduster love, Kimi. (138)

14-day West Bank epidemic remains mystery; Israelis strongly deny poisoning accusations

ARRABA, Occupied West Bank (AP) — The mysterious epidemic struck this remote West Bank village at 8:05 a.m. on March 21. Before it ended two weeks later, more than 800 Palestinian schoolgirls had been hospitalized.

They were the victims, say Israeli health authorities, of hysteria and "provocateurs," charges Palestinians strongly deny. They say the Israelis were somehow poisoning their children.

Investigators from the International Committee of the Red Cross, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and the World Health Organization examined the victims, but so far have issued no reports on the puzzling events that started in Arraba, a village of 7,000 Palestinians 45 miles north of Jerusalem.

It began at a girls' high school when several teen-age girls were sickened by the odor of rotten eggs. Dr. Baruch Modan, an epidemiologist and director-general of Israel's Health Ministry, believes the cause was hydrogen sulfide gas from a pit latrine at the school.

Two hours later, dozens of other girls, complaining of dizziness, nausea and blurred vision, became ill at the midmorning recess. It was the start of mass hysteria, Modan said. Arraba's mayor Mahmoud al-Fatah al-Arda said 69 girls were sent to hospitals.

ON MARCH 26, A SECOND OUTBREAK hit six girls' schools in and around Jenin, six miles northeast of Arraba. Almost 250 students were sent to the hospital. Modan believes the outbreak was caused by the rumors of poison gas.

On March 27, Palestinians stoned Israeli cars in Jenin, and sections of the town were placed under curfew. Israeli military sources, paradoxically, contributed to the poisoning rumor by saying that Palestinian militants might be spreading poisons to place Israel in a bad light.

The next evening, a car or van, spewing smoke from its exhaust, drove through a residential neighborhood in Jenin. Almost 80 people were rushed to hospitals. Modan called it wave three in the epidemic. The victims still were genuinely ill, he said, but no physical cause could be found.

On March 29 Jenin was sealed off by Israeli troops and placed under a curfew. Reporters were not permitted to enter. In Arraba, al-Arda and other West Bank leaders demanded an investigation to determine "what the poison is and the people responsible for doing it."

PALESTINIAN DOCTORS REPEATEDLY attributed the illness to "poison gas" though they acknowledge they have no idea what the gas is.

One doctor who said he believes a poison was at work said he also agrees that psychological factors contribute to the symptoms. "But underground there is a triggering factor, and that's what we are searching for," he said.

None of the Palestinian doctors would permit use of their names, saying they feared they would be fired from government-supported hospitals if they dispute the Israeli position.

Moden held a news conference April 1 with the head of the Israeli medical corps to repeat that there was no evidence of poison.

Brig. Gen. Shlomo Ilya, the head of the Israeli West Bank administration, charged that Palestinian extremists were trying to stir up a frenzy against Israel.

On April 3, a fourth wave of the epidemic hit, striking a village near Nablus and in Hebron, in the southern part of the West Bank. About 400 schoolgirls went to hospitals, bringing the total number of girls affected to over 800.

Modan believes some of the latest victims were affected by rumors of poisoning. He called it "paramedical, extra-medical, you can call it political."

Modan says a Red Cross investigator agreed with his conclusion that a "mass phenomenon" was at the root of the epidemic rather than a poison, but the Red Cross has declined comment.

A SPOKESMAN FOR ISRAELI'S West Bank administration claim the CDC doctors privately agreed with Israeli findings that there was no poison but would not say so in public "for fear their opinion would be regarded as too pro-Israeli."

The American doctors, preferring to keep a low profile in their scientific investigaton, have refused to meet with reporters. They will be returning to the United States sometime this week, said Donald Barreth, a CDC spokesman in Atlanta, and their report issued later.

On April 4 Israelis authorities arrested two carloads of Palestinians for driving around the West Bank town of Nablus and broadcasting through megaphones that the water was poisoned there.

Israeli police said on April 6 they arrested 50 Palestinians on suspicion of inciting or spreading poisoning rumors. But by April 9, Modan said, only a few girls remained in hospitals, and the epidemic seemed to be over.

Modan said he believes the West Bank experienced was a "mass phenomenon, otherwise called mass hysteria or epidemic hysteria."

But he prefers not to use the term hysteria because it creates "negative feeling among the public."

Rekers

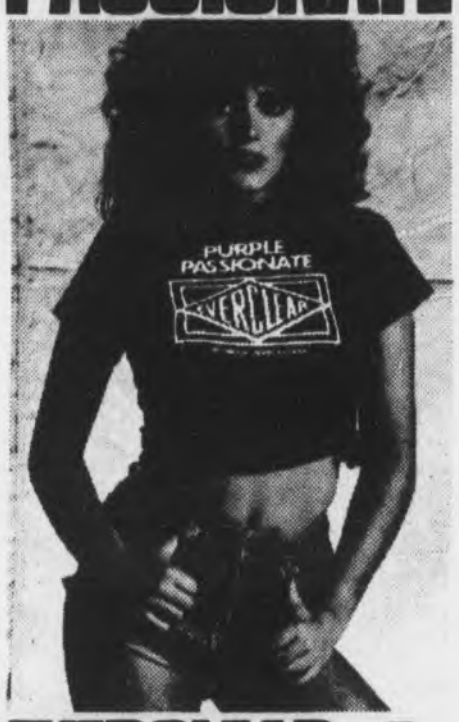
According to Rollins, Rekers was first hired as a department head in the fall of 1980 and served in that capacity for one year until she replaced him.

"We've switched him around some. He's not a teacher, but a researcher and a very good one. We've tried to find his best fit.

"THERE ARE MANY very overt Christians who teach from the empirical data based solely on experiment and observation we have available.

"He (Rekers) has certainly received the most complaints, generally from students who are juniors or seniors or older returning students who have more information to base complaints from life experiences," Rollins said.



Rekers has had 50 articles published in academic journals and textbook chapters and has received more than $500,000 in research grants from the National Institute of Mental Health on preventing homosexuality.

"I've testified in (Washington) D.C. twice. I testified at the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Family and Human Services. I presented the research I've done on the grants, the effect of the father's absence on the development of children.

"My research has gained so much prominence that I'm allowed to go to the Senate," Rekers said. "If I'm allowed to take a stand before the Senate, why am I not allowed to take a stand and tell my students?"

Regent committee OKs tuition hike

From staff and wire reports

LAWRENCE — The Kansas Board of Regents Fiscal Affairs Committee on Friday approved a 9.8 percent increase in state university tuition fees for the fall of 1984.

President Duane Acker also presented a request to the committee for authorization to implement an academic services fee which could range from $5 to $15 in addition to a $3 student services support fee for renovation of Holton Hall.

The committee sent the proposals to the full board, which will consider them at its May 20 meeting.

The tuition proposal would mean a $40 increase per semester for resident undergraduate students at K-State, the University of Kansas, and Wichita State University.

Undergraduates at Emporia State University, Pittsburg State University and Fort Hays State University would face a $33 hike.

In addition, resident graduate students would pay a $40 differential each semester to cover the cost of more expensive graduate education.

But the committee did away with a proposal to divert $15 of each student's tuition increase for campus, library and academic computer resources.

Most students in the regents system are already facing a 20 percent tuition hike for next fall, which will boost their share of financing state education costs to 24.5 percent. The regents and the Kansas Legislature have agreed that student tuition should generally pay about 25 percent of state education costs.

REGENT WENDELL LADY said that the regents had not kept their end of the agreement from the Legislature's perspective by allowing students to pay less than that amount. But Lady said he would go on record as being opposed to requiring students to pay more than 25 percent of the educational costs.

However, Regent Jordan Haines indicated that there was no mechanism which would prohibit student costs from exceeding the 25 percent mark. "It is completely conceivable that students will have to pay 30 percent or more of state educational costs in the future," Haines said.

Haines said the most likely way students would be put in this situation would be if the Legislature takes money away from education again like they did last year. Haines also said he hopes students never feel the increase in tuition costs is for anything but keeping quality in the educational system.

JAMES APPLEBERRY, president of Pittsburg State University, pointed out that the Legislature often does not consider special academic support fees and incidental costs students are required to pay when they figure the 25 percent fee-cost ratio of educational expenses.

Appleberry then suggested that the Fiscal Affairs Committee raise the student fee-cost ratio by 10 percent minus the latest $15 academic support fee requested by most of the regent institutions.

However, Appleberry's suggestion received almost no comment from the committee as Regent James Pickert quickly moved to raise tuition the full 9.8 percent originally discussed. Appleberry said he hoped the regents would consider his proposal within the next month before they gave the recommendation final approval.

HAINES SAID later that the board would consider Appleberry's suggestion, but that it was difficult to predict what economic conditions would be like in the fall of 1984. "We don't want to lock ourselves into a lesser amount of revenue than we may need at this time," Haines said.

The proposed 9.8 percent increase in fall 1984 would add about $5.5 million to expected tuition collections for a total of $61.5 million.

The recommendation for a student services support fee would mean students enrolled in seven or more credit hours would be charged $3 and those enrolled in less than seven hours would be charged 20 cents per credit hour.

The fee would generate approximately $95,000 per year based on fall 1982 enrollment and would be used for renovation of Holton Hall.

The academic services fee would provide an additional amount ranging from $161,000 to $485,000 and would be used for financing library acquisitions, computer and other equipment needs.

Reagan proposes to cut student aid

By SHARI SAIA
Staff Writer

Students will once again feel the economic crunch if President Reagan's proposals to reorganize financial aid programs are passed.

The major changes include reorganizing the Pell Grant Program, eliminating the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant (SEOG), and the State Student Incentive Grant (SSIG) programs, reducing the National Direct Student Loan (NDSL) Program and increasing the funds for College Work-Study programs, according to Bob Evans, director of student financial assistance.

"At the same time, the President's budget assumes major savings under the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program in fiscal years 1983 and 1984, largely because falling market interest rates are reducing the amount of interest subsidies required from the government," according to information from the College Board in Washington, D.C.

REAGAN'S FINANCIAL AID budget also calls for a reduction in funds for Special Programs for the Disadvantaged, known as the TRIO programs, and for an Education Savings Account for low- and middle-income families.

The changes are proposed for fiscal year 1984, and would take effect in the 1984-85 academic year.

"In essence, Reagan wants to redistribute how we operate (financiai aid) programs," Evans said. "In the past, it's been cut, cut, cut. Now, they (Congress) are saying, 'Let's seriously restructure the program'," he said.

Evans said he doesn't believe Reagan will get all he's asking for.

The administration's intent in retructuring student aid programs is to "consolidate them into single grant, single loan, and single work programs," according to College Board information.

The proposed budget would not change eligibility requirements or the process of giving financial aid, Evans said. However, the Department of Education estimates that approximately 400,000 fewer students will receive financial aid in fiscal year 1984 than in fiscal year 1983.

Evans said the "biggest problem comes with the PELL Grant Program."

THE ADMINISTRATION IS proposing to replace Pell Grants with a new "Self-Help Grant" program. Appropriations of $2.71 billion are proposed for Self-Help Grants in fiscal year 1984, up from $2.42 billion for Pell Grants in fiscal year 1983.

The maximum amount a student would receive for a Self-Help Grant would be increased from $1,800 to $3,000; however, students would be required to contribute at least 40 percent of their educational expenses, or a minimum of $800, through work or loans, in addition to family contributions.

Four students suffer injuries in Sunday accident

Four K-State students were hospitalized at St. Mary Hospital Sunday afternoon after the motorcycles they were driving and a car collided on Juliette Avenue, north of Ratone Street.

According to Sgt. Vernon L. Brown of the Riley County Police Department, the two motorcycles were heading north on Juliette when they collided with a south-bound car driven by James Jenzen, 23, of Burrton.

"The car (driver) saw them coming and stopped. One motorcycle went around him on the passenger side and the other went under the car," Brown said.

The drivers of the motorcycles were identified as Kevin Hewitt, senior in agricultural education, and Eddie Dewey, freshman in agricultural education. They were listed Sunday night in stable condition.

The two passengers on the motorcycles, Cheryl Neises, senior in home economics education, and Nancy Manley, freshman in computer science, were also listed in stable condition.

A hospital spokesman would not elaborate on the types of injuries sustained. However, Brown described the injuries of Neises and Manley as incapacitating, meaning they could not leave the accident scene unaided. Brown said Dewey's injuries were non-incapacitating. No report was available concerning Hewitt's condition at the scene of the accident.

Jenzen and two other passengers in the car were not hospitalized.

Accident comfort... A friend comforts an accident victim Sunday afternoon on Juliette Avenue north of Ratone Street. The victim was a passenger on a northbound motorcycle which collided with a southbound car before skidding to a halt. A second motorcycle wrecked on a nearby embankment. The two drivers and both passengers of the motorcycles were hospitalized and listed in stable condition.

Student Senate votes on allocations

Student Senate considered and voted on tentative allocations of four organizations Thursday. Sports Club Council and Women's Resource Center are scheduled to be considered Tuesday night.

Finance Committee's recommendation of $16,880 for Legal Services was amended to $18,880 to provide a maximum salary of $18,000 for the attorney-at-law. Kathy Lungren, student attorney, has resigned and the Personnel Selections Committee is in the process of interviewing and hiring a new attorney.

Diane Murphy, chairwoman of the committee, said the higher salary would help to attract more qualified applicants.

"It's important to have a higher range that we can work with for flexibility," Murphy said.

Senate next considered University Student Resource Center, which is to replace University Learning Network and Sexuality Education Counseling Services. Senate approved Finance Committee's recommendation of $9,859.88, including $9,054.08 for salaries. The allocation included money for postage, advertising, printing, dues, memberships and subscriptions, professional and scientific equipment and supplies, and office supplies.

The allocation of $571 recommended for Off-Campus Student Association was also approved by senate. This allocation includes allowances of $261 for advertising allowance and $250 for printing.

Senate's final consideration Thursday was of funding for the Consumer Relations Board, which received $3,641.92 in tentative allocations. The allocations include a director's salary of $3,000.

Senate's decisions on tentative allocations are subject to final approval in the fall during final allocations.

Wife charged in death of ex-rock musician

NEW YORK — Felix Pappalardi, a record producer and former bass guitar player for the rock group Mountain, was shot dead Sunday, and his wife was charged with his slaying, police said.

Pappalardi, 41, had been shot once in the neck and was pronounced dead when police arrived at the apartment, authorities said.

His wife, Gail, 43, had called police at 5 a.m. and allowed officers into the couple's fifth-floor apartment, police said. She was charged with second-degree murder and criminal possession of a weapon, Officer Fred Elwick said.

Pappalardi, born in the Bronx, began his career as a folk artist in Greenwich Village in the 1960s and worked with such artists as Joan Baez, the Lovin' Spoonful and the Youngbloods. He made his name as producer for the rock band Cream.

In 1969, Atlantic Records asked him to work with the Vagrants, a band that became Mountain. Pappalardi played bass and keyboard, sang backup vocals and acted as producer.

The hard-rock band played briefly as Mountain, recording "Mississippi Queen" and other songs.

Rumor of royal pregnancy called 'rubbish'

LONDON — British journalists say Princess Diana has put on a few pounds during her month's tour of Australia, but Buckingham Palace on Sunday denied rumors that she is pregnant.

The denial was issued first in Auckland, New Zealand, where Diana arrived over the weekend with her husband, Prince Charles, and 10-month-old Prince William.

"The Princess of Wales is not pregnant," said Buckingham Palace, confirming the Australian statement.

Nigel Dempster, gossip columnist for London's Daily Mail, said in an interview Friday with Australian television, "I believe there could be another royal birth in November."

Dempster based his prediction on 21-year-old Diana's apparent weight gain in Australia and the lack of any official engagements published for November.

A palace spokesman said later that the list of November engagements is never drawn up before July.

Press Association, the British domestic news agency, quoted royal aides as calling the speculation about a royal pregnancy "total rubbish."

Boy Scouts' fire sears 30-acre park area

SEARCY, Ark. — A fire set by Boy Scouts trying to clear a spot in a park got out of control and flashed through 30 acres, destroying a van and a truck and sending tents and sleeping bags up in smoke.

"It just got away from them," said Dennis Cox, the resident caretaker of Riverside Park, north of Searcy.

Forest ranger Johnny Quattlebum said some of the 100 scouts from 11 troops "weren't supposed to have started the fire" because the air was dry Saturday. Quattlebum and another forestry employee extinguished the blaze with help from volunteers. No one was hurt.

"We had two minutes to do what we could do to get out (and) just did make it," said Charles Holden, an assistant scout master from Newport.

Court frees boy who failed to say 'Yes, sir'

HOUSTON — A teen-ager jailed for failing to say "Yes, sir" to a judge was released Sunday, three days after a state appeals court ordered him freed.

Michael Anthony Washington, 19, was ordered released Thursday by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin on a $100 personal recognizance bond. But officials at the Harris County Jail refused to release Washington until they received written notice from the court in Austin.

Sheriff Jack Heard said the notice arrived Sunday afternoon.

State District Judge ordered Washington to serve 30 days in jail March 30 after the defendant, who pleaded guilty to burglary, answered "Yeah" instead of "Yes, sir," to the judge's questions.

Thatcher vetoes plan for X-rated TV channel

LONDON — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has vetoed a plan to launch an "adult" cable television channel in Britain to show sex and horror movies, newspapers reported Sunday.

The Mail on Sunday said Mrs. Thatcher "believes that parents cannot be trusted to stop children" from watching the proposed channel.

The proposal was made last year by a government commission on launching multi-channel cable television in Britain. It said TV sets should be fitted with switches activated by electronic codes that would allow families to "lock out" the X-rated channel so children could not tune into it.

The commission chairman, former Cabinet Secretary Lord Hunt, argued that this system would allow authorities to lift restrictions on showing adult movies on cable even though the two main networks already are permitted to screen movies with sex scenes late at night.

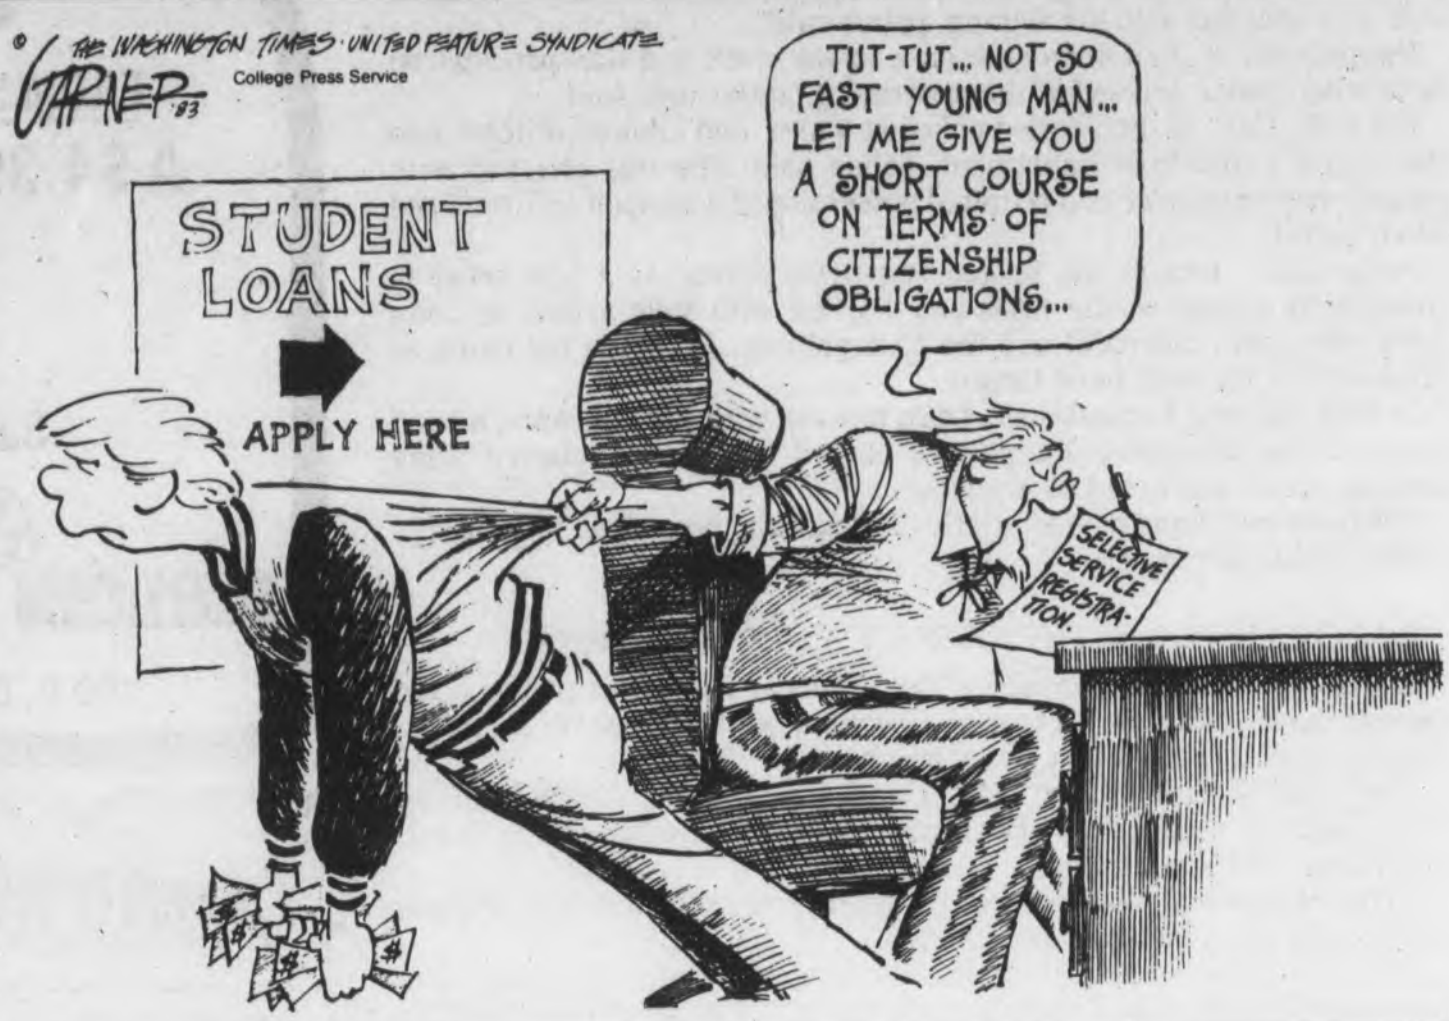
Controversial bill should be vetoed

Thursday's Student Senate vote in favor of the Solomon Amendment, which would require students receiving federal financial aid to have signed with the Selective Service, shows not only a lack of insight into the feelings of the student body, but also takes an affirmative stand on an issue which administrators in universities across the nation have opposed.

After a Minnesota court injunction, the U.S. Department of Education backed off on full enforcement of the Solomon Amendment until 1985. The injunction included a ruling that the law may violate students' protections against self-incrimination. Final decision on the measure is not due until July.



Although the federal government is not sure whether the measure is even constitutional, K-State's Student Senate, in a 29-28 vote, has said it supports the measure. Moreover, the resolution was passed on to the Associated Students of Kansas lobbying organization as the view of the entire student body.

From input received at the Collegian in the form of letters, phone calls and personal visits, it would appear that students who support the Solomon amendment are in the minority.

Senate's vote, with one abstention, points to a slim majority in favor of the Selective Service-financial aid link. This margin is hardly enough to be representative of the entire student body on either side of the issue.

Student Body President Jerry Katlin should exercise his right to veto the measure. Senate's passage of the bill was not in the best interest of the student body and the only appropriate action now would be annulment of the resolution.

Health fair a success

Editor,

Our second annual K-State Health Fair was once again a tremendous success. I want to sincerely thank everyone whose efforts and spport made this year's event the success it was. If we achieved any success with our efforts to promote self-responsibility among the people of Manhattan and Kansas for their personal health, I believe this success stems directly from the fine support we have enjoyed from community leaders.

I hope that Health Fair '83 has made an even greater number of people become aware of their personal health responsibilities. Thanks to all.

Making the Grade

Rays from the noon-day sun were threatening to fry me as I sat on a rock eating a sandwich and looking over into Mexico. Below me, the Rio Grande River was hidden by a thicket of willows and cottonwoods. At that point in Big Bend National Park, it was only about half as wide as the Big Blue River near Manhattan.

School was the last thing on my mind that day, but things kept happening to remind me of the importance of learning. As I was eating, a couple and their three curly headed children drove up and emerged from a recreational vehicle. I looked at the writing on the children's T-shirts and decided it must be French. That was a contrast to this part of the United States where many of the mountains and towns have Spanish names. Only about an hour before, I had returned from catching a rowboat across the Rio Grande and walking over to a Mexican village.

THE COUPLE AND their children conversed among themselves in French, and then the man stepped inside the RV for a moment.

I searched my mind for a few phrases of French and came up with: "Parlez-vous Anglais?" (Do you speak English?)

The woman looked at me with surprise and replied that she did not speak English. With some more courage mustered, I asked where the family was from and learned that Houston was their home. The woman told me they were going to Carlsbad Caverns after leaving Big Bend.

I asked if they were planning to go over into Mexico, and she said no. Then I tried to explain that a river crossing was only a few hundred yards away.

"There are men who row a boat across the river for $1 per person," I tried to say in French. But the French word for "row" had never been filed in my mind, and I ended up pantomiming.

I GUESS SHE UNDERSTOOD what I was trying to say. When the husband returned, they began talking, pointing first at me, then down at the river. Soon they smiled, waved goodbye and climbed back into the RV. I don't know if they decided to go over into Mexico. But what I do know is that I suddenly found some value in the agonizing hours of French I had taken to fulfill requirements for a bachelor of arts degree.

Too often I've been guilty of staring glaze-eyed at a professor, wondering how I could possibly apply that subject. In such classes, clock-watching becomes a major pastime. But many of these classes have turned out to be valuable in surprising ways. Often this shows up while I'm traveling.

In my introductory biology class, one of my projects was learning about the campus greenhouse and its various types of plants. Yet, I've forgotten everything I learned. Sometimes my houseplants need a faith healer.

But in Big Bend, I was forced to learn about plants if I wanted to appreciate the desert. I learned about the giant dagger yucca, a plant with a stump-like base that can sometimes grow to be 15 feet tall. The ocotillo, which resembles an octopus, is a tall, spiny plant which produces tiny red blossoms. Big Bend also has three kinds of prickly pear; one is the "blind" variety which appears to have no thorns.

Geology, which I have also succeeded in forgetting, plays another role in understanding the new places I visit. For instance, why did I discover fossils on a trail winding around a cliff in Big Bend? Why are the rocks in the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone yellow? What gave the domes and cliffs in Yosemite National Park their rounded appearance?

These questions help remind me of the value of learning. Sometimes life gives tests and I need to be ready to make the grade.

Solomon Amendment's approval by Student Senate 'astounding'...

Editor,

Thursday night, Student Senate passed a bill in support of the Solomon Amendment by a vote of 29-28 with one abstention. It astounds me that our senate would approve legislation supporting an amendment showing K-State student support of an issue this important and controversial, by one vote. Not only was there the narrowest potential margin of victory, but during the open session a large portion of the student body was in opposition to the proposed legislation.

How can our senate see themselves superior in analytical reasoning to the U.S. federal court system? How can senate support legislation that is not guaranteed to be constitutional? If indeed as John Kohler, the bill's sponsor, said, "This bill takes no action, it only takes a position showing student support for the Solomon Amendment," then why must senate, by only one vote, voice the opinion of the entire student body? This type of issue demands some large-scale student input, a referendum. To allow senate to act now is totally improper. Although it is practically impossible to begin a referendum now, the only alternative is to halt support immediately.

On Saturday, Kohler told the Associated Students of Kansas K-State supports the bill. With support not immediately halted, the potential for ASK using our senate's support before the Kansas Legislature is increased. This only shows that K-State is the only university to support this bill!

The only option is "executive veto," as stated in Article 4, section 407(c) of the Student Governing Association Constitution: "He/she shall sign or veto within three (3) full school days of all bills passed by student senate." This gives us until Tuesday to kill this bill. Please do as our student body president requests, "Put the student back in student government." Urge our Student Body President Jerry Katlin to kill this bill!

...veto is answer

Editor,

C'mon Jerry Katlin. You can do it. You won't ruin your political career. Veto, veto, veto. It was 29-28, with one abstention — yes, this truly represents student support. It is your responsibility to represent the students and I believe you are sincere. Without a survey or referendum, you can't let student senators play judge. Katlin, you're our only hope. If anyone opposed the Solomon Amendment, call Katlin and tell him to gun the bill down. Veto the Solomon Amendment. Katlin will listen.

Margaret Bachicha

...action ignores society's growth

Editor,

What have we done, K-State? During Thursday's Student Senate meeting, by voting for approval of the Solomon Amendment, we turned back the growth of our society.

Remember around 15 to 20 years ago when the basic concept of a person's view was still upheld without his rights being taken away? What happened to all the freedoms that people have worked so long and hard for?

Let us only hope and pray the U.S. District Court judge in Minnesota declares the amendment unconstitutional. If he doesn't, please contact your representatives opposing this blindly constructed amendment. Please, let's go forward in societal growth — not backward.

...deserves 'shot in foot' award

Editor,

The "shot in the foot" award must now be passed from Secretary of Interior James Watt to K-State's Student Senate for its decision at Thursday's meeting to endorse the Solomon Amendment. Like Watt's decision to ban one of America's most respected rock bands from the Washington Mall because they are not patriotic enough, senate — in the name of patriotic duty — has, by endorsing what is essentially an illegal law, affronted those who for philosophical and religious reasons find their most patriotic act to be in the refusal to register with the Selective Service. Truly, our senators know not what they have done. One can only hope the gun that shoots this senate's foot is not an M-16.

State salaries may 'freeze' in fight with declining taxes

TOPEKA (AP) — A one-year freeze on all state employee salaries is under serious consideration by Republican legislative leaders as a way to help the state cope with continued declines in tax collections, House Speaker Mike Hayden, R-Atwood, said Friday.

At a news conference, Hayden said a "year-long freeze" on salaries for state workers and university faculty members would surface as one item considered during the Legislature's wrap-up session next week.

"A week or two ago the consideration of that probably was not a reality," Hayden said. "What I'm saying is that it will receive consideration now."

When the 1983 session opened in January, Gov. John Carlin recommended a 4 percent salary increase for state workers. That would have cost about $20 million. But after reports last month that tax collections continued to slide, some lawmakers and Carlin advocated a sixmonth delay of any salary increase — from July to January 1984. The move would save about $10 million.

Hayden said many Republican House members are opposed to any tax increase beyond enactment of a severance tax, and that there was greater pressure to reduce government spending.

He reiterated that the Legislature was determined not to provide more money for public school finance than it has already appropriated. Lawmakers included a $28.5 million increase in school aid in a funding bill sent to the governor last week.

Carlin has not acted on the measure, but has maintained that school districts should receive about $55 million more state aid next year than provided by lawmakers in the current year.

Another area targeted for budget cuts by the Legislature is the state health insurance program. Hayden said some $2.6 million could be saved through changes in the current policy, increasing deductibles and making employees pay for more medical services.

Also, lawmakers may be forced to reduce their goals for building balances in the state treasury by June 30, 1984. In the past, GOP leaders had said they hoped to close out fiscal year 1984 with $90-$100 million as a balance in the general fund. Hayden conceded that is changing because of revenue shortfalls.

"Realistically we might have to entertain the idea of an $80 million balance," Hayden said.

When the current fiscal year expires on June 30, state financial experts predict the ending balance will be about $40 million.

Some legislative committees are returning to work Monday and Tuesday to prepare for the closing of the 1983 session. The full

Women's series focuses on equality in Cuba

By JANICE CARLTON
Collegian Reporter

The emergence of women in Cuba as a political force was the topic discussed by Lynn Stoner, faculty member of the history department, as part of the April 15 Fridays Are For Women series.

Stoner recently completed her doctoral dissertation on Cuban women, studying the causes of the radical change in their status in Cuba as well as the role women played that helped to bring the changes about.

Stoner said Cuba has always been distinct from other Latin American countries, especially in women's roles.

"They were skilled politicians who understood how to use their position in society," she said.

The most radical change in women's political rights in Cuba came as a result of a new constitution adopted in 1940 which gave women the right to vote.

"Cuban women formerly had limited political personality," Stoner said.

Along with the right to vote, women were also given equal status under an equal rights article added to the constitution.

"THE CUBANS didn't see (equal rights) as a problem," she said. She noted equal rights is one issue that still hasn't been resolved in the United States.

Before the 1940 constitution, females were considered property of the state in Cuba, Stoner said, thus making men the only politically recognized members of society.

"Women were not typically involved in political matters during this time."

Stoner said one of the contributing factors that brought about women's equality in Cuba was their participation in the struggle for Cuban statehood at the turn of the century. She said women were very active in the revolution, serving as soldiers as well as freely sending their sons to fight.

"The image of the woman was very present in the independence movement," she said. "Visitors in Cuba would always remark on the incredible women's movement there."

STONER STRESSED one of the reasons for Cuban women's success in gaining equal rights was their appeal to motherhood and morality.

"They believed that female morality would create a better society, a moral society," she said. "In effect, the women were successful in obtaining the vote because they were a moderate force in the face of radical alternatives."

Stoner said the Cuban government has established several programs such as full-salaried maternity leave, day-care centers, laundries and grocery shopping services that help working women.

In 1975, under the Family Code adopted by the Cuban government, a policy was established requiring men to perform 50 percent of the housework — whether or not their wives were working.

STONER ADDED, however, the policy is not strictly enforced, although wives can take their husbands to neighborhood "people's courts" if they fail to cooperate.

She said the Cuban government wants to increase the percentage of women in elected office, but added only one woman currently holds a position in Cuban leader Fidel Castro's cabinet.

"There is under-representation of women in politics in Cuba," she said. In other occupations, Stoner said women have advanced rapidly.

"Cuban women have truly entered non-traditional occupations as workers," she said.

Hispanics rapidly becoming 'political factor'

By JEFF TAYLOR
Collegian Reporter

Hispanics, the United States' fastest growing minority, will soon become the political power that blacks became in the 1960s.

That is the opinion of Baltasar Corrada, Puerto Rico's U.S. Commissioner.

Speaking in place of Corrada, who represents Puerto Rico in the U.S. House of Representatives, was Raul Torres, Corrada's administrative assistant. Torres simply read Corrada's prepared speech in the keynote address of the Festival Hispano Americano.

"As Hispanics we have good reason to know the best of the glory and the worst of the weakness underlying the great American democratic tradition," Torres said.

On one hand, he said, Hispanics experience opportunity, understanding and generosity from the Constitution and some people — but on the other hand there is still hatred and injustice from others.

Hispanics, the "fastest-growing minority in the country, are well on the way to political and economic influence," despite the prejudices of a few, he said.

"JUST AS black power became a moving reality in the '60s, so is Latino power fast becoming a political factor of the '80s," Torres said.

There are 14.6 million Hispanic-Americans in the United States, not including illegal aliens. A conservative estimate of 3.5 million "undocumented" Hispanics raises the total to approximately 18.1 million in the United States.

Of this number, "only 42 percent have completed high school," Torres said. "Why haven't Hispanics as a whole fared better?

"In part the rural background, educational preparation and lack of a command of the English language all have helped to keep the Hispanics behind."

As Hispanics become better educated and better trained, "doors to unemployment start unlocking," but just having the doors unlocked is not enough, he said.

"HISPANICS SHOULD take advantage of what they are entitled to," Torres said. "In any occupation in which we are underrepresented, it is our duty to ask why." Hispanics must push for equal opportunity employment.

Torres noted that Corrada deals with Hispanic rights every day in Congress and said, "There is a growing need for a national network to voice the concerns of Hispanics across the nation. The support of Hispanic organizations, although essential, is sometimes not enough. We must have political support as well as constituency support.

"A minority of Congress is committed to the furtherance of Hispanic rights, however it is the remainder of legislators who must become the focus of our lobbying efforts.

"The time is at hand. We have the power and the duty to forge our children's legacy. We can and we must."

Due to the unexpected death of Rep. Phillip Burton, D-California, Corrada had to fly to California and bypass his speech.

Although Corrada doesn't have voting power on the House floor, he does sit on the Education and Labor Committee and Interior Committee.

Bed racers roll in final event of Spring Fling

Many people were lying around, but not one was loafing in the highlight of KSU Association of Residence Halls Spring Fling activities — the annual bed race.

Saturday afternoon dozens of people armed with water balloons, squirt guns, shaving cream and liquid soap took advantage of the warm weather and awaited the start of the bed race. Water balloons were the favorite weapon as some persons carried trash cans full of them.

Some racers came prepared for the onslaught of water balloons. Members of the Boyd Hall/Haymaker Hall odd floors' bed were dressed in green raincoats and had bandanas tied around their faces.

Nine beds were entered in the race. Eight were from residence halls and one was sponsored by Topeka Radio Station WIBW-FM. The WIBW bed offered free T-shirts and beer to whomever would ride their bed. There were seven segments in the race and at least one portion had to be run by women. Each segment consisted of a team of four men and four women.

The beds were lined up three abreast and in three rows. Starting positions were determined by the results of an earlier bed-decorating contest.

The West Hall/Haymaker Hall even floors' bed was able to take the early lead in the race when there was a five-bed pileup at the start.

The Van Zile Hall/Edwards Hall bed was able to overcome an early 30- yard deficit to gain the lead briefly, but the West/Haymaker bed crew caught its second wind and regained a lead it never relinquished.

Van Zile/Edwards finished second and the Ford Hall odd floors/Marlatt Hall even floors bed finished third.

"It feels great to win. I'm really happy," Guy Higgins, sophomore in elementary education, said. "We took them (Van Zile) on the curve, got ahead and nobody was going to catch us.

"The hardest part of the race was running to the finish line to see who won after we had pushed. I was so tired," he said.

Spring fling... Denise Shannon, freshman in business administration, and Jill Sandritter, freshman in elementary education, hold on tight to their bed at the beginning of the annual residence hall bed race. The Ford Hall odd floors/Marlatt Hall even floors' bed they were riding finished third.

The victory came as a surprise to the winning team.

"We thought Van Zile would win the race for sure," Paige Harrison, freshman in business administration, said.

The winning team received a plaque for each hall represented on the team and possession of the traveling trophy until next year's race.

Van Zile residents, winner of the last four bed races, vowed to bring the trophy back to their hall.

"Next year we'll win it back. I guarantee it," Mike Tortorice, sophomore in architecture, said.

Dellums exhorts an end to 'insanity'

By KECIA STOLFUS
Collegian Reporter

It is the responsibility of the American people to determine the outcome of today's nuclear arms race, U.S. Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., said Friday during an All-University Convocation.

"We have a profound obligation and responsibility to turn over this planet to the next generation. And to even consider the use of nuclear weapons, in my estimation, is deplorable and obscene. To even talk about nuclear war is an absurdity.

"What is war? War is a violent act between and among nations. And, when it stops, someone survives to pick up the pieces. But who in the hell survives in a nuclear exchange? Who picks up the pieces?" Dellums, chairman of the House Armed Services Subcommittee on Military Installations and Facilities, asked.

U.S. 'beyond' nuclear deterrence

IF NUCLEAR WEAPONS CAN be used, Dellums said, it is only a matter of time until destruction. But, he said if people recognize they already have deterrence, they can negotiate back — not forward with a greater capacity to destroy.

"This planet is in danger because we are going beyond deterrence to a war-fighting capability. All these notions about superiority and non-superiority are illusions," he said.

In a nuclear exchange with the Soviet Union, which nation would stop firing, Dellums asked, if one nation thought the other was at an advantage?

There would be no backing down in a nuclear confrontation, Dellums said, until existing life would be destroyed. To develop weapons that can destroy is a "level of insanity that defies logic."

There is no verification for building such weapons, Dellums said, except that the administration and Congress believe the Russians can't be trusted.

THE UNITED STATES does not regard the Soviets as fellow human beings, he said, and as a result Congress is frightened into spending money to defend the United States from the Soviet Union. Our opponent needs to be viewed in "realistic terms," he said.

"I believe there is no intellectual, no scientific, no military basis for the principle of nuclear superiority in 1983.

"The Soviet Union has achieved rough parity. They have essentially caught up with us. And so to continue to go forward as if in some way we can acquire a sense of superiority is absurd. Superiority is a fleeting concept," Dellums said.

Robert McNamara, former secretary of defense, tried to define deterrence as the capacity to destroy 70 percent of the Soviet Union's economic infrastructure and 30 percent of its populaton equivalent to 60 million deaths in terms of U.S. population.

The law of deterrence can be achieved with 400 nuclear weapons, Dellums said.

"ANY DEVELOPMENT GREATER than this would be an absurdity and a gross waste which would not permit the target nation to evolve as a civilized society in modern times.

"We are far beyond deterrence at this point. We have not 400 strategic nuclear weapons — we have 10,000 strategic nuclear weapons and 15,000 tactical nuclear weapons. We have an arsenal of 25,000 nuclear weapons and we are continuing to build," he said.

If the rate of current building continues, Dellums said, 18,000 to 19,000 weapons, each more powerful and accurate, will be added this decade. In the 1990s, the United States will have nearly 45,000 nuclear weapons.

Dellums quoted the military budget as stating the United States must have the capacity to fight, survive and win a nuclear war.

"Anyone who thinks that we can fight, survive and win a nuclear war is by definition an ambulatory schizophrenic.

"UNDER THE UMBRELLA of modernizing our nuclear forces we are developing exotic technology beyond verifiability," he said.

Dellums ridiculed several nuclear defense plans. He suggested a mass transit system for nuclear warheads should be demilitarized for human use, providing the country with a complete, convenient and economical transportation system.

Instead of having a concentration of "5,000 holes in the ground" aimed at the Soviet Union, Dellums suggested that missiles should be parceled out to each of the 435 Congressional districts. If the American people realized they could possibly be "a sponge for thousands of Soviet war heads, they might say they didn't want to be sponge."

He suggested placing bets on missiles which were designed to race around a track to foil Soviet aim, and said even conservative members of Congress thought the dense pack to be a "very bizarre idea."

U.S. representative clings to belief of producing changes in Congress

By ALAN STOLFUS
News Editor

U.S. Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., walked into his press conference Friday morning clinging onto the last bit of belief that he can make a difference.

"I have struggled as gallantly as I can not to be cynical (about his ability to affect change in Congress)," the seven-term representative said. "I think that I can bring about that change. I'm clinging on to that last bit of change."

Dellums, who has been under fire recently for his alleged drug actions on Capitol Hill, said more people want a "rational debate and not a personality campaign" out of Congress.

Rational debate, he said, is not the debate which has evolved about "the moral issue of our time" — a nuclear freeze.

Dellums, chairman of the House Armed Services Subcommittee, said Congress has twice extensively debated the nuclear freeze and is in the process of "debating this to death." He added it is

Baseball team returns winless from Oklahoma

NORMAN, Okla. — The K-State baseball team didn't have any problems getting hits against the Oklahoma pitchers in its two double-headers over the weekend. However, the 'Cats did have problems getting any runs from their hits.

The Wildcats dropped all four games to the Sooners with scores of 6-5, 4-0, 8-5 and 4-3.

The pitching staff, a group of players who have not come through for the Wildcats in past years, did its job well against the Sooners, but the hitting was not there for support.

"Our pitching has kept us in the games, which hasn't happened in the past," Wildcat coach Dave Baker said. "We didn't get the key hits, though, or even keep the ball in play."

K-State jumped out to an early lead in the first game of Saturday's double-header on Kerry Golden's solo home run in the first inning. Oklahoma tied it up in its half of the first, then grabbed a demanding 5-2 lead with four runs in the sixth.

The Wildcats tied the game up at 5-all in the eighth. Mark Teague got on base on an error and scored on successive singles by Golden and Cary Colbert. Golden scored minutes later on a wild pitch by Sooner pitcher Ray Hayward.

OKLAHOMA REGAINED the lead in the bottom of the eighth, when Steve Hurst hit a single to left, his first hit in 10 at-bats this year, that scored Craig Reid, pitch running for Ed Augustine, who reached first on a walk.

David Schmitz, coming into the game in the eighth inning in relief of Gerry Zimmerman, took the loss for K-State, dropping his mark to 1-1. Hayward (6-4) got the win for Oklahoma.

The second game went worse for the 'Cats, as they were held to four hits. The Sooners ripped Wildcat starter Mike Wilkerson for three runs on two singles, a double and a sacrifice fly in the first inning. They collected another run in the second on two singles and a wild pitch.

The bright spot for K-State was the relief pitching of Chris Hamilton, entering in the third inning. Hamilton pitched four innings of scoreless ball, striking out six while giving up only two hits. Wilkerson (4-3) got the loss for K-State.

SUNDAY DIDN'T go much better for the error-plagued Wildcats, who lost two games they could just have easily won.

The Sooners jumped on Wildcat starter Scott McClanahan for one run in the first, four in the second and three more in the fourth. After that, McClanahan calmed down and held the Sooners scoreless while K-State hitters attempted a comeback.

The Wildcats tallied two runs in the seventh. Mike Smart doubled and advanced to third on a single by Dwayne Belcher, but was thrown out on a fielder's choice by Teague. An error by the Sooners' shortstop on a Golden grounder loaded the bases, bringing up Don Grause, who singled to drive in two runs. The rally ended, though, as Colbert struck out with two on base.

K-State scored three more in the ninth, but the Wildcats fell three runs short. Belcher led off the inning with a walk and was advanced on a single by Teague. After two Wildcats struck out at the hands of the Sooners' Darrell Rodgers, Colbert rapped a two-run double, then scored on a single by Scott Pick. Steve Goodwin grounded out, though, to end the rally and the game.

ERRORS TOOK their toll on the Wildcats as four miscues accounted for four Sooner runs. McClanahan (3-3) took the loss for K-State, giving up four earned runs on eight hits. Bruce Hinz (5-2) got the win.

The final game was another close one, with Oklahoma scoring in the bottom of the seventh inning to steal the victory. Reid singled to lead off the inning for the Sooners, stole second and went to third when Goodwin's throw to second went into center field. K-State pitcher Schmitz walked the next batter, bringing up Hurst. Hurst grounded to Teague, but the throw to home was too late to catch Reid, who came in with the winning run.

K-State had its chances to win, as the Wildcats stranded eight runners. Colbert was also thrown out at home plate twice, once in the first inning and again in the fourth.

LYNN LICHTER, in only his second start of the season, took the loss for K-State. He gave up three earned runs on five hits, making his record 2-1. Rodgers got the win for Oklahoma, upping his record to 3-2.

Even with the losses, Baker said he was happy with his team's effort. "We really competed well today," he said. "We had the opportunity to win, but didn't take advantage of them."

The thing K-State has to do, according to Baker, is just continue competing and keep its spirits up. "Right now, we have to keep playing, and good things will happen if we don't get discouraged."

K-State dropped to 0-8 in the conference with the losses, 16-13 overall. Oklahoma, the conference leader, raised its mark to 10-2 in the conference, 26-12 overall. The Wildcats' next action is Thursday at home, with a scheduled double-header against Marymount starting at 1:30 p.m.

K-State gains ground on KU crew

K-State rowing crew wins share of Big Eight championship

Staff/David Stuckey

Row your boat... Members of the men's varsity eight team of the K-State Crew row back to the dock after completing a race during the Big Eight Regatta Saturday at Tuttle Creek Reservoir. K-State tied for first place with the University of Kansas. Nebraska, the only other school entered, placed third.

Unlike last week's losing performance against the University of Kansas, the K-State rowing crew was able to get back on the right track as it tied the Jayhawks for the Big Eight championship Saturday. The two teams competed with the University of Nebraska at Tuttle Creek in the Big Eight Regatta.

K-State and KU scored 52½ points apiece. Nebraska took third with 27.

The teams experienced a delay in the competition when choppy waters forced them to look for another course. By the time a new course was mapped out, according to K-State coach Pete Hamma, the waters had calmed and the regatta was continued — two hours late.

K-State was victorious in the all three of the four-man events and finished second in three of the four eight-man races.

KU won the men's and women's varsity eight races and the men's and women's novice eight. K-State won the men's and women's varsity four races, as well as the men's varsity light-weight four.

Hamma said the lack of time the team has spent on the water has hurt its performance. With that in mind, the K-State crew did well, he said, but there is still room for improvement.

"We can improve on how we did this week if we hit the water before the next meet," he said.

The next competition for K-State is the state championship in Topeka. The Wildcats will compete against KU, Washburn and Wichita State at that regatta. And, according to Hamma, it will be K-State against KU all over again.

"We seem to improve week after week, day after day; while KU has already peaked out we are improving and getting faster," he said. "We are almost there now."

Another factor in the outcome of the state regatta, according to Hamma, is the performance of the four-man teams.

"It will depend on the fours. We should be able to win if we can do better on the fours," he said.

"If we could possibly win one or two of the eight races, we could just win the whole thing."

Delayed season frustrates softball squad

COLUMBIA, Mo. — No one ever said that dismal weather would affect a team's performance. But for the K-State softball team, the past two weeks of poor weather and sudden injuries plagued the squad as it struggled over the weekend, losing four games in the Missouri Pony Roundup here.

The 'Cats finally got their opportunity to compete after being delayed because of unseasonably cold weather. K-State was unsuccessful in picking up where it left off as the 'Cats were defeated by Southwest Missouri State University in the first game on Friday, 3-2.

K-State scored two runs on five hits compared to Southwest Missouri's three runs on seven hits. Wildcat coach Ralph Currie said K-State's biggest mistake came when the 'Cats forced an error in the seventh inning.

The second game saw K-State lose to Illinois Central University, 3-1. Illinois Central, the defending NCAA Division II champion, kept its winning streak alive by pounding out seven hits. Errors again proved to be the key for the 'Cats loss.

Nebraska and Creighton finished off the Wildcats.

The Cornhuskers, behind a nine-hit attack, beat K-State, 3-1. The Blue Jays caused even more problems as they shut out the 'Cats, 7-0. Creighton's strength overpowered K-State as the Blue Jays ended the evening with 12 hits.

(See SOFTBALL, p. 12)

Tracksters 'phenomenal' in weekend meet; Mercer leads Wildcat qualifiers for NCAA

NORMAN, Okla. — "Phenomenal" was the word for Head track coach Steve Miller as his Wildcat track teams made believers out of themselves Saturday at the John Jacobs Track and Field Invitational here.

With teams from Kansas, Arkansas and Oklahoma competing in the meet for collegiate and high school teams, the 'Cats were unstoppable as they racked up a couple of big wins.

The brightest spot for K-State came when five athletes qualified for the NCAA Outdoor Championships, scheduled at Houston in June.

According to Miller, K-State performed to his expectations.

"We had a phenomenal meet," Miller said. "It's just what we thought it would be if we had good weather."

Julius Mercer was the 'Cats main threat of the meet. Mercer got the attack started as he turned in one of his finest performance ever in a Wildcat uniform. Mercer's long-awaited search for a spot in the national meet ended Saturday when he qualified for nationals in the 110-meter high hurdles with a 13.90 clocking.

Mercer's time tied the school record which he set a week ago at the Wildcats' only home meet of the season, the K-State Invitational.

Not only was Mercer outstanding in the high hurdles, but he was also the star of the 400-intermediate hurdles, winning in 51.43, and the 4x400-meter relay team, in which which he ran 47.4.

"Julius was tremendous," Miller said. "The biggest change I've seen in him is that he is more aware and involved with the team."

Besides Mercer, Ray Hansen also turned in a top performance for the men's squad. Hansen finished first in the javelin with a heave of 246-11.

On the women's side, K-State continued its winning tradition as three women qualified for nationals.

Deb Pihl continued to be a dominant force in the distance events, qualifying for the nationals in the 3,000-meter and 1,500-meter runs.

In the 3,000 meters, Pihl set a school record with a time of 9:28.19, bettering the old mark of 9:35.4 set by Renee Urish in 1979.

In the 1,500-meter run, Pihl kept the pace going, winning the event in 4:22.05 for a John Jacobs track record.

Betsy Silzer also added depth in the distance events with a NCAA qualifying time of 9:35.12 in the 3,000-meter run.

The fifth and final NCAA qualifier for K-State came with Pinkie Suggs. Suggs, a Manhattan High product, threw the shot put 50-2 for a first-place performance which was also set an outdoor record for K-State.

Like Pihl, Suggs added another victory to her record as she won the discus with a throw of 152-11, which bettered the school record of 151-3 set by Janice Stuckey in 1981.

"I don't think she is as far as she should be," Miller said. "She's got a long way to go. But she can be as good as she wants to be. Pinkie is like a bomb if she explodes."

Women's soccer defeats Wichita in season opener

WICHITA — The K-State Women's Soccer Club won its first match of the year, defeating the Wichita Sharpshooters 2-0 here Saturday. The game was also the first for the Sharpshooters.

The Wildcats chalked up goals from Anna Donnelly and Susan Wharff to take their first victory in the rain-delayed season. The team has missed four games already this season because of rain. The rained-out games have been rescheduled to be played later in the year.

Donnelly scored the Wildcats' first goal of the game, which proved to be all K-State needed for the win. The defense did an effective job, preventing the Wichita team from posing any scoring threat. Wharff later added the insurance goal for the Wildcats, who are now 1-0.

K-State's next action is scheduled for April 23 in Manhattan.

Rugby club defeats Topeka, 21-4; team anticipates regional tourney

K-State's rugby club overcame a lack of concentration and sloppy play to defeat the Topeka rugby club, 21-4 on Saturday.

Wildcat coach Mike Patten said his team was not paying attention on the field and was not playing up to its ability.

"We did not have a good week of practice. Hardly anybody wanted to practice and we played a pretty flat game," Patten said.

Topeka scored first and held K-State off for most of the first half. Greg Dentino finally got K-State on the scoreboard when he scored a try to tie the game at 4-4. Bill Knopick then hit a penalty kick to put K-State up 7-4 at intermission.

In the second half, K-State played with a little more intensity but still not enough to suit Patten.

"In the second half everyone decided we did not want to lose the game, so we played a little better," Patten said. "We really did not beat them by doing things correctly. We just did it on ability. We should have beaten them sooner in the game."

Bill Bequette started K-State off in the second half when he scored a try. Knopick then hit the extra point and K-State was ahead, 13-4. Greg Benton scored and Knopick added another extra point to give the 'Cats the victory.

K-State will continue action this weekend when it travels to College Station, Texas, to compete in the western regional tournament. K-State is ranked No. 1 in the region and may have a chance for revenge.

Last year, K-State was eliminated from going to the final four by New Mexico State in sudden death overtime. This year the Wildcats may get their chance as both teams are in the same division.

First, the Wildcats must play Texas A&M Saturday in the first round of the championships before they can have a crack at New Mexico State.

Jim Gantner insists he has not turned slugger.

Gantner, who bats ninth in Milwaukee's power-packed lineup, drove in three runs with a homer and a sacrifice fly Sunday to lead the Brewers to a 6-3 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Gantner's homer was his second of the season, half as many as he hit all last year. He won a game with a 400-foot homer in Toronto last week, and his homer Sunday traveled almost as far.

"I don't hit many, but when I hit them they usually go a long way," Gantner said. "That's because line-drive hitters like me have to get all of it to hit one out. A power hitter can hit a home run off the end of the bat."

Gantner, batting .361, is off to his best start in the major leagues, having hit .282 last year.

He has knocked in game-winning runs in three of the Brewers' five victories.

"I can't explain it," he said. "I'm usually a slow starter, but I'm seeing the ball well and I'm getting good extension on my swing."

"Gantner is a tough out," Royals Manager Dick Howser said. "You have to make good pitches on every hitter in that lineup. Even then it is not always enough."

Winning pitcher Mike Caldwell, 1-2, who had been rocked for 19 hits and 11 runs in his first two outings, scattered eight hits and one run over seven innings. Jim Slaton allowed a run in each of the last two innings before Pete Ladd struck out Amos Otis with the bases loaded to end the game.

Singles by Gorman Thomas and Charlie Moore, a sacrifice and Gantner's sacrifice fly off loser Steve Renko, 0-1, put the Brewers ahead 1-0 in the second inning.

Robin Yount singled in the Milwaukee third, stole second, was sacrificed to third and scored on a double by Ben Oglivie as the Brewers made it 2-0.

The Royals scored in the fourth on the first of George Brett's three doubles and singles by Otis and Hal McRae. But the Brewers made it 4-1 in their half of the inning when Ned Yost walked and Gantner slammed a two-run homer, his second of the season.

Two-out doubles by Thomas and Moore made it 5-1 in the fifth, and Paul Molitor rapped an RBI single in the Milwaukee eighth. McRae drove in a Kansas City run with a sacrifice fly in the eighth, and pinch hitter Willie Aikens had an RBI single in the ninth.

DAVE WINFIELD smashed a two-run homer and Steve Kemp scored from second base on a sacrifice fly Sunday as the New York Yankees came from behind to defeat the Toronto Blue Jays 7-5.

With Toronto leading 4-3, Ken Griffey singled to open the Yankees' fifth and Winfield followed with his fourth home run of the year. Kemp then singled and, after Don Baylor, who had doubled home a run earlier, flied out, Roy Smalley walked. Graig Nettles then sent left fielder Dave Collins to the wall for his long drive. Collins crashed into the fence making the catch and Kemp was able to score from second ahead of the relay. Jerry Mumphrey followed with a double, scoring Smalley with the inning's fourth run.

The Yanks clipped loser Jim Clancy, 1-1, for three runs in the second. Toronto, which had scored in the top of the second on Jesse Barfield's double and a single by Martinez, got three in the fifth.

Winner Shane Rawley, 2-0, scattered eight hits, including Johnson's second home run in the eighth.

MIKE NORRIS scattered five hits and struck out 11 in eight innings Sunday as the Oakland A's defeated the Seattle Mariners 7-4 for their sixth victory in the last seven games.

Norris, 2-0, gave up homers to Ken Phelps, Dave Henderson and Domingo Ramos to account for all the Seattle runs before giving way to Tom Burgmeier at the start of the ninth.

The Mariners took a 2-0 lead in the bottom of the first on Phelps' fourth homer, but Oakland scored three times in the second off Seattle starter Bob Stoddard, 1-2.

Oakland's designated hitter Jeff Burroughs hit his second homer for a 4-2 lead in the third. Henderson's solo shot, his third, cut the margin to 4-3 in the fourth, before the A's scored three in the top of the fifth, including Dwayne Murphy's solo homer, his first this season.

"There were three teams there that are in the top 15 of the NCAA Division I rankings," Currie said. "It was a fine tournament. We didn't play too bad, but with (Pat) Howard hurt we had to juggle the lineup around and it confused the girls."

Howard, K-State's leading hitter, suffered a broken leg in the University of Kansas contest last week. She will be out for the remainder of the season and, according to Currie, the third baseman's absence had an affect on his team.

"People who have been hitting for us — Cathy Hinson and Pam Rufener, were not doing well. Maybe that was because they were thinking too much about Howard."

Besides Howard, the Wildcats also lost outfielder Cindy Wasinger. Wasinger suffered a sprained ankle and will be out for K-State for an indefinite period.

Janel Anderson, the 'Cats' leading pitcher, took the losses the hardest as she was defeated in all four games.

"I think it (the tournament) was tiring for her. She had four games in two days," Currie said.

Currie cited good performances by outfielders Kelly Scoles and Pam Hentzler. Both led the team in hitting — going 5-12 for the weekend.

Annette Kirkam also turned in a fine performance as she went 4-12 for the tournament.

K-State, 6-8, will try to regroup this week to prepare for its intrastate rival matchup with KU on Tuesday in Manhattan. The Wildcats lost to the 'Hawks in a doubleheader last week in Lawrence.

Aikens upset about being benched

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City Royals first baseman Willie Aikens said he is bewildered and upset by Manager Dick Howser's recent decision to bench him against left-handed pitchers.

"Just because a left-hander is pitching it's like I can't hit," Aikens said. "Then he (Howser) says for the team to win I have to hit. I hate it, man. I've done my job in the past. I could see if after two months I was hitting .200, but...if I'm gonna help the team I need to play every game."

Howser benched Aikens Friday in Milwaukee against left-hander Bob McClure, and said he would do the same Sunday against scheduled Brewers starter Mike Caldwell. Aikens was in the starting lineup for Saturday's game, but it was snowed out in the first inning and he never made it to the plate.

"(Howser) thinks he's right by doing it, but I don't think he is," Aikens, ending his refusal to talk with the media, said in Sunday editions of The Kansas City Star. "He's taking a stronger bat out of the lineup for a weaker one. What good does it do to take me out of the game and put Wathan at first base? He's no threat like me to hit the ball out of the park. How can you substitute my bat for somebody that hits five home runs in a year? It's stupid."

Howser was low-key about the significance of the lineup change, saying it was being evaluated on a game-by-game basis.

Wins evade tennis players; 'Cats lose Colorado meets

While the men's tennis team was enjoying a short vacation in the Rocky Mountains, the women's team also caught a little taste of scenery this weekend.

Unfortunately for K-State, the scenery was more exciting than the matchups as both teams split matches.

With a strong performance in both the singles and doubles bracket, the women's team kicked off its weekend matchup with Cloud County Community College Friday at the Washburn Courts on the right note, pounding the Thunderbirds, 9-0.

The 'Cats had it easy in the singles department. All six Wildcat players scored victories.

No. 1 singles player Christel Felder got the show rolling for K-State as she scored a decisive win over Brenda Phillips, 6-0, 6-3.

The show didn't stop as K-State continued to baffle the Thunderbirds.

No. 2 Tamie Peugh kept the streak going with a victory over over Gail O'Connor, 6-1, 6-0. The rest of the K-State lineup also won. Carlye Madelen defeated Sherri Hurt, 6-1, 6-0; Sue Peugh defeated Sam Kasl, 6-1, 6-0; Lisa Creighton got by Pat Maganass, 6-1, 6-0; and Laurie Rorabaugh won due to a default.

In doubles, K-State continue to climb the ladder, winning all three matches.

In Saturday's matchup with Colorado in Boulder, the bottom fell out for the 'Cats and the Buffaloes ran by K-State, 8-1.

Women's coach Steve Webb said he was disappointed in his squad's performance.

"I felt like we could compete with them," Webb said. "I think the girls are just happy with playing teams like Colorado close. That's the way it has always been here. Winning really never mattered — just play them close. That kind of attitude has to change."

The lone K-State win for the day came with Felder in No. 1 singles as she whipped Joy Knowlton, 6-2, 6-1.

On the men's side, K-State had even more problems, dropping two matches.

In the first series with Air Force Academy, the 'Cats couldn't get things started as they lost, 7-2.

Curt Thompson was the only victor in the singles section as he defeated Colorado's Tom Barth, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4. In doubles, Brady Tinker and Kent Smith managed to pull out a win, beating Juergen Poehler and Matt Mitchell, 5-7, 7-6, 6-1.

The Wildcats fared no better against the University of Colorado, losing the meet, 6-3. Jeff Jackard and Kris James won in the singles division, while the team of Gary Hassenflu and Thompson was victorious in the doubles division.

The next matchup for both teams will be Tuesday when the women take on the University of Kansas and the men take on Bethel College on the Washburn Courts.

Dellums accused of drug action on Capitol Hill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former House employee told authorities he obtained drugs for Rep. Ronald V. Dellums, D-Calif., and two lie-detector tests indicated he was telling the truth, a federal magistrate and a prosecutor revealed Friday.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Daniel Bernstein told a court hearing the tests were administered to Robert Yesh by the Drug Enforcement Administration and the House ethics committee. The DEA and the House panel are investigating drug use on Capitol Hill by congressional employees and possibly by members of Congress.

Bernstein mentioned the polygraph tests during the sentencing for Yesh, who earlier pleaded guilty to two misdemeanor charges.

The 13-year former employee of the House doorkeeper's office received one year in prison and three years' probation for one cocaine possession count and a second count of conspiracy to possess cocaine.

Bernstein filed court papers that include a cooperation agreement between Yesh and prosecutors that said, "Robert Yesh admits that at the request of a U.S. congressman and his aide, Robert Yesh has personally supplied them in the past with small quantities of cocaine and marijuana at the U.S. Capitol. Robert Yesh also admits to other personal knowledge of drug trafficking by another senior congressional aide and other employees at the U.S. Capitol."

During the sentencing, U.S. Magistrate Arthur L. Burnett identified the congressman as Dellums and the aide as John Apperson. The magistrate said Yesh's involvement with drug dealing on Capitol Hill "gives this court some concern as to how many members of Congress may be using cocaine or drugs."

Dellums, in a statement released by his office, said, "I am deeply concerned that such serious allegations, based upon apparently uncorroborated statements by an individual whose credibility must be questioned, have never been previously revealed to me, either out of a sense of personal decency or as a matter of due process.

"Now that I am aware for the first time of the nature of some of these allegations, I look forward to the opportunity to confront them in the appropriate forum."

During the sentencing proceeding, Burnett asked Yesh, "With reference to your statement that you personally had dealings with Congressman Dellums — discussions first about marijuana, then later discussions about cocaine — did it ever occur to you then to go and talk to a lawyer about what you should do about a member of Congress approaching you to get drugs?"

Speech

"I AM AFRAID WE ARE hell-bent to use these incredible weapons of destruction. We are engaging in a tragic set of priorities that are allowing us to build a monument to military madness while we allow the problems of human misery to (go betting)," he said.

In developing a "Star Wars" technology, Dellums said, the U.S. and Soviet Union are creating a new generation of death. Several recent studies, he said, indicate American children believe they will die in a nuclear war.

"We are killing our children by killing their hopes and dreams and inspirations" by telling them there will be no tomorrow; he said.

The United States and the Soviet Union should compete over who can help the Third World the most, he said, not over the capacity to destroy the planet. Our foreign policy should reflect human rights, he said.

People are questioning their own and society's worth, Dellums said. They must now begin to organize and mobilize, and love, honor and respect themselves and each other as human beings.

"We have to band together in a powerful activist movement calling for world peace," he said. Martin Luther King envisioned a world of peace, Dellums noted, and his example should be followed.

Dellums

"bizarre" that Congress has not reached an agreement on the issue as the people are obviously for it.

According to Dellums, the Soviet Union and China are willing to enter into a "no first-strike" agreement, but the Reagan Administration is unwilling to involve itself in such an agreement. The MX and Trident missles are first-strike missiles.

Deploying the Pershing missiles in West Germany would bring the world closer to the brink of nuclear disaster, he said. The missiles would only take four to six minutes to reach targets in the Soviet Union, extremely reducing the time to abort their flight.

The Pershing's deployment is similar to the 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis, he said, when Russian missiles were only four to six minutes away in Cuba.

"What makes us think that deployment of the Pershing missiles four to six minutes from Russia is equally acceptable to the Soviets?" he asked.

"We don't need to be playing interventious games in the Third World. We are a powerful nation. We should be trying to solve the social problems," he said.

Addressing his opening statement to various topics, Dellums said President Reagan was in violation of the Neutrality Act and the Constitution by sending troops to Nicaragua as advisers.

"The Constitution of the United States says the Congress has the right to declare war — not the president," he said. "There's a war going on in Nicaragua even if troops aren't there."

Dellums said witnesses have proved that U.S. forces are indeed in Nicaragua and Reagan is violating the Constitution if he is trying to overthrow the Nicaragua government subversively.

"We are headed down that road to Vietnam, but we have the safeguards of the press and educated people," he said. The news media are informing the public in the early stages about Nicaragua and the public is conscientious about another Vietnam.

As long as the public is informed, Nicaragua will not turn into another Vietnam, Dellums said, but "if you keep them in the dark like in Vietnam, then you can manipulate their ignorance."

Aid

"Every student would have to work before they qualify for funds," Evans said.

This means that students would receive the cost of educational expenses, less 40 percent, and minus their expected family contribution with the full amount not exceeding $3,000.

BECAUSE IT TAKES MORE for a student to attend a private institution than a public institution, private colleges would be eligible for more money, Evans said. For this reason, private institutions are supporting Reagan's proposals.

"The lower the cost of the institution, the lower the Pell (Self-Help) Grants," he said.

Because the Self-Help program is "based upon a stringent formula of financial need, there is no latitude for unusual circumstances," Evans said.

Although the funding level requested in the budget for Self-Help Grants exceeds the fiscal 1983 level for Pell Grants, the College Board said the proposed restructuring raises two concerns.

The board said how the changes will affect the distribution of aid and whether the proposed changes will cause a dispute between the Reagan Administration and Congress, delaying the delivery of aid and discouraging students and parents from applying for aid will have to be answered.

CONCERNING DISTRIBUTION of aid, Department of Education officials said the proposed changes "will enable low-income students to attend a wider range of schools, provide more equitable treatment of students at low-cost institutions, concentrate aid on low-income students, and restore the traditional role of the family in meeting educational costs."

The College Board also explained that "if the Administration's proposals for the Pell and (SEOG) programs were approved, students who currently might qualify for maximum grants from both the Pell and SEOG programs would see the amount of federal grant money they qualify for reduced from $3,800 to $3,000."

The SEOG program, which is funded for $355 million in fiscal 1983, would be eliminated in fiscal 1984 under the proposed changes "in an effort to achieve a single grant program."

INTENDED TO INCREASE the amount of assistance available to meet the requirement in the Self-Help Grant Program, the proposed changes would increase funds for Work-Study programs from $540 million to $850 million, an increase of $310 million.

Evans said this came about in an effort to put more people to work and should provide about 50 more jobs for K-State students for the 1983-84 academic year, although there is no guarantee these jobs will be available in the 1984-85 school year.

There are three proposed changes in the GSL Program including all families, rather than just those with adjusted gross incomes of more than $30,000, demonstrate a need to obtain a GSL, an increase in the origination fee for graduate and professional students from 5 to 10 percent, and guarantee agencies return unnecessary loan advances to the federal government.

Reagan is requesting a $900 million cut in fiscal 1983 and a $153 million cut in fiscal 1984 for the GSL Program.

Salaries

Legislature convenes Wednesday, and Hayden said it probably will not adjourn until next Saturday night.

Of course, the main item of business will be passage of a new severance tax bill to correct potential constitutional flaws in an earlier version sent to the governor. Action is also needed on one final funding measure, called the "omnibus" appropriations bill by legislators because it contains a hodgepodge of budget matters that are left to the end for a resolution.

In addition, lawmakers will be working to reach a compromise over a possible package of tax increases and budget cuts to put the state back in sound financial condition in the coming year.

Hayden said he is working on a new package of proposals that he hopes will resolve differences between GOP leaders and the Democratic governor. However, the speaker declined to say what was in his package, except that it does not propose an increase in the state sales tax.

"We continue to hold out the hope that we can reach some kind of bipartisan agreement," said Hayden.

Derby Days ride

The women of Alpha Chi Omega cheer on Susan Hey, freshman in electrical engineeering, in the "Little Indy" competition during the Sigma Chi Derby Days Saturday. Overall, Alpha Xi Delta placed first, followed by Pi Beta Phi and Chi Omega in the annual fund-raising festivities that pit sorority against sorority.

Regents

In other action, the board approved Acker's request that K-State be authorized to discontinue charging the $1 per credit hour per semester audit fee that is currently being charged.

THE FISCAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE adopted a resolution asking regents schools to review their base operating budgets, show the board their budget increases and reductions enacted for fiscal 1984, submit an outline of intended allocations in fiscal 1985 and present a plan to sustain or improve essential programs in their fiscal 1986 budgets.

Archie Dykes, the regent who introduced the resolution, said it was designed to make schools target specific areas for budget increases or reductions, and do away with across-the-board cuts or hikes.

In another matter, the board accepted the resignation of Appleberry as president of Pittsburg State, which will take effect in June, and established guidelines for a campus advisory committee to review candidates to succeed him.

Novel encompasses many worlds, lacks plot, character development

By LISA HOOKER
Government Editor

David Niven asked a world-famous author for tips on writing a novel, and the friend answered, "Well, you could perhaps try...giving it a beginning, a middle and an end."

Review

Niven must have forgotten the advice in his fourth book, "Go Slowly, Come Back Quickly." It is an interesting, enjoyable book, but its beginning, middle and end are difficult to find. It occurred to me Niven might be revealing the actor in himself who depends on visuals. The book seemed to leave out several details the reader would have inherently known had he been watching the story unfold on the screen.

In "Go Slowly, Come Back Quickly," Niven outlines the adventures of a young Polish man during the late 1930s and early 1940s, and the reader comes to know him well, although Niven never really develops the background that makes his character.

Stanislaw Skolimowski harbors all the fears and dreams of any young man, and his apprehension toward letting these show is all too easy to understand. He has the talent to be a pilot, but his fear of fighting in airplanes is almost overwhelming. When he is finally injured and unable to fly, he feels a tremendous relief.

Stani has an obvious aversion to any type of leadership position, yet he is the type of person who rises to the occasion. He seems to have a deep underlying courage he is cautious about letting out, as if there were only a limited supply.

Stani spends some time in England, befriended by an eccentric middle-aged woman, and falls in love with an actress. His desire for her drives him throughout the book, and yet at the same time Niven plays the romance down, as if it's a secondary theme. Finally Stani convinces Pandora, his actress, they are worthy of one another and they go to Hollywood together to pursue her career.

There, Stani finds himself without any purpose and the love he and Pandora have meets its hardest test. However, his photography hobby lands him a job as a photographer's assistant and he and Pandora finally find happiness living and working together.

The most interesting aspect of the book is the fact that it encompasses so many different worlds, not only physical, but cultural and emotional. Niven makes the transition from battle-wounded Britain to star-struck Hollywood before the reader even realizes the difference, however, the quick moves are not uncomfortable.

Niven uses a unique writing style in "Go Slowly, Come Back Quickly." He talks to the reader as if in conversation and uses a fair amount of slang.

Niven's book may be a lot of things. It may be a dream he has always had about his own life. It may be a memory of himself or someone else. Either way, one has the feeling Niven has had this story in mind for a long time.

He presents it in a light-hearted and humorous way and the book is easily read, although it's troublesome in the way it doesn't have any great climax or definite plot.

Jett/Lewis ticket sales remain slow; money, scheduling could be factors

By SEAN REILLY
Collegian Reporter

The Joan Jett and the Blackhearts, Huey Lewis and the News concert tour has posed a problem — slow ticket sales.

As of Monday, K-State had sold only 3,500 tickets out of the 9,300 available. To pay for the cost of the band, the break-even point is 5,500, according to Barbara Burke, Union Program Council adviser.

Jett's fee is $20,000, and unlike most opening acts, Lewis cost $5,000. Most openers range around $500, Burke said. If ticket sales fail to cover concert costs, the Union will pick up the difference.

"Whether or not the concert breaks even will have no effect on the free spring concert near the end of the semester," Burke said. "The Union has all ready established a budget for the concert."

HOWEVER, BURKE HASN'T lost hope, in fact, she's optimistic.

"I am hoping for 5,000 to be sold by concert time," Burke said. "The seating is reserved.

"Ticket sales are moving similar to that of the J. Geils concert in which we broke even," Burke added. "J. Geils was mail-in and the concert did not break even until the day of the show."

The J. Geils concert had only sold 6,050 tickets the day before the show. UPC sold 740 to break even the night of the concert. Tickets for the J. Geils concert were a dollar cheaper than the Jett/Lewis concert.

UNABLE TO PINPOINT the main reason for slow ticket sales, Burke said, "the date of the concert may be a problem." Scheduling the concert around basketball games, tests and spring break is hard. The weather has not been cooperating either.

"Money is a factor. Students spent what money they had on spring break," she said.

Tickets are 50 cents more than the tickets for the Chicago concert last fall. Having two major groups this spring, instead of one, is the reason for a higher ticket costs. The selling price for students is $9, $9.50 and $10.

"The Chicago concert sold 5,000 through mail order and 3,000 tickets at the box office. I am really disappointed in current ticket sales," Burke said.

Burke expects ticket sales to pick up this week. "Students seem to wait until the last moment. I don't know why."

ONLY ABLE TO sell 50 tickets a day, Burke closed the Union box office to save on personnel costs. Now, she is selling tickets from the UPC office. "Wednesday we will again open up the box office for sales."

When Burke booked the concert, it was her understanding a new album by Jett would be released before the concert. However, the album isn't scheduled for release until May.

"I don't know why the record company will not release her album. Maybe they are waiting for the perfect time," Burke said.

"We're putting the finishing touches on it," Jett said in a phone interview, "it'll be a month at the most."

As for Lewis, Burke said, "he was booked for the people who really don't care for Jett. We made the double bill show to meet more of the market's need."

BOOKING CONCERTS FOR college groups is a tough job, according to Burke. "In my position certain groups do colleges, lots of bands don't. Then there is a time factor involved. Groups begin their tour in late spring and end early fall," Burke said.

The Jett/Lewis concert tour will take them to Fort Hays State University, University of Northern Colorado in Greely and University of Kansas.

By Monday, the number of concert tickets sold at Fort Hays State was 5,300 of the 6,800 available. The concert is scheduled for April 23 in Gross Memorial Coliseum. The sponsors, Memorial Union Activities Board, had

Bomb destroys U.S. Embassy in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A pickup truck packed with explosives blew up the seven-story facade of the U.S. Embassy's main section during the lunch hour Monday, and at least 39 people, including six Americans, were reported killed.

U.S. officials said two other Americans were missing, and a Lebanese police official said 22 Americans and 98 Lebanese were wounded. He said eight of the dead were Lebanese and 26 had not been identified. Later, however, one of the 26 was apparently identified as an American.

The dead Americans included two Foreign Service officers, two members of the Office of Military Cooperation and two employees of the Agency for International Development, Assistant Secretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger told reporters in Washington.

The Pentagon said the two military advisers killed were Staff Sgt. Ben H. Maxwell, 26, of Appomattox, Va., and

Weather dictates profitability of open-air markets

By CATHY KARLIN
Staff Writer

The open-air market business is at the mercy of Mother Nature.

One year, Barbra and Richard Britt, owners of Britt's Garden Acres, lost $40,000 in one night because of a strawberry freeze.

In the summer of 1980, the intense heat shriveled thousands of pounds of peaches and other fresh produce at Terry Nelson's Eastside and Westside Markets. To cool off in the open-air market, which obviously lacked an air conditioner, Nelson and her employees filled a cattle tank full of water and jumped in and out of it a couple times a day.

Furthermore, when Nelson drives to Kansas City once a week in a two-ton truck to buy produce for her markets, she has to arrive at the wholesale marketplace around 3 a.m. in order to inspect the produce at its freshest.

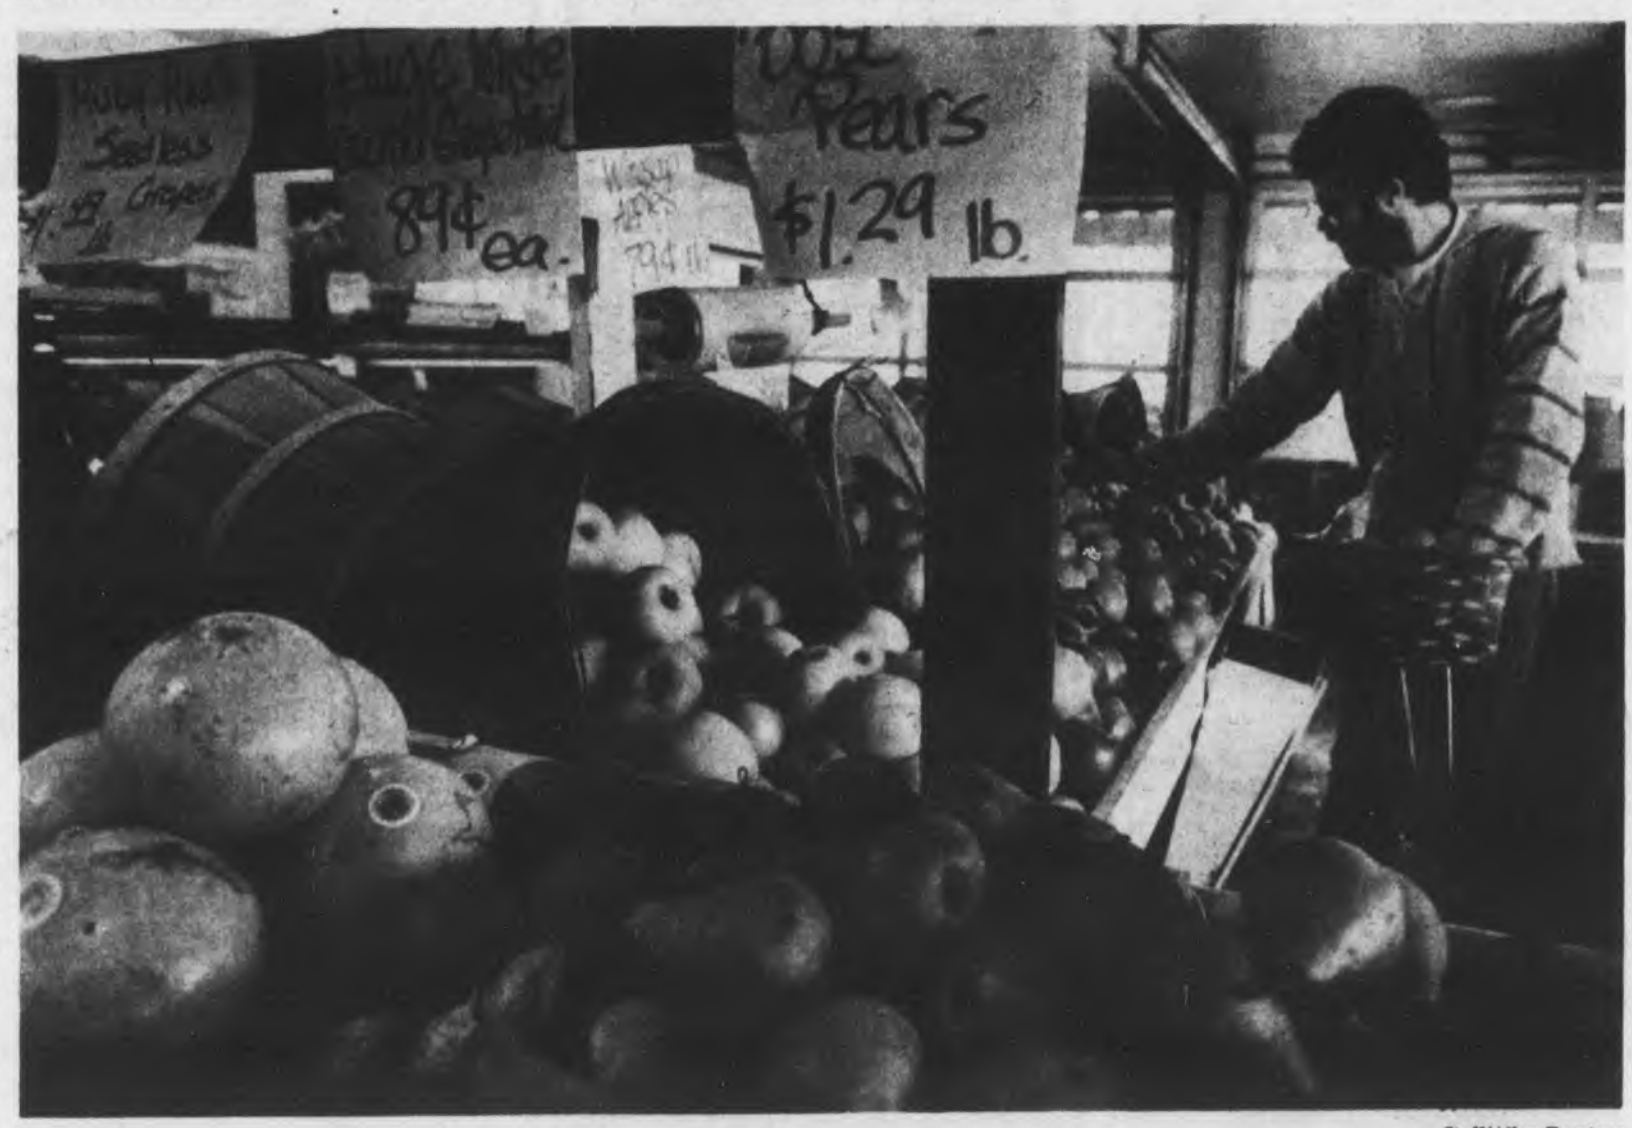
According to Mike McClellan, wholesale vegetable producer, weather dictates not only the planting, harvesting and yield of a crop, but it also plays a large part on the demand for fresh produce.

"IF IT'S cold weather, people don't necessarily want to buy a tomato or sweet corn," he said. "You kind of have to spread your crops. In California, they can regulate it (growing crops) like it's in a factory. They can hit within two days of when it'll be ready. Here you have to learn to take what Mother Nature gives."

Despite the hazards of unpredictable Kansas weather, the open-air produce markets have been a part of the Manhattan business community since the city's origin, according to Cheryl Collins, librarian and archivist of the Riley County Historical Museum. When Manhattan was platted in 1855 to 1856, a market square was designated in every ward.

Each 150-by-50 square feet was arranged to accommodate teams of horses and wagons so farmers could bring and sell produce to differet neighborhoods. Some of the nine sites of former market squares are where the Branding Iron Restaurant, Douglass Center, and parts of campus now stand.

EACH SQUARE consisted of part of an alley with 50 feet on either side. However, in most cases the land was used as if it belonged to the owner of the rest of lot space until 1970, when state legislation cleared the market squares plats from the maps.



Nowadays, fresh produce is sold during the summer at farmer's markets downtown and at Hunter's Island, a small area just south of Manhattan. Britt's Garden Acres and Westside Market are the only two open year-round, Nelson said.

According to Nelson, who has operated the Eastside Market since 1976 and Westside since 1979, the fresh produce business is doing quite well.

"We got into the business at a good time. People who were into the natural stuff in the '60s are the ones who are buying groceries now. People eat lighter than they used to," Nelson said. "They've gone from Twinkies to grapes. There's so much more demand for fresh produce due maybe to the interest in gardening; restaurants, too, have had a lot of influence with salad bars."

"DEMAND FOR fresh consumption is on the increase," McClellan said. "The de-

AT&T breakup will increase 1984 phone rates

By MARK HOBBS
Collegian Reporter

Telephone bills in the Manhattan area will increase by $10 to $15 in January 1984 because the Federal Communications Commission ordered divestiture of American Telephone & Telegraph, Marcie Welch, public relations manager for Southwestern Bell in the Manhattan, said.

This increase will be in addition to a 6 percent standard rate increase that went into effect in March due to the increased cost of business, Welch said.

Welch explained the divestiture was ordered to break up a "natural monopoly." The FCC mandated in 1934 that AT&T provide everyone with telephone service at affordable prices. Now, Welch said, federal policies are changing, and the divestiture is one result of that change.

The divestiture will leave AT&T with its long distance lines and research and information/sales divisions. Southwestern Bell will become an independent company providing local services, long distance service within the caller's area code and offer access to other long distance lines.

This will mean the end of the "one-plus" long distance dialing system, Welch said.

In its place, the consumer will have his choice of several long distance services, such as Sprint and MCI, as well as AT&T. Each company will have its own special access code, which will precede every long distance call made through that company, Welch said.

The loss of long distance revenues for Southwestern Bell is the reason local rates will increase, Welch said.

"With this, you're going to see long distance rates come down and local rates go up. Right now it costs us a per line rate of $24 per month for resident phone service, while the cost to the consumer has been approximately $10 per month. This difference was made up for in the charges for long distance, but we won't have that anymore. Now these rates will have to support themselves," Welch said.

Welch said there will be some alternative pricing plans for those consumers who do not use their phones very much for local calls. One alternative in experimental use now is "Optional Local Calling." With this billing method, Welch said, a consumer is charged a low flat-rate fee and then charged for each local call, in much the same way as the current method for long distance calls.

Businesses, including K-State, will also experience a dramatic increase in rates. For the University, the lower long distance rates should make up for the higher local rates, Welch said.

She explained that AT&T has been in an anti-trust suit with the U.S. Justice Department for the last 10 years. Welch said the divestiture was not wanted by Southwestern Bell, but now that it's here, the company will adapt.

"After all, no company can afford to live outside its times," she said.

Commission to hear final reading of Fairchild parking zone proposal

The second reading of an ordinance establishing a parking zone along Fairchild Avenue will be considered by the Manhattan City Commission tonight.

The zone, if approved, would be similar to parking zones established in residential areas east, north and west of K-State. Parking between the hours of 2 and 9 a.m. would be prohibited. Special permits issued by the city would have to be obtained by residents of the area in order to park in the zone.

Commissioners are also scheduled to consider the first reading of an ordinance amending the city code concerning the control of weeds.

"There are some individuals that wait for us to notify them before they cut their weeds," Jerry Petty, city engineer, said.

Weed height is not supposed to exceed 12 inches. The amendment to the code would require those notified to control their weeds for the entire growing season without further notification from the city.

"We're looking at some way to simplify the notificiation process," Petty said.

The commission will also discuss the authorization of an engineering study to determine the feasibility of renovating Douglass Park Swimming Pool. The pool, built in the early 1930s, only averaged 20 swimmers per day last year, compared to 521 per day at the city pool.

"Last year, personnel (costs) ran between $4,000 and $5,000. That pool is not a revenue producer," Tim Vanatta, director of parks and recreation, said.

No admission fee is charged at the pool. Don Harmon, city manager, said the engineering study will help the city decide whether renovation is feasible.

"We don't have any idea what it'll cost to bring the pool up to today's standards," Harmon said.

Also on the agenda is discussion of the procedure for hiring an engineering firm to complete the final design for the proposed southern arterial.

The arterial would link Fort Riley Boulevard with U.S. Highway 24 and Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

"We are trying to produce biddable documents, something a contractor can bid on," Petty said.

Demonstrators arrested in Honeywell protest

MINNEAPOLIS — More than 100 demonstrators were arrested after they blocked the doors at Honeywell Inc.'s headquarters to protest the company's manufacture of weapons parts, authorities said.

Members of a group called the Honeywell Project blocked 13 doors and a company official said about 2,000 employees were delayed an hour in getting to work.

More than 200 other protesters watched, sang songs and held signs, but weren't arrested because they didn't block the doors.

Minneapolis Police Chief Tony Bouza said more than 100 people, including his wife Erica, were arrested for trespassing. Another police officer estimated the number of arrests at 140.

Those arrested shortly after 6 a.m. were cited for a misdemeanor, which carries a maximum fine of $500 or three months in jail.

Honeywell is ranked 16th in weapons contracts by the Defense Department. Company spokeswoman Karen Bachman said Honeywell's total revenue last year was about $5.5 billion — $700 million of which came from government defense contracts.

Reagan honors six Peace Corps volunteers

WASHINGTON — President Reagan saluted outstanding Peace Corps volunteers Monday for using their talents to help others and not "shouting in city parks or trying to second-guess our defense planners."

A Kansan, Monica Wernette, 31, of Clay Center, was among volunteers honored. She is an epidemiologist in Zaire.

In an apparent reference to the growing number of demonstrators against Reagan's defense buildup and for a nuclear weapons freeze, the president said, "These six builders of peace, men and women of all ages, are not shouting in city parks or trying to second-guess our defense planners; they're using their God-given talents and skills to help others."

He did not elaborate during the ceremony in the White House Rose Garden honoring volunteers ranging in age from 25 to 72. But presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said later Reagan was referring to peace demonstrations in Europe.

Police detain Walesa on road to Warsaw

WARSAW, Poland — Police detained and interrogated Lech Walesa, his family priest and two other companions for hours Monday after stopping their car on the road to Warsaw, Walesa's wife and the clergyman reported.

Danuta Walesa told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from Gdansk that her husband was brought home at about 8 p.m. (1 p.m. EST). Police detained the party at about 11 a.m., according to the Rev. Henryk Jankowski, Walesa's adviser and confessor.

It was the second time Walesa was held by authorities and questioned in the six days since he announced he was meeting with underground Solidarity leaders to coordinate policies.

Walesa stopped short of publicly endorsing the underground's call for protests, which sparked the arrest of at least 26 Solidarity activists on Saturday.

Walesa had said he was questioned last week about his meetings with the underground, but Mrs. Walesa decline to discuss Monday's interrogation.

Sen. Hollings enters presidential 'sweepstakes'

WASHINGTON — Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina formally entered the Democratic presidential sweepstakes on Monday, but said his party cannot hope to regain the White House until it convinces voters it can truly manage the economy rather than merely offering to "send more money."

In an appearance at the National Press Club, Hollings also said he would consider choosing a black or a woman as his running mate. "We have outstanding black leaders of experience, national renown, women also," he declared.

Hollings declared his candidacy at Midlands Technical College in Columbia, S.C., then flew to Washington to speak at the press club.

On the flight to Washington, Hollings conceded that if he doesn't finish close behind former Vice President Walter F. Mondale in the New Hampshire primary "I'm going to be in trouble." He said he was confident he would win the presidential primaries in Alabama and Georgia.

Tenant charged with murder in fire death

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A tenant has been charged with first-degree murder in a fire a week ago that killed one person, injured 11 others and destroyed the apartment building where she lived.

Alice Jackson, 42, was taken into custody Saturday and appeared Sunday in Jackson County Circuit Court. Lou Accurso, the assistant prosecutor, said the charge resulted from evidence and statements. Jackson gave police. Investigators said the fire was set in at least three places.

The case could go before a grand jury within two weeks to determine whether other charges would be filed.

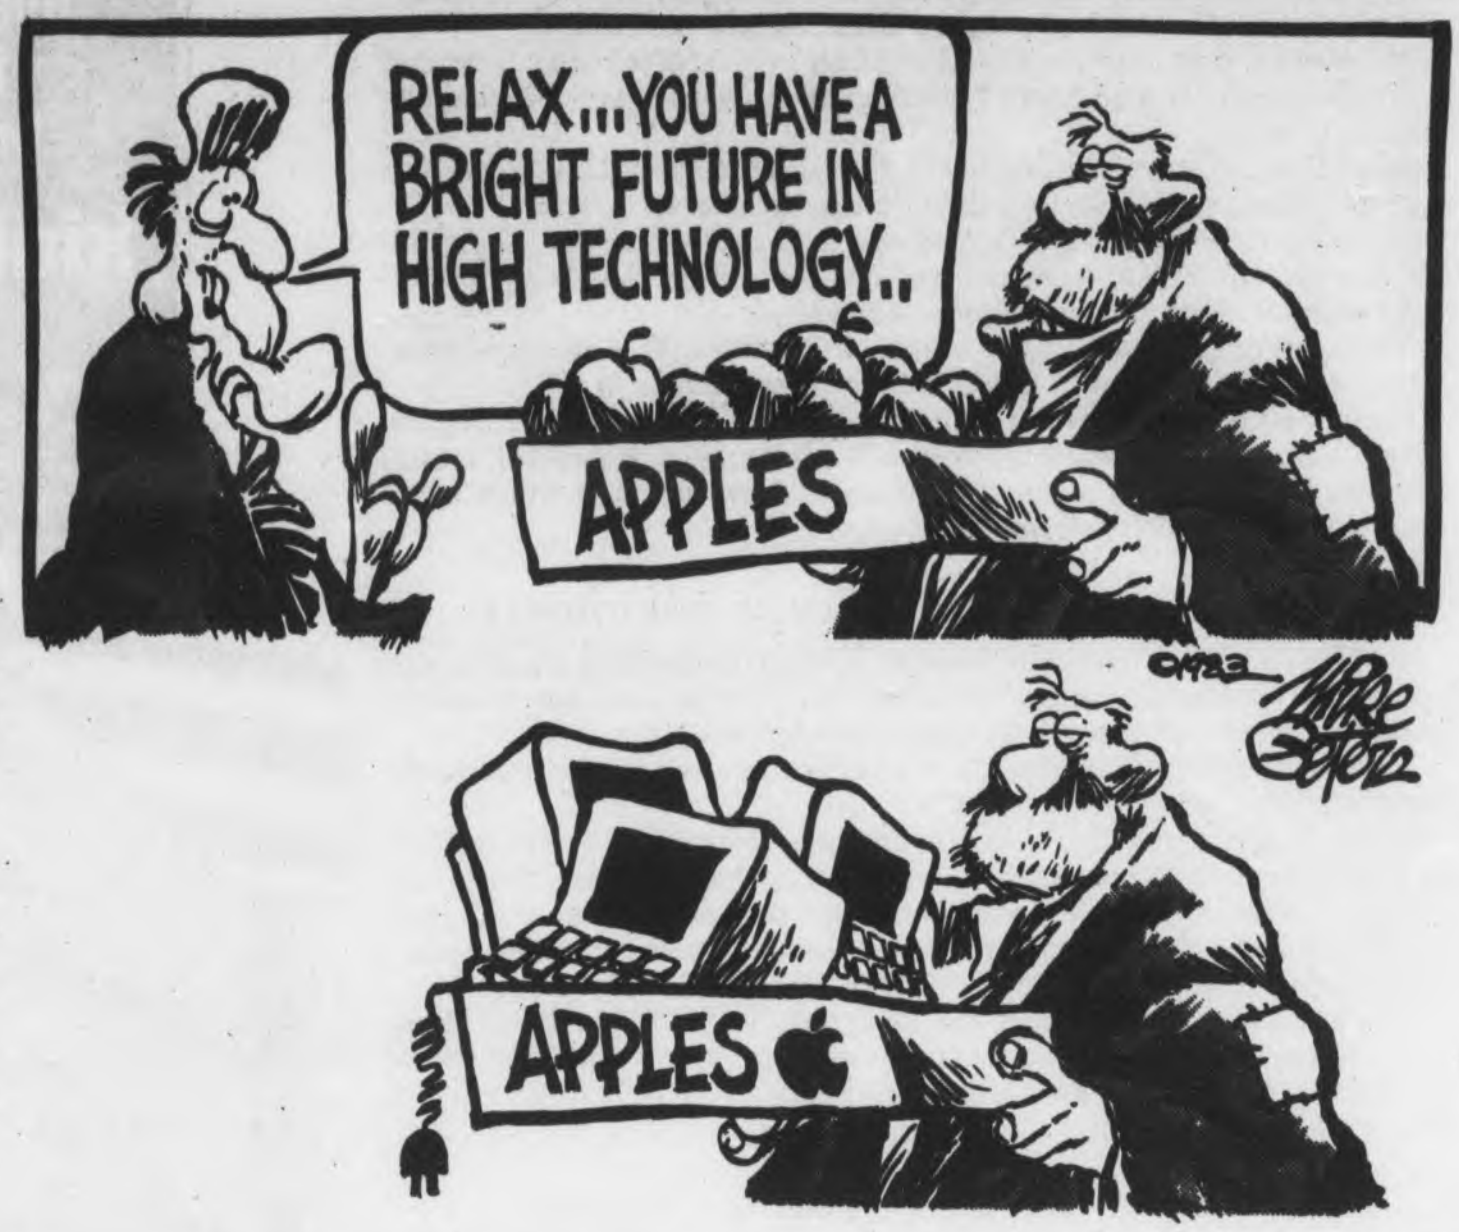
Error in tax bill must be corrected



The saga of the severance tax has taken another twist.

Last week, Kansas Attorney General Bob Stephan issued an opinion in regard to the severance tax passed by the Legislature. He told Gov. John Carlin it would be better to have legislators pass a new bill than to try to enact this bill. Stephan said parts of the tax could be declared unconstitutional if the bill was enacted as written.

Carlin should be congratulated for having the attorney general examine the bill for any possible legal problems before he either signed it or vetoed it. This trouble-shooting probably saved the state from time-consuming and costly court appearances.

The Legislature should take immediate steps to remedy this problem. The voters want a severance tax to help provide funding for education and other programs. Failure to pass a corrected severance tax bill could mean political problems for many legislators. It is now up to the Legislature to correct its error.

Support of draft bill deserves referendum...

Editor,

I'm writing this letter to express my concern that the Student Senate of K-State has passed the Solomon resolution. I believe that the decision should be left to a student referendum to decide whether our school will support a bill which is manipulative in nature and discriminative in practice.

Editor,

The Student Senate support of the Solomon Amendment is an embarrassment for many K-State students, including myself. I will urge Student Body President Jerry Katlin to veto the resolution and also let my student representatives know how I feel. I urge other students to do the same.

Going my own way

I remember a time, not so long ago, I sat on a worn rock near Tuttle, fossiliferous limestone water-washed from earlier days. Sunset glistened on waves, changing colored rays from a gilded heaven's gate to a gloomy purple path of destruction.

I was homesick, sad and lonely. I stared unseeing at the mesmerizing water thinking thoughts of mom, dad and brother Ted. Memories of a sister and me, half-tipsy, clad in purple power at a KU-K-State game forced a smile. Warm secure memories of a home well known.

I also remember a time, more recent, I sat in a newsroom, rushing people clamoring to be heard over the rat-tat-tat of an AP machine spewing out stories of current capers. Fluorescent lighting washed faces white, but failed to dim a journalistic spark in avid eyes.

I WAS AMBITIOUS, EAGER and egotistical. Ready to "break" news, I mused over bold bylines and stories yet unseen. Still further in clutches of ambition unfettered were inklings of books that touch cores of all others. Shaky ground shot up with doses unchallenged.

The day time allows and freedom permits my dreams to quit dazing and start going crazy with concrete plans of dams a-crashing, is here. I'm no longer tied down — save for four weeks to gain graduation.

Big plans are in the air, a trip to Australia and who knows from there? Granted, six months are needed to make some bucks, but images of Outback and coral reefs will keep me chained to the bank.

Yet something keeps nagging at this new-found freedom. It's like knowing you know something, but forgetting what it is.

I talk of Australia and New Zealand with koalas and kiwis, and then this thing interrupts my thoughts and silences my dreams. I think of newspaper jobs in faraway places, being filled with ideas to become future fiction, and then, it hits again.

WHAT HITS IS AN IMAGE of a face well-creased with former worries of a daughter in need of caring, and what mom might say, in need of controlling. Someone who has been there when you had your first bike wreck, your first F and your first A and when your first love dropped dead. She was also there when your last love dropped you dead.

And Dad's reassuring voice ceases thoughts of New England, recalling times when secrets of wrongdoing were kept from maternal knowledge. He's the guy who stayed up long hours to build doll houses and kissed scraped knees from fallen tree swings.

Home is where the heart is, I've been taught to believe. More than that, it's ingrained in my very insides. Most everyone sees his family as the best, just like every kid thinks his mom's the prettiest.

We've all had a home, a mom and dad, obviously, and there will always be that tie, even if it's tarnished and tainted. For those of us whose tie is still strong, the call of home is more evident. And, frustrating, it's a tie that binds.

I'm stuck in a contradiction of ambition and family. I'm lost in a mess I can't resolve.

FREEDOM HAS A PRICE when you leave those you love behind. It's a sacrifice I'm not sure I want to give, but I don't want to live at home the rest of my life.

I'm ready to go, to do things my way. And if I want three dogs in the backyard or leave unexpectedly to tramp around countries and cities foreign and strange, I can, without bothering anyone.

I'm eager for independence and know it will win out in the end, but it'll be an independence with concessions of the heart. I'll never lose contact and never not come home when called.

It is your family, bad or good, that makes you what you are, lending ideas and trains of thought, forming patterns of stance and style, and giving you a background to become the person you are. The way you deal with circumstances reflect past events in your life and for most of us, it's family and friends who were catalysts for an individual mind.

NOW WE HAVE IT, a mind of our own. It's ours to use, to grow and even abuse. But it is so much more special when acknowledged and urged on by those we love.

When I told my mom I was going to Australia, she said, "Go," and jokingly added, "That's too far away for me to worry about you anymore."

But I know in my heart cause I saw in her eyes, she will keep on worrying, she won't break that tie. And somehow I know, though it's hard to comprehend, it's that kind of love which allows me to leave.

Explaining 'Solomon'

As author of the Solomon Amendment resolution passed by Student Senate Thursday night, it behooves me to quickly explain my motives for bringing this resolution to the senate.

In February of this year, the Associated Students of Kansas Legislative Assembly voted to oppose rules set forth by the Department of Education for enforcing the Solomon Amendment, the law requiring financial assistance applicants to be in compliance with the Selective Service in order to receive aid.

The Assembly's position was based largely on the discriminatory action of requiring young men to "prove their innocence" by supplying a copy of their Selective Service confirmation. However, the resolution did not address the philosophical questions embodied in "Solomon." The assembly did ask its campus directors obtain a position on the Solomon Amendment from their respective student senates. Hence, my resolution was introduced.

Much of the criticism levied against the Solomon Amendment speaks to a common perception — it is a discriminatory law: it discriminates against young men and the poor. I will be the first to agree it is discriminatory, but it discriminates not against the aforementioned groups; rather, it discriminates against those who are unwilling to comply with federal law.

The Solomon Amendment simply states all financial aid applicants comply with the Selective Service. Cries of discrimination would therefore best be directed toward federal lawmakers who designed the Selective Service Act.

I have no problem in supporting a measure which requires those seeking federal dollars comply with federal law. Corporations which fail to comply with anti-pollution regulations are denied federal monies. Businesses which fail to abide by federal affirmative action guidelines are denied federal grants. Federal financial assistance to students should be no less restricted.

Another frequently cited argument against the Solomon Amendment resolution rests on the notion senate should not take a position on an issue which is pending before federal courts. I would suggest this is a weak argument for two reasons. First, questions of constitutionality are decided by the judicial branch of the federal government — not by student senates. Senate is well within the realm of propriety by stating its position in support of a federal law.

Second, had my resolution been worded such that senate was asked to oppose the Solomon Amendment, the "hands off" argument would not have been raised by the "anti-Solomon" factions. The discussion surrounding similar resolutions at the other regents universities bear this out. I therefore believe such arguments are merely contrived and should be given little weight.

In my opinion, the significance of senate's action has been greatly aggrandized. Senate's position was communicated to the ASK Legislative Assembly April 16, which adopted a position in opposition to the Solomon Amendment. So for practical purposes, further student government action is moot.

With no intention of belittling "Solomon" opponents, I would recommend our attention would now be more effectively directed toward issues such as student salaries and the proposed state work-study program now pending before the Kansas Legislature.

(Editor's note: John Kohler is ASK campus director and a senior in economics and pre-law.)

Senate vote on resolution 'correct'

Editor,

Student Senate did the correct thing in voting in favor of the Solomon Amendment. The split decision, however, does reflect a split in opinion on this matter all over campus.

Allow me to clear up this matter a little from the proponents' side. The Solomon Amendment simply asks those males who apply for financial aid spend three minutes of their time to fill out a draft registration form at his local post office — no more. The only people this discriminates against are those who do not register for the draft; obviously, not all males and all poor people.

We are not going to war like we were in Vietnam 15 years ago when Nichols Gymnasium was burned in possible protest. The Selective Service simply needs a pool of names to choose from if by chance we do go to war. There are other options, such as applying for conscientious objector status, which the draft registrant can choose if the draft is ever enacted. What do you have to lose, gentlemen?

The Solomon Amendment simply makes sense, and it helps your government as well. Think about it.

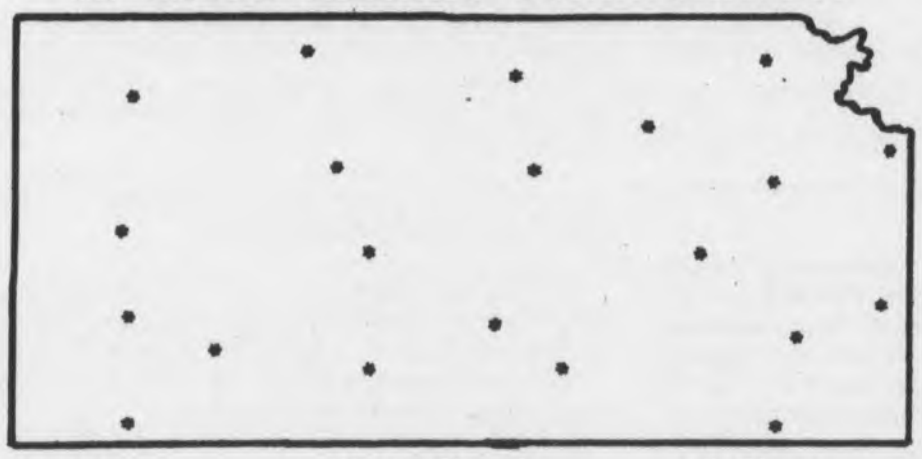
'Pay for it' policy needed for all

Editor,

In regard to the recent proposal by the University and the Board of Regents increasing tuition by 20 percent next fall, I would like to put forth an additional proposal.



The idea behind this greater financial burden is to have the student pay 25 percent of the cost of his education. Since the University is faced with the problem of budget cuts from the state and federal governments, I find this a satisfactory request, and one necessary to overcome this particular problem.

My proposal, which is directed at the federal level to increase revenue, is to have the ranking officers in the military pay 25 percent of the cost of production of nuclear warheads. Just as the logic for students goes, "If you want the privilege of receiving a higher education you must pay for it," so too could the nuke-packing military brass "pay for it" if they want to play war games with their "little toys." I don't want the privilege of any more warheads than we already have, so, "logically" I shouldn't have to pay, right?

Joan Jett: Blackhearts' goal focuses on rock'n'roll reputation; black leather, 'guitar band' remain as basics for Jett

By TANYA BRANSON
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Black leather and hard-assed rock. It's an image Joan Jett made for herself, the "mean, tough, knife-carrying, hard edge image," Jett described, adding, "it doesn't bother me."

The 23-year-old Jett, eight years on the run, is trying to gain a reputation as a rock'n'roller, female or not, and desperately hoping for recognition, something gained from her music, not her novelty...and black leather.

Here is a girl-woman who dreamed of being a rock'n'roll star at 14, started an all-girl band at 15 and doesn't have time to buy her own makeup at 23.

BUT IT'S A life she loves, one she has chosen and one she hopes to continue for awhile, "as long as I'm not some big fat pig when I'm 40." Dreams of playing rock at 55 like Chuck Berry, or having sellout crowds like the 21-year-old group, The Rolling Stones, or grand finales like The Who, are set in Jett's mind, making her more determined, more anxious to do what she loves — rock'n'roll.

"If they can do it, why can't I do it?" Jett asked in a phone interview.

So far, she has given it a good try. Although just off a platinum album, "I Love Rock'n'Roll," recent success hasn't dimmed the memory of earlier hardships. Forming her own band at 15, The Runaways, was the result of Jett's compulsion to be a rock'n'roll star.

IT WAS AN all-girl rock'n'roll band, unheard of, but it recorded five albums, with one, "Live In Japan," becoming a best-selling import in Britain and the United States. An uphill climb against the current and a lot of crap for being a girl is how Jett would describe it. But enough of The Runaways' hardships, sob stories are only interesting to those who cry over them.

When Jett started the Blackhearts, same story — long nights, hard days, rejection. A woman can't play rock'n'roll, and if she does, it's an exception.

"Pat Benatar is a heavy duty success. But when we were trying to get a record company they gave excuses that 'we're already playing a girl,'" (meaning Benatar) Jett said. "That's bullshit, I'm not going to go away."

SHE DIDN'T. Determination keeps her going.

"I decided to be in a rock band since I was 15, and I wouldn't stop now. I got a lot of rejection in Runaways. It's hard work, 20-hour days that drain you mentally and physically," Jett said.

You think it's limos, champagne, caviar," Jett explained, "I've seen limos, I've seen champagne, but I ain't seen caviar."

Being a woman isn't a factor in attaining success, maybe a hindrance, but definitely not a roadblock for Jett.

"I've taken a hell of a lot of crap for being a girl playing rock'n'roll, but you have to be sensitive and believe in yourself.

"They said girls can't play rock'n'roll, I said 'you watch, you watch,'" she said.

AND WHEN RECORD companies didn't give Jett and her Blackhearts the kind of deal she wanted, they watched her start her own label, Blackheart Records. Then they watched her first album, "Bad Reputation," gain a good reputation as a major rock'n'roll album. They're still watching this rock'n'roll phenomenon sell records and play her way through tours.

Jett doesn't make concessions in her music either. It's either rock'n'roll, or it's not at all.

"Rock'n'roll is a form of music that borders on aggressions and anger and, yes, good feelings. There's a certain amount of risk for real rock'n'roll, it has a bit of a threat, a little bit of a menace, but kids love it like I love it," Jett said.

JETT SAID SHE views rock as a way for people to blow off aggressions and she criticizes people who overanalyze rock and get hung up on the technical sense. She claimed "it's a feeling, you just do it, it comes out of you."

People who ask, "Why don't you sing on key? or Why don't you quit swearing?" are hard for her to understand. She doesn't know the answers, she doesn't care either, she just likes it "a hell of a lot."

With experience, she's getting better at what she likes. "Bad Reputation" may have broken the ice, but it wasn't until her last album, "I Love Rock'n'Roll," that she was accepted and respected as a viable artist. The album gave her credibility as a singer and songwriter, also.

Joan Jett

A new album is coming out within the month which, according to Jett, keeps the same sound of the Blackhearts, only more experienced. She said the album expands the band's ability, evidence of sessions learning to play more difficult parts on rhythms guitar while "bored in a hotel room." But aside from a more mature band, the album doesn't vary from Jett and her Blackhearts' hard-rocking style.

"I'M VERY INSISTENT on us sounding like a guitar band. We're not in anyway more mellow," she emphasized.

The "guitar band" is definitely a band, not some kind of blase backups for Jett to whip around with her leather belt. The Blackhearts, Jett on guitar, Gary Ryan on bass, Lee Crystal on drums and Ricky Byrd on guitar, only tagged Jett's name on front in the hopes of someone recognizing her from The Runaways. She would like to think if someone just said The Blackhearts, it would mean her and the Blackhearts, similar to The Stones naturally include Mick Jagger and The Who isn't just Roger Daltrey. But when asked if she would drop the Joan Jett in exchange for just The Blackhearts, she hesitantly replied, "I don't know."

It will be the band, sans tour substitutes, starting a 16-month tour, first in North America, then the world, in Manhattan Friday. Jett's reaction — "It's big."

TOURS PUT THE "human" element into rock for her. It's a language crossing all barriers, something like a world community where "all rock'n'rollers fit together." It just happens that she's on stage, and

Huey Lewis: Hit song may be deal with devil, admits Lewis, but results in artistic freedom for The News

By TANYA BRANSON
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Sometimes no news is good news, but in Huey Lewis' case, that situation would be rather bad news. Since Lewis grabbed his pals, The News, (who also happen to be talented musicians) and started a jam band in hometown San Francisco, things just keep getting better. And he's having fun with it, too.

After all, who would name a band The News? Huey Lewis would.

Lewis comes across a bit facetious, jokingly serious, however earnest, yet responsive enough to be open and truthful, especially about his forte — rock'n'roll.

He considers rock'n'roll his life's aim, a profession that's fun, despite occasional burnout, "I mean some people work for a living," he commented, and one can almost hear a smile across the phone line.

THE NEWS' LIFE as a band started with six buddies jamming on Monday night in Uncle Charlie's, a Marin County bar near San Francisco. Lewis said auditions were the last thing that brought them together.

"We said 'who are we going to get to play guitar? Chris, yeah, Chris is good' (speaking of guitarist Chris Hayes, a jazzer turned rock'n'roller). Then we said 'what about a bass? Let's get our pal Mario,'" Lewis explained.

Besides Lewis as vocalist/harmonica player, the other Newsers include Mario Cipollina on bass, and Hayes, Johnny Colla on the sax, Billy Gibson on drums and Sean Hopper as keyboardist, who, incidentally, recorded with Elvis Costello on "My Aim is True."

From the group's sellout jam sessions came an offer for free studio time. Huey Lewis and the News cut a disco version of "Exodus" called "Exo-disco" (must be more Lewis humor) and a label in England bought the single. This little "joke" led to a demo tape with three songs, six grand and a manager, Bob Brown, who also manages Pablo Cruise. Brown landed them a record contract with Chrysalis Records.

'I don't really know where I aim to go. I want to write a song and play it around the world. You center life around some stupid little song, but you sing it in San Francisco, Paris, Japan and get the same reaction. It unites people.'

THEN A DEBUT album which sounds somewhat new-wavish or as the respectable term goes, like modern music, "Huey Lewis and the News," happened along. Following it was another disc, "Picture This." "Picture This" remedies the News' "do or die" situation, providing a hit, "Do You Believe In Love?" which in turn provided a start.

Though a professed rock'n'roller, Lewis admitted he "aimed a few tracks at pop," especially with his hit that reached No. 7 on the charts. He shopped around for "Do You Believe In Love?" looking at three other potential hits first, discarding them because they were too "wimpy."

"Do You Believe In Love?" may be a pop song, but it's not a total sacrifice. "I changed the words around to make it live for me. I have to believe what I'm singing," Lewis justifed. "To feel the words and mean them, it has to be readable. I don't spend five seconds thinking about it, I like it or I don't, if it reads right and isn't superficial crap."

THOUGH HE SAID sometimes "you have to make your little deal with the devil," the end result is justified in more artistic freedom. And that is what Lewis said he used in "Sports," his new album coming out, adding "I hope soon." But who's to say?

Lewis is tied up in legal tangles with Chrysalis Records, trying to get out of an unsatisfying contract and into another one more to his liking. Already, he has punted Hollywood producers, accusing them of being too commercial, in fact, "just yukky." Lewis produced The News' new album himself.

"I don't want to lose the personality of the band. It was a choice between bubble gum and credibility," Lewis said with a hint of Hollywood bitterness.

IN THE MEANTIME though, life is an almost constant tour which "keeps the name alive." Lewis said he's more of a live person anyway cause every audience is different."

Every audience is different, but reactions are alike, and they're what defines Lewis' ambitions.

"I don't really know where I aim to go. I want to write a song and play it around the world. You center life around

Tax decisions to be made before adjournment

Legislature to reconvene after 10-day recess

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Legislature begins its final push toward adjournment of the 1983 session at 10 a.m. Wednesday, facing some of the hardest decisions on taxes in many years.

In advance of the session's reconvening following a 10-day recess, a handful of committees resumed work Monday and Tuesday on a variety of issues — some routine and some highly controversial.

Despite the interest in a supplemental tax package expected to be passed in addition to the severance tax bill, Gov. John Carlin and the legislative leadership apparently won't get together ahead of time to discuss possible tax compromises.

With Senate President Ross Doyen and House Speaker Mike Hayden out of town Monday and Tuesday on the Republicans' informational tour to explain what they are trying to accomplish as the session nears its climax, there seemed to be no time for negotiations with the governor ahead of Wednesday's resumption.

NONE OF THE TAX MEASURES proposed by Carlin were the prime subjects of committee meetings ahead of Wednesday's startup.

The House Ways and Means Committee returned to Topeka Monday afternoon to begin work on the omnibus appropriations bill, the funding measure historically put together at the end of each session to provide money for new programs enacted, and a catch-all for forgotten items.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee was to resume its work at 9 a.m. Tuesday, also working on the omnibus bill.

Also scheduled to meet Tuesday were the House Federal and State Affairs Commitee, the House Assessment and Taxation Committee and a judiciary conference committee.

The Federal and State Affairs Committee came back a day early to work on a controversial bill changing the method of collecting the per-drink tax on mixed drinks sold in Kansas' private clubs and keeping more of the revenue that tax produces in the state treasury.

UNDER STATE LAW, there is a 10-cent tax on drinks sold in private clubs. However, it is collected by the clubs and state officials estimate over $4 million of the annual revenue never gets turned in. The funds which are collected are divided for distribution, with of one-fourth going to the state general fund and the other three-quarters to local units of government.

Under the bill, the responsibility for collecting the drink tax would be shifted to the state's 15 liquor wholesalers who would include it in the price of the booze they sell to the clubs — so the clubs couldn't cheat on turning it in. Also, under the measure the state would keep one-third of the revenue rather than just a quarter.

The House Assessment and Taxation Committee meets at 2 p.m. Tuesday for a hearing on a bill proffered by Rep. Kerry Patrick, R-Overland Park, which would create a pipeline tax in Kansas. Patrick's proposal would set per-unit tax rates on such things as oil, natural gas, coal and water for pipeline shipment across Kansas.

The judiciary conference committee, headed by Sen. Elwaine Pomeroy, R-Topeka, will be discussing a Senate bill which amends the state's juvenile code.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT CONFERENCE committee could meet late Tuesday or early Wednesday. It is one headed by Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, which has a bill to freeze for one year the price that could be charged for natural gas produced and consumed within the state.

Neither Carlin nor the legislative leadership appeared eager Monday to get down to armwrestling over a supplemental tax package to go with the severance tax passed April 9, when the lawmakers took first adjournment.

That bill is scheduled to be re-passed this week because of a potential constitutional flaw, and that's the only thing the Democratic governor and the Republican leadership have agreed on for certain.

"We don't know that it makes that much difference when they meet," Mike Swenson, Carlin's press secretary, said of the possibility the governor might sit down with the leaders to try to agree on a tax package.

"WE DON'T THINK there should be all that much concern over when they meet," added Swenson. "They're going to be here at least four days and we presume there will be time enough for them to meet then.

"The governor certainly knows where they stand, and they should be aware of where he stands. He remains flexible, but he has made it abundantly clear that he opposes a motor fuel tax increase unless it is one component of an over-all package. That won't change."

Doyen, Hayden and other leaders were in Ottawa, Emporia, Chanute and Independence Monday, taking their message to the people that Republicans are committed to raising taxes no more than absolutely necessary.

They also were saying they believe a three or four-cent increase in the gasoline and diesel fuel taxes should be the cornerstone of a highway funding plan — if one is to be worked out before the Legislature adjourns as planned Saturday night.

Jett

everyone else is in the audience.

Jett reiterated this point, recalling the Blackhearts' last tour which included East Germany, where even though Jett's albums are scarce and seldom seen, kids in the audience knew words to her songs.

"How do they get that?" Jett asked with puzzlement still evident. Her only explanation, "Rock'n'roll is so universal it even goes underground."

It's lasting too; two of the Blackhearts' biggest hits, "I Love Rock'n'Roll" and "Crimson and Clover" were hits when she was a child. Long after the artist is gone, rock'n'roll will stay around.

"This morning I was listening to David Bowie's Stardust album about a life as a rock'n'roll star and I thought 'Damn, man, I listened to that song when I was 14,'" Jett said. "And I don't see any change in my person. I'm probably smarter, know more about business, maybe more patient, but once you're crazy, you're crazy, once you're gone, you're gone."

And that crazy Blackheart is long gone on rock'n'roll.

Lewis

some stupid little song, but you sing it in San Francisco, Paris, Japan and get the same reaction. It unites people," Lewis said.

Another ambition, perhaps unconscious but still evident, is to help keep rock as it should be. Although Lewis has directed some of his songs at radio and is as guilty as the next guy of trying to make a buck, he is earnest about the way rock'n'roll should be — "something raw, spontaneous, threatening."

"RADIO IS IN real rough shape. Rock'n'roll is the marriage of music and poetry. The radio plays songs with the right chords, but no message," Lewis said, adding that "the salvation of rock'n'roll is the press."

It keeps rock'n'roll alive by writing about and reviewing musicians and along the way mentioning, for example, Eddie Cochran. Listeners will then look up Cochran and say "Oh, that's where rock'n'roll began."

Lewis' battle with Hollywood, at the least a bitter grudge, makes one wonder why, without demeaning the sincerity of his concern for rock'n'roll. Besides a bad record deal, perhaps there's a bit of bitterness in not being the next "John Cougar?"

LEWIS SAID HOLLYWOOD is out of touch. He blamed it for screwing with rock'n'roll to the point of possibly losing the art.

"They have force fed the American public and have underestimated it's intelligence. They are injuring rock'n'roll," Lewis said vehemently.

He cited a case of four people who program over 100 radio stations — people who are lobbied by big executives and decide "what's going to be popular this year."

A band has to be a big name before Hollywood will embrace it and if the band won't sell at least 500,000 copies, it won't have a chance, according to Lewis.

"A band that's such a long shot, they won't take a chance on it. So if the lead singer is a great musician, but bald, they won't have him," Lewis said, adding that one has to be "homogenous" to be No. 1, the record sounds the same wherever the needle drops.

Lewis' solution? "Our action is to infiltrate and double cross," he said referring to "Do You Believe In Love?"

But as far as being No. 1, while it would be nice, Lewis sounded sincere when he said, "I don't really care."

He said he wants to be a success, but "just so I can do what I want." And what's that? Well for the time being, perhaps just playing music, hanging out with his pals and having fun being Huey Lewis and the News, a band that's obviously on its way. Good news, isn't it, Huey?

Grain buyers get the scoop on U.S. marketing

Grain buyers and mill managers from 16 countries are on campus this week to learn how to buy U.S. grain.

They are participants in the U.S. grain marketing system short course offered April 11-22.

The International Grains Program short course is held on campus two or three times a year. The course is held at K-State because it is the only institution in the world which offers milling science, feed manufacturing science and bakery science degrees, according to Harvey Kiser, associate professor of agricultural economics and course coordinator.

"The International Grains Program was established to explain the milling of wheat, manufacturing of feed and structure of our marketing system through short courses," Kiser said.

The 37 participants are sponsored by the U.S. Wheat Associates, the U.S. Feed Grains Council and Kansas grain commissions.

"These are the organizations that promote the export and use of our grains," he said.

The trainees were selected by three worldwide U.S. Wheat Associates regional offices.

"These people are foreign grain buyers," he said, "individuals high in companies or government agencies."

Staff/Andy Schrock

Bob Rodriquez... director of cakes and sweet goods at the American Institute of Baking, shows a group of Spanish-speaking grain buyers a part of the institute's production area. The group toured the institute Monday as part of a K-State grain marketing short course.

BECAUSE MANY of the trainees speak Spanish, two interpreters are used to simultaneously interpret what is said at the sessions. A mobile unit, with earphones for trainees to hear the interpreters, is used during tours.

Participants use the information taught in the course to make marketing purchase decisions.

"They have the opportunity to ask questions of our resource persons to learn about our marketing system and to clarify confusion and misunderstanding of how to buy our (U.S.) grain," Kiser said.

Most countries do not have futures markets, which is a method of buying in advance to manage risk from price fluctuations, he said. Because buyers are not familiar with the futures market, confusion results.

"WE FEEL it is important to show these individuals how to use the U.S. marketing system to purchase the exact type of grain they want," Kiser said. "Unlike many countries that have only one or two grain grades available for export, the U.S. sells five market classes of wheat, each with five grades, and five grades of corn."

Confusion also results from the large number of grain exporting companies, which sell grain for varying prices. "Many other grain exporting companies have only one grain seller, such as a government agency, and one price per grain grade," he said.

The marketing system in the United States can be complex and confusing, preventing buyers from purchasing grain, he said.

"THE DIVERSITY of price, classes and grades can be a definite advantage to buyers," Kiser said, "if they understand how the system works. Otherwise, we've found that it seems terrifically complex and complicated."

Once the buyers understand how to use the American marketing system, they tend to buy more U.S. grain, he said.

During the short course, participants learn about grain quality and preservation, farm programs, grain futures markets, ocean transportation, grain grading, nutritive value of grain, financing imports and the organization of the U.S. grain marketing system.

Included in the grain grading system is a half-day of analyzing and looking for the type of quality professionals demand, he said.

"They're actually getting hands-on experience on grading of corn and wheat.

"We also discuss farm milling and give participants tours through the grain science milling and baking facilities," Kiser added.

In addition to faculty, industry and government officials teach sessions.

The trainees will visit a farm operation in Wamego, a country grain elevator in St. Marys, the Kansas City Board of Trade and a Far-Mar-Co grain terminal in Kansas City, Kan.

"We'll be seeing what we've been talking about," Kiser said.

Participants are "actually in class longer for those seven days on campus than a college student who goes to a three-hour class for the whole semester," he said.

International agriculture students hit the books to aid their nations

By SUSAN DENZON
Collegian Reporter

Sixty-five students from developing countries are pursuing undergraduate or graduate degrees in the College of Agriculture. They are not only gaining knowledge and skills for themselves, but for their respective countries as well.

The students, who are government scholars, plan to return to their homelands after finishing their degrees to help raise the quality of agricultural education and the standard of people's lives in their countries.

The scholarships are sponsored by their state or national government with the assistance and cooperation of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) and the Mid-America International Agricultural Consortium (MIAC). Nigerian students are fully sponsored by their country.

MIAC consists of five land-grant institutions: Iowa State University, University of Nebraska, University of Missouri, Oklahoma State University and K-State. K-State is MIAC's leading administrative institution for the Botswana Agricultural and Technological Improvement Project, according to Jim Jorns, assistant director of the International Agricultural Programs.

ACCORDING TO Dean of Agriculture John Dunbar, the University's goal in helping these countries is to increase its food production, thus improving the quality of life of the people.

"Sharing our knowledge and expertise in developing the people and agricultural institutions of these countries is more than humanitarian. It's just like partaking our blessings to those in need," he said. "Besides, it's a two-way process. The faculty develop a broader understanding of these countries — the people, culture, government, agricultural conditions, socio-economic status. This not only move them to act and serve, but also equip them to better educate the students here."

He also said these foreign students work on research that benefits the American institutions.

"THE ONLY DRAWBACK is when the K-State consultants, who work in the developing countries for more than a year, sometimes have difficulties readjusting themselves to a fast-paced society when they come home," Dunbar said.

The 65 scholars at K-State are composed of 40 Nigerians, six Filipinos, five Batswana, five Tunisians, three Pakistanis, two Senegalese, one Tanzanian, one Mauritanian, one Lesotho and one Egyptian.

Before coming to K-State in fall 1982, Gabatshele Legwaila and Sifanele MacHacha, both freshmen in agronomy, were teachers at Botswana Agricultural College in South Africa. It is a

Natural methods control insects

Insect control means regulating the pest instead of eliminating it completely, Ernst Horber, professor of entomology, said.

Horber offered an alternative to chemical control of insects — biological control — which involves non-chemical methods of decreasing insect damage on plants.

He explained his research work, which includes biological control of insects on native Kansas weeds, last week in the Union. His talk was the final in a series of "Alternatives in Agriculture" discussions sponsored by the Kansas Friends of the Earth.

He said to fully understand bio-control, terms must be defined and realistically applied to the situation.

"Biological" control requires the use of several elements to counter each other, he said. For example, the ladybug feeds on a bacterium, controlling damaging effects of the organism.

Other bacteriums may control insect numbers.

Horber said there are many different methods of biological control.

One approach is flushing the area with many organisms or insects. But in order to successfully control the pest, a large number of predator organisms must be used over a period of time.

"NUMBERS AND time are important for a successful bio-control of the situation," he said.

Introduction of a new organism to control the existing problem is another way pest insects can be limited, Horber said.

However, most farmers are not receptive to this method because they don't want to introduce any more insects into an already insect-infested area.

Farmers believe "we have enough insects and we're not going to introduce any new ones," he said.

Horber said he disagrees with the idea of never adding new organisms to control unwanted pests. After all effects are taken into consideration and the "whole picture" is examined, the method's use would often be warranted, he said.

When adding a new organism to the environment, Horber pointed out that sometimes the new organism will not only limit the pest insect, but will have a negative effect on the plant.

ILLUSTRATING his point with a sunflower moth, he said the moth will help eat Kansas thistle, but will cause harm to the sunflower by feeding on it.

Some farmers try to eliminate insects and weeds by burning the ground cover, Horber said, but the ground litter and shading is often more beneficial if it remains.

Some plants are naturally resistant to insects. For example, the Kansas thistle's needle thorns discourage insect damage.

However, the grasshopper is one example of an insect which can cause damage to the thistle, Horber said. This illustrates the term "counter control," which means two organisms in opposition, limiting each others' numbers.

Fort Hays State wants private college lobbyists

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

HAYS — Student leaders at Fort Hays State University are trying for a first — they want to make Fort Hays State the first public college to join a private college student lobbying group.

Hays has already withdrawn from the U.S. Student Association (USSA), which has over 300 mostly-public schools as members and is the largest student lobbying group in Washington, D.C.

Now Hays wants to join the National Coalition of Independent Colleges and University Students (known as COPUS), which also lobbies for students in Washington, but caters exclusively to private schools.

COPUS, on the other hand, doesn't want Fort Hays State.

COPUS "is not going to allow membership of public institutions, at least not at this point," Michael Holmes, executive director of COPUS' Research Project, said.

"We have a long history of working for the private school student, and we do it effectively precisely because we work only with the private sector," he said.

But that doesn't phase Fort Hays State Student Government President Kevin Faulkner.

"We've passed a resolution to subscribe to their newsletter, and we're talking of getting COPUS to change their constitution and format to allow state institutions to become members," he said.

Fort Hays State pulled out of USSA last April because of its "radical views and farfetched" platforms.

"They spent their time working on grassroot organization, working on social and political issues like abortion and El Salvador, and they don't spend any time lobbying on the Hill on real student issues," Faulkner said.

COPUS "is the most respected student lobbying force in Washington. The people we've spoken to say their people are the most impressive, best-prepared and most seen of all the student lobbying groups."

Faulkner is "terribly wrong," USSA head Janice Fine said.

"I feel horrible about (Fort Hays State's withdrawal). We're losing a good school, but they are also losing a valuable ally by not joining us," she said.

"Contrary to what they say, we have done some great things legislatively," Fine said. "We've fought consistently against the Solomon Amendment, we've testified before the National Student Aid Commission, before House and Senate subcommittees, and done a lot of work with the (America Association of University Professors)."

Perhaps as a result, "our membership is up significantly," she said.

USSA now has 340 individual student governments signed up, an increase over 1982's 240. Twelve state student associations belong, compared to eight last year.

But Faulkner maintains, "unless we find some way to join COPUS, there's really no choice. We won't join any national association."

International students may be restricted to 4-year education

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Restrictions on foreign students attending American colleges are about to get tougher in August and may get even harder if Congress passes a new bill.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) announced last week that as of August, it will give foreign students four years to complete their coursework here.

If they don't finish in that time and they want to continue going to school, they'll have to return to their home countries for two years before re-registering here, explained INS spokeswoman Janet Graham.

At the same time, Congressional committees approved bills that, if approved by the full House and Senate, would force foreign students to return home for two years before becoming eligible to apply for permanent U.S. citizenship.

Graham says the bills are necessary to "deter" foreign students whose "whole intent is never to go back home."

But Carole Shaffer, international student adviser at the University of San Fransico, said she believes Congress is trying to keep out foreign students to save jobs for Americans.

"It is our feeling that this legislation is being proposed without proper justification," added Georgia Stewart of the National Association of Foreign Student Affairs. She insisted Congressional sponsors of the bill are using "old and not very reliable" information.

The sponsors believe 40 to 50 percent of the 325,000 foreign students now here are trying to gain permanent resident status.

Stewart said only about 15 percent have in fact applied for resident staus. "It's not a very remarkable figure," she noted.

But the House Subcommittee on Immigration did pass an amendment that would exempt about 4,500 foreigners who apply for certain college jobs — engineering teaching positions in particular — from the return home requirement.

No further Congressional action is needed to enforce the INS' new rule that will put a definite limit on the foreigners' visas.

Congress passed the law making the change possible in 1981, but the INS delayed putting the change into effect.

Students receive design awards during fashion show

Models walked down the lighted runway wearing designer originals as approximately 200 guests watched from tables in the ballroom at the Holiday Inn Holidome during the Portfolio Fashion Show Sunday afternoon.

The fashion show, in its second year, was presented by K-State's Department of Clothing, Textile and Interior Design. All of the garments presented were designed and created by apparel design students.

Julie Comer, senior, won the award for Most Creative Design for her creation of long taffeta dresses.

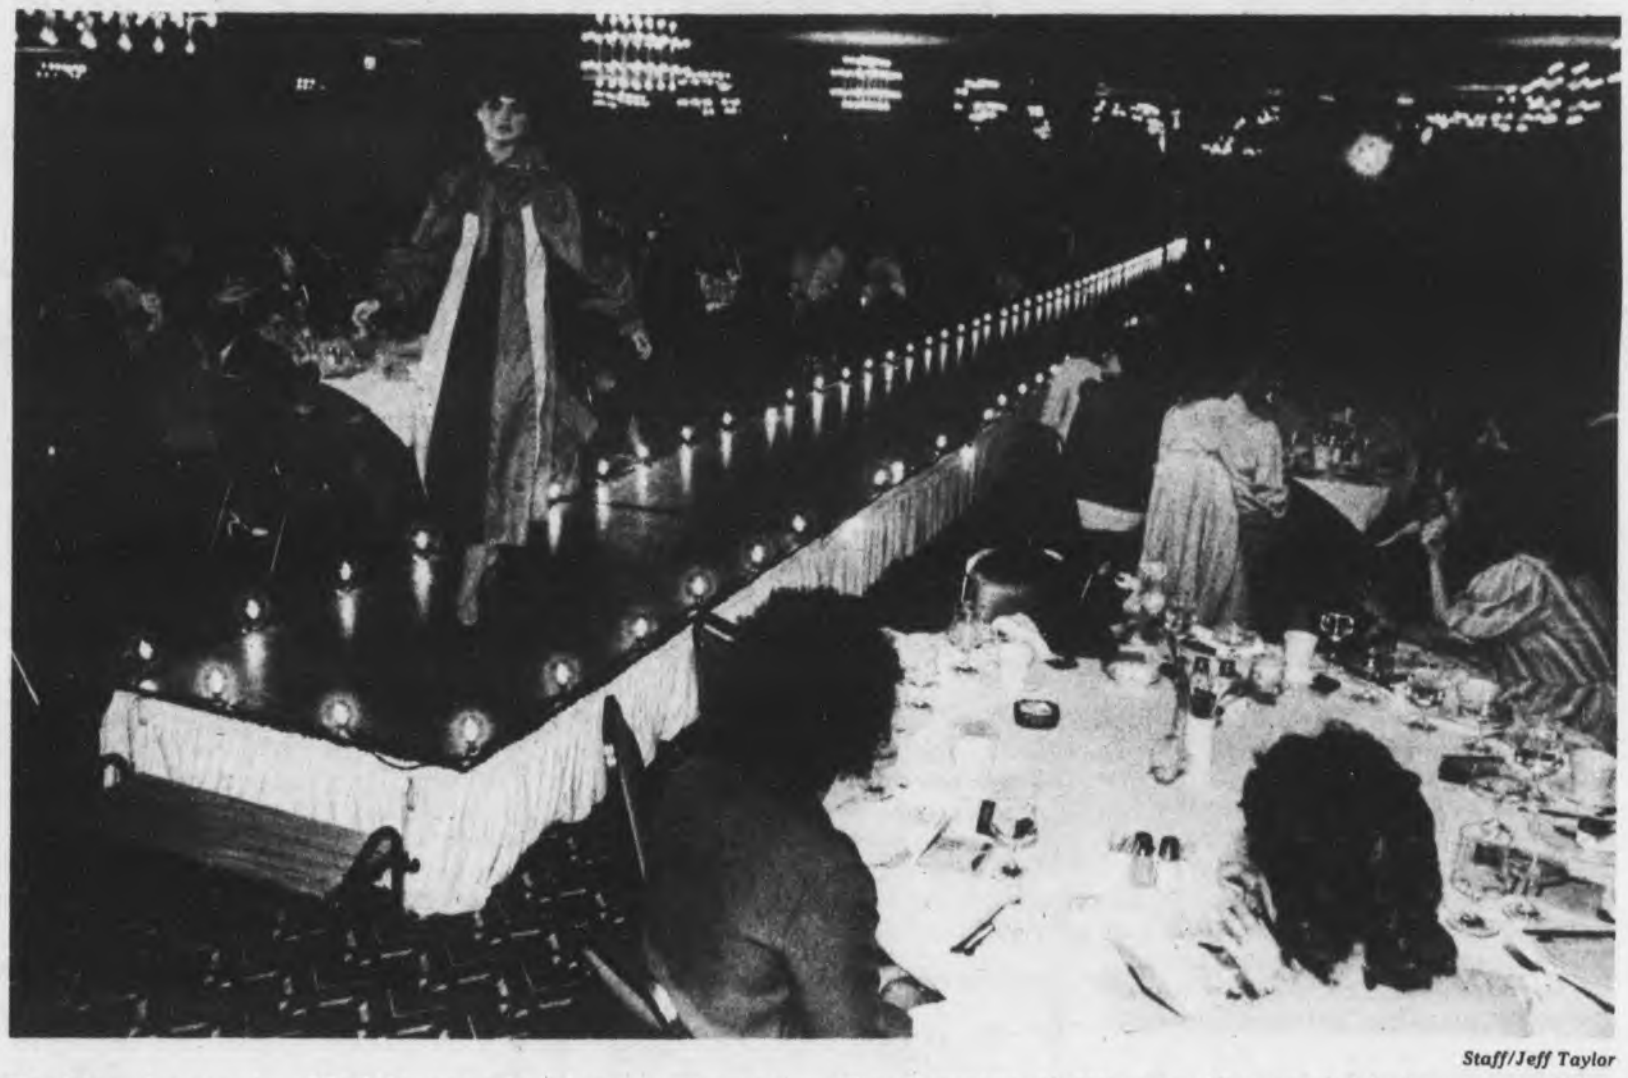
Other awards presented at the show were best worksmanship, Karen Herren, junior; most marketable, Julie Quinn, senior; special judges' award for overall talent, Tim Burrow, senior; and honorable mentions to Sandra Suggs, junior; Phyllis Becker, senior, and Comer.

"The senior collection took a week for actual construction. The wedding dress took two straight days," Burrows, winner of Best Senior Collection and Overall Talent, said. "I feel grateful. I'm glad I got it at this time. I think I would have died if I hadn't gotten it."

Burrow has studied in New York as well as at K-State.

"When I got to New York, I wanted to come home, but my mom wanted me to stay. She's probably gone through as much as I have," he said.

The average cost for Burrow's designs are $17.50 for blouses and $15 for skirts.



"In a store it would cost twice that much. I just try to cover the construction costs and a few hours of my time," Burrow said.

Comer said the selling price for her taffeta evening dresses would be $200.

There were 16 models to present the designs to the guests.

The fashion show was important for the seniors in apparel design because they were able to present their senior collections. Underclassmen contributed designs to the show, also.

Darkroom work

The pounding of nails and the whine of power saws could be heard Saturday throughout the Art Building, as members of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity helped build a new darkroom for the Department of Art.

David Harmes, art department instructor, said a larger and better-equipped darkroom has been "desperately needed for years." Operating the department with the current small darkroom has "been almost like driving a car with three tires."

Hubbard said the construction project will "give us access to a better darkroom so we can have our own photography class in graphic design. I wish we had had this last year. We'll be having access to it on our own and be able to experiment a little," he said.

government-owned school of 400 students which offers no degree in agriculture, only a diploma.

"IN AN EFFORT to expand the college by offering a bachelor's degree in agriculture rather than a diploma, to upgrade the quality of teaching and to have an improved localized educational system, our government sent us here," Legwaila said.

MacHacha said they want to gain knowledge and skills on agricultural technology to share it with the native students and teachers.

"There is a striking contrast between the agricultural situation here and back home," MacHacha said. "Technology is more advanced in the United States with all those complicated machines and modern facilities, while farmers in Botswana still use oxen."

Grace Pablo worked as a grain marketing officer in the National Food and Agriculture Council in the Philippines before she came to the University to pursue her master's degree in agricultural economics.

"THE PHILIPPINE agricultural scenario is not as poor as what others may think," Pablo said. "Yes, an ordinary farmer still uses a carabao (a water buffalo), but there are already those who use modern farm machines.

"The government is trying its best to improve the quality of farm life as well as upgrade the competence of those who work for and with the farmers. This is the main reason why I am here. I work for and with the farmer and have been working for his betterment."

James Odiba from Benue State, Nigeria, is a graduate student in animal science. He got his master's degree in the same field at the University of Wisconsin. In the summer of 1982 he came to K-State for his doctorate.

"So far I'm getting a lot of knowledge, theoretical and practical, from my studies," Odiba said. "This builds up and helps me do things by myself.

"I like the lab work more, for I am exposed to different facilities, particularly those I never saw before and only read about," he said. "In the lab I feel like a curious child who just had his first mechanical toys. Although this time it's more work than fun."

WHEN HE RETURNS to Nigeria he wants to go into research and teaching in a government university or institution.

K-State's link with the developing countries began in 1954 with India. At that time the U.S. government, through its International Cooperation Agency (now USAID), requested several land-grant universities to assist in a project to help India increase food production by strengthening its agricultural institutions.

In August 1972, while India celebrated its 25th year of independence, K-State completed its part of the project. The project, which was to build the Andhra Pradesh Agricultural University, had taken 16 years. Fifty-nine university faculty members served the university while 160 students were sent to the United States for graduate study.

THE PROGRAM focused on teaching, research, extension and administration. Most of APAU's current deans and department heads have doctorate degrees from K-State.

Ahmadu Bello University in Nigeria and K-State have worked with the Nigerian and U.S. governments to establish a College of Veterinary Medicine in Nigeria.

In 1962 a USAID survey team traveled to the northern region of Nigeria to investigate and advise government officials regarding the establishment of agricultural and veterinary colleges in the region. The team recommended that USAID provide technical assistance by contracting an American university for the development of these colleges at Ahmadu Bello University in Zaria. In 1963, a contract was signed by K-State.

NINETY of the University faculty helped to develop the agricultural and veterinary medicine colleges and 70 Nigerian faculty and graduate training programs in the United States.

In June 1977, K-State completed its work and established a viable Faculty of Veterinary Medicine at Ahmadu Bello University.

Of that same year, the University again linked itself with another developing country, the Philippines.

Under the K-State/U.S. Agency for International Development/Philippine Integrated Agricultural Productivity and Marketing Project, major accomplishments have already been achieved.

FILIPINO STUDENTS have earned seven doctorate's and 28 master's degrees in agriculture at the University. A food and feed processing center has been established at Central Luzon State University (CLSU) in the Philippines. Graduate and undergraduate agricultural programs have been set up at the University of the Philippines at Los Banos (UPLB) and CLSU. Technological packages for Philippine major crops also have been put together.

So far, more than 40 long-term and short-term K-State agricultural and administrative consultants have been to the Philippines. The long-term consultants stay for more than a year while the short-term visitors stay for less than six months. Currently, there are six K-State consultants in the Philippines. Four (two in agricultural economics and two in administrative work) are based at the IAPMP office in Quezon City while two (one in food technology and one in feed technology) are in CLSU.

They will come home when the contract ends in June 1983. The Filipino scholars, who are finishing their degrees, will also return to their homes.

In the summer of 1981, a K-State team traveled to Botswana to work on the design and development of the U.S. Agency for International Development and Botswana Agricultural Technological Improvement Project.

The project is designed to produce a technology that is more relevant to small farmers, using the Farming Systems Research approach. Pure seed production and management of draft animals are two of the service areas on which emphasis is placed.

Initiated in July 1982, this five-year project has already sent five Batswana to K-State.

In May 1982 Dunbar and Nicasio Romero, a representative of Paraguay's Ministry of Agriculture, arranged for four graduate students to come to K-State to study agricultural education. Also, three vocational agricultural school instructors are scheduled to take a short course in grain marketing.

Beirut

Sgt. 1st Class Richard Twine, 36, whose hometown in the United States was not known. It said a third member of a team training Lebanese troops, Staff Sgt. Mark E. Salazar, 30, of San Gabriel, Calif., was missing and believed dead.

Defense Department officials in Washington said one Marine from the embassy's 11-man guard also was reported missing. Earlier Lebanese reports said as many as six Marines were killed, but officials in Washington said this was incorrect.

It was the worst attack against a U.S. target in Lebanon, and a pro-Iranian terrorist group, Moslem Holy War, claimed responsibility.

Police said the front of the seaside embassy was blown out by 500 pounds of explosives packed into a vehicle which witnesses described as a "GMC pickup."

It blew up shortly after 1 p.m. (5 a.m. CST) on the embassy's circular driveway. But the police said it was not known if the explosives were set off by remote control or if the driver was still in it and blew himself up.

An earlier police report said the vehicle was a gray car used by the Lebanese security police.

Private radio stations said more than 40 people were killed in the explosion, and that several bodies were blown into the Mediterranean from the embassy compound on the seafront in west Beirut's mostly Moslem Ein Mreisseh neighborhood. The facade of the main embassy section was torn off by the bomb.

One radio report said the car had diplomatic plates and was driven by a suicide terrorist of the Moslem Holy War group who died in the attack.

U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon, who was preparing to jog when the bomb went off and was in a jogging suit, escaped from the rubble of his top-floor office by climbing out onto a balcony, then re-entering on a lower floor. He suffered minor cuts and said the bomb-laden vehicle may have crashed through a barricade.

"I was standing up with a telephone in one hand and a T-shirt in the other. I was preparing to go out and jog, when all of a sudden my office collapsed," the ambassador told reporters.

President Reagan praised Dillon's courage and told reporters in Washington that "this criminal attack on a diplomatic establishment will not deter from our goals of peace in the region." The United States is mediating talks aimed at getting Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces out of Lebanon.

Market

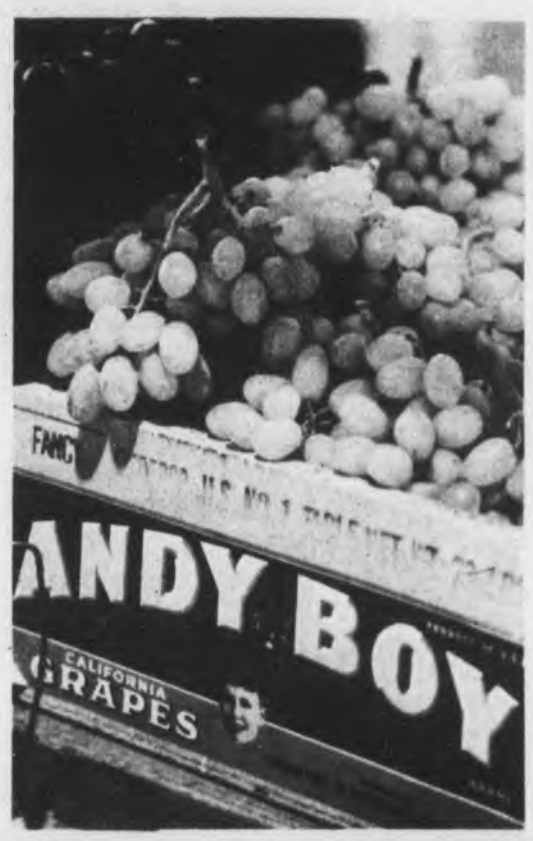
mand for sweet corn and cauliflower is up; broccoli is up 400 percent of four years ago."

For those in the fresh produce business, the busy season begins with the first strawberries of spring, intensifies with the peaches and watermelons of summer and ends with the pumpkins, Indian corn and apples of autumn. Other products available in season at an open-air market usually include peppers, beans, kiwi, lettuce, papaya, asparagus, honey, sorghum, onions, seeds, certain bedding plants such as pansies, and much more.

Unlike Nelson, who buys the majority of her produce from wholesale suppliers, the Britts grow almost all the vegetables they sell. One-third of their income is from their market and two-thirds is from their wholesale business, Barbra Britt said.

"WE HAVE about 300 acres of garden crop," she said. "It's much more intensive than most any kind of farming. We work 12 to 14 hours a day, seven days a week. You just have to be on top of everything, check coolers, spray everything about once a week. One hour of sunshine or a hailstorm can be very damaging. One year, we lost 300 bushels of apples in two days because the coolers got too hot."

Though tasks in the produce business are mechanized to a certain extent, much of the work is done by hand. Once a week in the summer, Nelson and her 13 employees line up to unload semi-truckloads of watermelon in "bucket-brigade style," Nelson said. The Britt operation involves a lot of hoeing and picking by hand, Barbra Britt said.



"PEOPLE DON'T want their food blemished, bruised or scarred and machines will do that. There are lots of little things you can do by hand which will make your crop better," she said.

McClellan, who has been in the produce business for about 17 years, plans to triple his crop acreage to 120 acres. Last year, he grew primarily vine crops — melons, cucumbers, pumpkins.

This year he will add tomatoes, peppers and eggplant to his line of produce. He sells his vegetables to wholesale operators primarily in Kansas and Nebraska.

He estimated that about 30 to 40 percent of the vegetables went through open-air markets retailers.

From May to early November, McClellan and his seasonal employees work about 18 hours a day in the field.

"The things I grow I don't necessarily like to eat. When you look at them (vegetables) as much as I do, you don't feel like eating them. Sometimes you don't see them in the best of circumstances," he said. "Someone hands you one that's over-ripe and your thumb goes through and you don't feel like eating it. I like to say I sell my watermelons and buy sirloin."

HOWEVER, handling vegetables and fruits everyday has not diminished Nelson's or the Britt's appetite for fresh produce.

"People who really appreciate fresh produce love to shop here. They can ask us if we've eaten it and we can tell them if it tastes good. We get a lot of older people in who are used to personalized service," Nelson said. "Especially at Eastside, a lot of old farmers stop in on the highway. It's been there for years and years in the same building."

In addition to enjoying the availability of fresh cantaloupe every day in the summer, Barbra Britt said she enjoys her fresh produce business because, like for many others in the business, it is a family affair.

"My father-in-law started it in 1948. My husband and I took it over, and the kids are around. You're your own boss," she said.

Basketball team signs 6-7 guard to letter-of-intent

K-State basketball coach Jack Hartman announced Monday the signing of Tom Alfaro of Fresno (Calif.) City College to a national letter-of-intent.

Alfaro, a 6-foot-7 guard/forward, led Fresno City College to a regular season record of 28-5. He averaged 13.8 points along with four rebounds and three assists per game, making 57 percent of his field goals on the year and 74 percent of his free throws. He also earned first-team honors in his junior college conference.

A native of Fresno, Alfaro played his first year of collegiate basketball at Santa Barbara (Calif.) City College before transferring to Fresno City College last season.

"We're elated with the signing of Tom," Hartman said. "He's one of those pure shooters that you find very rarely. I think he can help us at either guard or forward. He's very versatile and should contribute to our team immediately."

Alfaro's signing brings to two the numbers of signings by the Wildcats to date. Last Wednesday, K-State announced that Allen County's Eric Watson had signed with the Wildcats, making both of K-State's signings this year junior college transfers.

Fraternity to sponsor softball meet; Big Brothers/Big Sisters will benefit

With the anticipated coming of spring weather comes softball tournaments, raising money for a variety of causes. A benefit tourney raising money for Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Manhattan will be held April 30-May 1, sponsored by Kappa Sigma fraternity and Campbell Distributors, Inc.

According to Tournament Director Mike Gardner, the event is in its fourth year. The tourney raised $550 for Big Brothers/Big Sisters last year, with 14 teams participating. The fraternity hopes to raise twice as much money this year.

"We already have 13 teams entered, and hope to have 22 by the time we play," Gardner said.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters is a volunteer organization in which adults 18 years of age and older spend a minimum of three hours with a child, who usually has only one parent and needs additional adult companionship, guidance and role-modeling.

The volunteer is encouraged to talk to the child, "listening to his/her problems, taking the child places and sharing experiences which might not otherwise be possible and providing a standard of behavior which the Little Brother or Little Sister can absorb and reflect."

The tournament will be double elimination played by ASA rules with sanctioned umpires. Texas rules will apply after one hour. Each team needs 10 players to start play and must supply their own softballs.

Trophies will be given to the first-, second-, third- and fourth-place teams. There will also be a sportsmanship award presented.

Participation in the tournament has become widespread, according to Gardner, who said there are two teams from Centralia, one from Baxter and one from Lawrence entered in the tourney.

Deadline for entry is April 22. The tournament will take place at CiCo Park in Manhattan.

Herzog retains composure despite 6-1 Cardinal record

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals are where they left off last fall in major league baseball — still under a manager who refuses to get excited.

"What have we got left — 155 games?" asked Whitey Herzog following the defending world champion's most recent success, a 6-2 victory Saturday night over the New York Mets. "There's a long way to go. There are a lot of peaks and valleys in this game."

If Herzog prefers a low-key approach to the 6-1 start by St. Louis, such was not the case with George Bamberger, the New York manager.

"They've got great balance, great team speed," said Bamberger. "They've got the kind of defense that can beat you alone. Plus they're getting great pitching."

The Cards lost 7-1 to the Pittsburgh Pirates in its season-opener, but since have clicked off six straight victories and moved to the top of the National League East.

St. Louis, while profiting from its tight pitching, has also capitalized on the sudden explosiveness of its attack.

Only George Hendrick has homered for the team that a year ago ranked last among 26 clubs in that offensive category. But the Cards have already made a habit of manufacturing big innings.

THIRD BASEMAN Ken Oberkfell predicts speed will maintain the rapid pace for St. Louis, which a year ago scored fewer than three runs in 51 of its 162 regular-season contests.

"We don't have a lot of power, but we all make contact," Oberkfell said. "We can put the hits together. And once we get on base we just run, run, run."

Herzog's dedication to the running game and bold coaching at third base by Chuck Hiller have so far been the keys to two Cards' wins.

Against Pittsburgh last week, Hiller sent Keith Hernandez home from third base for the winning run on Oberkfell's shallow fly to left center. A day later, Hiller waved Oberkfell all the way home from first base on David Green's double to right.

"They force you into a lot of mistakes with the pressure they keep on you," said New York oufielder Danny Heep as St. Louis swept three games from the Mets.

ONLY FIVE early postponements have marred the Cards' fast start.

"It's not good to have so many. We could have some more," said Herzog ahead of Tuesday's scheduled opener of a three-game series against the Expos in Montreal. "I can't remember a spring where the weather's been as bad as this one."

Joaquin Andujar's pitching and the hitting of Hendrick, Green and fill-in second baseman Mike Ramsey have thus far provided the spark for St. Louis, which a year ago won the NL East with a 92-70 record.

"I'm not surprised, but I'm glad we're playing so well," said Herzog, his caution stemming in part from previous managerial experience in the American League. "You never know. One year in Kansas City we were 36-36 and wound up winning 102 games. I like to win as many as I can as fast as I can."

Three pitchers narrowly miss mark in tries for major league no-hitters

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Next, please.

Step right up, Mr. Pitcher, and take your swing at immortality. Three of your colleagues missed over the weekend, but not by much.

Sooner or later, somebody's going to connect with a no-hitter. It might as well be you.

First, on Friday night, we had Milt Wilcox of the Detroit Tigers, retiring the first 26 batters in order, one out away from a perfect game against the Chicago White Sox. The pinch hitter was Jerry Hairston, a career .255 hitter who was 0-for his first 6 this season. Single.

"It's too bad," Wilcox said. "I got this close and didn't get it. You pitch a perfect game, you get into the Hall of Fame. That's the only way I would get in."

Less than 24 hours later, here was Charlie Lea of Montreal. He's already in Cooperstown, courtesy of a no-hitter May 10, 1981, against the San Francisco Giants.

A week ago, Lea went into the sixth inning against Los Angeles without allowing a hit. This time, he had a trifle easier task because he was dealing with the weak-hitting Houston Astros.

Lea went into the eighth inning Saturday without allowing a hit. The pinch hitter was Terry Puhl, batting .111. Single.

"He was unhittable," noted Houston's Phil Garner, who had no hits against Lea. "He throws an invisible ball. It jumps over the bat."

Lea said pitching in the Astrodome helped: "The best game I ever threw was here last year, against these guys, a one-hitter ..."

He said his only concern after Puhl's hit was preserving the shutout. That he did.

He came in with 0.52 career earned run average against Houston. Now it's 0.30.

Then, on Sunday, it was Atlee Hammaker's turn. The San Francisco Giant left-hander pitched seven innings of perfect ball against Cincinnati. But that ended in the eighth when Johnny Bench drilled a leadoff single on the first pitch.

"A slider up over the plate," said Bench. "I was sort of guessing with him."

Hammaker surrendered another hit in the ninth by rookie Dann Bilardello, but decided he had benefitted from the whole experience.

"It was fun," he said, "I'd like to try it again."

The demoralizing effect of nearly being no-hitted can last for a while.

The White Sox were so shaken by the experience against Wilcox that they only beat the Tigers 3-1 on Saturday and 6-1 on Sunday. Houston, clearly still thinking about Lea, could only manage a 6-3 win over the Expos on Sunday.

And the Reds were so mesmerized by Hammaker, that they merely sent 13 batters to the plate in the first inning of the second game of their doubleheader against the Giants Sunday, scored nine runs and won 12-3.

Meyer earns Boston Marathon win; Benoit breaks women's world best

BOSTON (AP) — Greg Meyer surged into the lead with just over six miles left and won his first Boston Marathon Monday. Joan Benoit broke the woman's world best in the grueling 26-mile, 385-yard race.

Meyer, 27, of suburban Wellesley, overtook Benji Durden of Stone Mountain, Ga., shortly before the 20-mile mark and romped to victory in 2 hours, 9 minutes, capping a brilliant eight-month assault on U.S. road and track racing.

The small Benoit, running alongside world-class marathoner Kevin Ryan of New Zealand for the entire race, was clocked in 2:22:42, smashing the woman's best of 2:25:29 by nearly three minutes.

Meyer's victory made up for his "embarrassing" 11th-place finish in his only previous Boston test in 1981.

Ron Tabb of Eugene, Ore., was second in 2:09:32; Durden was third in 2:09:58. Then came Ed Mendoza in 2:10:07 and Chris Bunyan in 2:10:54.

Bill Rodgers, the four-time Boston winner who had been nursing a cold for the past week, struggled home 10th in 2:12:06.

Among the women, 1980 champion Jacqueline Gareau of Canada finished second in 2:29.27, followed by Mary Shea in 2:33:22, Karen Dunn in 2:33:34 and Sue King in 2:33:51.

The victory was Benoit's second in the Boston Marathon. Her previous triumph was in 1979 in 2:35:15. On Sept. 12 she set the U.S. record of 2:26:11 in the Nike-OTC Marathon at Eugene, Ore.

A field of 6,515 — 5,914 and 701 women — entered the race. One entrant was 75-year-old John A. Kelley, the 1935 and 1945 winner. It was Kelley's 52nd Boston Marathon.

Meyer ran the third-fastest Boston marathon in history.

PERSONAL

KATHY GOODYEAR—Welcome to K-State and Gamma Alpha! We think you're great and we hope you have a terrific visit. Love, the Kappas. (140)

TKE'S MATT and Brett—Congrats to the new IFC VP of Rush and Public Relations officers! Good luck with your new positions—The Daughters. (140)

TKE'S MONTE, Rusty, Scott—Congratulations on your recent initiation! We are very happy for you—The Daughters of Diana. (140)

SIGMA CHI Coaches Mark, Jamie, Ron and Dec-A-Sig Kevin—We just want to thank you again for everything you did for us during Derby Days. We couldn't have asked for anyone better. It wasn't where we placed that counted but the fun and friendship we got out of the week. You guys definitely are and always will be—#1! Love, the Pi Phi's. P.S. We'll miss you! (140)

HAY-EVEN Bedracers—The water balloons landed, the cloud of flour cleared and Van Zile finally went down to defeat. Going down the straightaways, up the hills and around the corners on campus, remember we are the 1983 Bedrace Champions. Thanks for your effort in making West and Haymaker the halls with it all. Women of West. (140)

SHARON—SPRING Fling was terrific! Congratulations! You did good. Signed—You can sleep on my bed anytime. (140)

DAVE—HAD to keep my name in the paper so thought I'd send a personal. Happy Belated Birthday to a special guy (who isn't a dinosaur) Kerri. P.S. Maybe this will start a war!?! (140)

SIGMA NU Little Sisters: Sorry, a little late, you understand. Boxers were great. Thanks again for April Fools breakfast. Can't wait to drink the rest of the O.J. Congratulations again new initiates. We love you all! Men of Sigma Nu. (140)

TO EVERYONE who organized, supported, and participated in KSUARH Spring Fling 1983: Thanks for "having the time" to make it a hall of a success! Sharon and Jim. (140)

SOFTBALL ANYONE? Kappa Sigma-Busch softball tournament to benefit Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Manhattan. Contact Mike Gardner at 539-9023. (140)

MICHELLE—HAPPY 21st Birthday! Now you can go and buy me my liquor. Hope this day is the first of many more we will spend together. I love you! Chris. (140)

FLAME—ALTHOUGH I now know that I have "limited horizons," it was still a great party! Be ready for a continuation on Wednesday. Love, Mom. (140)

Fite Nite to benefit American Heart Association

By JANN REINECKER
Collegian Reporter

The bell sounds and the boxers advance to the center of the ring, bouncing from side to side with their gloves up and ready. Once the first punch is landed, the fight is underway and the crowd begins to cheer.

The fighters, all fraternity members, are participating in the fourth annual Sigma Phi Epsilon Fite Nite, a boxing tournament organized to raise money for the American Heart Association.

According to Bob Porter, senior in radio and television and Sig Ep Fite Nite chairman, the money to be donated is generated through entry fees and ticket sales.

Entry fees are $5 a boxer or $25 for a six-member fraternity team. Tickets cost $3 and can be purchased at the Fifth Street Exchange, where the tournament has taken place the past two nights.

"We want to donate $2,000 to the Heart Association," Porter said, but added he is unsure about reaching the goal because of the Sig Ep's $400 purchase of boxing gloves and headgear from Ringside Producers in Lenexa, this year.

In the past, the equipment was borrowed from the Junction City Boxing Club for the tournament, he said.

FITE NITE was canceled last year because it did not meet state laws requiring the event to have a city permit and be sanctioned by some organization. The amateur boxing organization Golden Gloves now sponsors Fite Nite and provides fight officials.

"We are here to make sure everything is safe," Gary Davis, Golden Gloves president for Kansas and Oklahoma, said. "The first rule in the rule book is safety. We don't take any chances.

"The standing eight count is a safety valve for the referees," he said. After a boxer has been hit and is visibly hurt or disoriented, the referee has eight counts to decide if the boxer is all right.

"I ask if they are OK. If I get a negative answer, I ask again; if again the response is negative, the fight is over," Davis said.

WHEN THE REFEREE ends the match, it is an "RSC" — referee stops contest. If the boxer ends the match, it is a "retirement."

There are seven weight classes dividing participants, beginning with flyweights, 134 pounds and less, to heavyweights, 185 pounds and over.

"This is a great tournament," Davis said, who has attended tournaments across the United States. "I have never been to a better tournament. I congratulate the guys running this, they are doing a great job. There has been no problems with the audience, the boxers or in the parking lot. We've been treated great here, also."

Most boxers begin training for Fite Nite one or two months in advance, Porter said.

"I began running at the beginning of the semester," Keith Kittrell, freshman in mechanical engineering and member of Kappa Sigma, said.

KITTRELL BEGAN practicing with gloves in February. "At first I closed my eyes, but after a while you learn," he said. "I gained confidence by practicing."

During the first round of his match, Kittrell was knocked down by Mike Ward, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and member of Sigma Nu.

"I got discouraged when I was knocked down," Kittrell said, adding his fall put him on the defensive.

After the first round, Kittrell said he realized his opponent was left-handed and began circling him from the right. "I became more aggressive," he said.

Kittrell finally won the three-round match.

The judging is on a 20-point system and the winner must have 20 points.

PUNCHES TO the front of the body are legal, above the navel and three punches equal one point, Davis said. In the event of a tie, the judges consider which boxer was most aggressive to decide the winner, he added.

Each night before the boxing begins, the boxers blood pressure and heart rate are checked and according to amateur boxing rules, a doctor must be present for all matches.

"The adrenalin is flowing when these guys jump into the ring. With such a loud audience, it is hard not to get fired up.

"Boxing is its own sport, there is nothing like it," Davis said.

Fite Nite concludes tonight beginning at 7, with the seven finals and two exhibition fights.

Lebanon reporting captures Pulitzer Prizes

NEW YORK (AP) — The Washington Post and The New York Times each won two Pulitzer Prizes, including a shared award for reporting from Lebanon, in the 67th competition for journalism's most prestigious honor, Columbia University announced Monday.

Times columnist Russell Baker, whose syndicated column was honored with a Pulitzer for journalism in 1979, won in a literature category for his autobiography "Growing Up."

And Alice Walker became the first black woman to win the fiction award with her novel, "The Color Purple."

The prizes, most of which carry $1,000 cash awards, were announced by Columbia President Michael I. Sovern. Columbia administers the competition under the will of the late publisher Joseph Pulitzer.

The Jackson, Miss., ClarionLedger, won the Distinguished Public Service Award for a package of stories, illustrations and editorials in support of a successful legislative battle for public school reform in that state.

The staffs of the Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel and the Boston Globe won awards for stories they wrote in 1982. The Miami Herald won for editorials in a campaign against the federal detention of illegal Haitian immigrants.

Bill Foley of The Associated Press received the spot news photography award for a series of photos of victims and survivors of the massacre of Palestinians at the Sabra camp in Lebanon. James B. Dickman of the Dallas Times Herald won the feature photography award for photos from El Salvador.

The New York Times's two prizes mark the second year in a row it has won a pair of Pulitzers.

Thomas L. Friedman of The Times and Loren Jenkins of the Post shared the award in international reporting for their coverage of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and its aftermath. Both were cited for their investigations of the massacre of civilians in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps near Beirut last September.

Loretta Tofani of the Post won the special local reporting award for her investigation of rape and sexual assault in the Prince Georges County, Md., Detention Center.

The Times' Nan Robertson won the feature writing award for her account in The New York Times Magazine last Sept. 19 of her struggle with toxic shock syndrome.

She said she received about 2,000 letters after her story ran. "It did save peoples' lives," she said. "That to me is the greatest honor."

Baker was awarded the Pulitzer for his book about growing up in the Virginia mountains. His column won the award for commentary in 1979.

"I think I should probably quit while I'm ahead," Baker, 57, said by telephone from his home in Morrisonville, Va.

Ellen T. Zwilich, a freelance composer from New York, became the first woman to win the musical competition prize, which has been awarded since 1943. She was honored for her "Three Movements for Orchestra," which premiered last May 5 in New York.

The general local reporting award went to the staff of Fort Wayne's News-Sentinel for its "courageous and resourceful coverage" of a flood that devastated the town in March 1982. The Boston Globe won the national affairs award for a magazine supplement by staff writers on the nuclear arms race.

Tickets

to add seats behind the stage to accommodate ticket sales.

"I think we will sell the rest of the tickets this week," Dave Brown, director of Memorial Union Activities, said. "There is always an increase the week of the show." Seating is reserved.

THE CONCERT AT KU, part of an annual event, Hawkstock, is scheduled for May 1 in Memorial Stadium.

"We expect the largest crowd for a concert on KU's campus, 15,000 to 25,000," Mark McKee, coordinator for the concert, said. The number of tickets sold currently was not available.

"In years past Hawkstock has featured just local bands. This year we have signed Joan Jett, Huey Lewis, Shooting Star, Modern English and Fabulous Thunderbirds."

The concert sponsors are Interfraternity Council, Miller High Life and New West Production.

"Ticket sales are moving along fine," McKee said. "I think sales will go along fine with beer as an added attraction and the fact Joan Jett is on MTV right now."

The University of Northern Colorado "has sold only 700 out of 3,500 tickets available," Marilyn Stone, director of ticket sales, said. "The concert date is April 24 in Butler Hancock Arena.

"I think weather and the fact tickets are general admission are slowing sales. Students tend to wait until the last moment to buy general admission," Stone added.

Even though sales are up and down in different places, spokesmen for Jett and Lewis aren't worried.

"Places that are selling tickets for Joan Jett are doing well," Elliot Seltzman, tour manager for Jett, said. "In Kansas, sales are going well and we are looking forward to the concerts."

"Ticket sales are going well for the Joan Jett/Huey Lewis concert. Where Lewis is not appearing with Jett, ticket sales are doing fine also," Toby Lubov, spokesman for Lewis, said.

Katlin considers student input in Solomon veto

Jerry Katlin, student body president, announced Tuesday his decision to veto the resolution passed last week by Student Senate supporting the Solomon Amendment.

Katlin's statement to senators during a tentative allocations meeting indicated he had received overwhelming student input in opposition to the resolution and his belief that he had to veto the bill in order to represent K-State students properly.

"I'm doing it because I think they (senators) need to re-evaluate it," Katlin said.

Katlin said the student body president has the power to veto "any measure" and that senate "has the opportunity" to override the veto with a two-thirds majority vote.

"The whole purpose (of the resolution) was to serve as a barometer for the Associated Students of Kansas of the sentiment of the Student Senate on the issue," John Kohler, campus director of ASK and sponsor of the resolution, said. "It has served that purpose."

Kohler said he took the results of the resolution to the ASK legislative assembly over the weekend, and "the association adopted a position opposing the amendment."

Kohler said he thinks senate has spent too much time with the issue and that "it is not within the purview of a student government to do anything of substance about the measure."

Katlin's full statement regarding his decision to veto appears as a guest column on Page 5 of today's Collegian.

Sports clubs receive tentative funds totaling $2,700 from Student Senate

By MIKE TURNER
Assistant Government Editor

Student Senate provided substantial funding for sports clubs for the first time in recent history in Tuesday night's tentative allocations.

The newly formed Sports Club Council, which had requested $3,000 from senate, was granted $2,707.50 at the session in the Union Big Eight Room.

The lesser amount was approved because senate believed sports club members should have to pay for at least half of their costs for dues, memberships and subscriptions.

During the open period, Jerry Katlin, student body president, delivered his veto message regarding the Solomon resolution which Student Senate passed last Thursday.

Katlin said he vetoed the resolution solely because a clear student mandate on campus has not been reached. Katlin indicated he had been flooded with student input in response to senate's stance on the issue, and the majority of that input was against the Solomon Amendment.

Katlin said he appreciated the fact so many students took time to voice their opinion on the issue. He said he hopes student input will be as good throughout the year on upcoming issues.

DURING CLOSING COMMENTS, Jeff Gates, junior in finance and Student Senate representative to Faculty Senate, said he was asked by the faculty to remind students of University regulations concerning the scheduling of comprehensive course exams.

The Faculty Handbook states that "comprehensive course examinations given at the end of the regular semester must be scheduled only within the two-hour block of time during examination week specified by the University Assignment and Scheduling Committee."

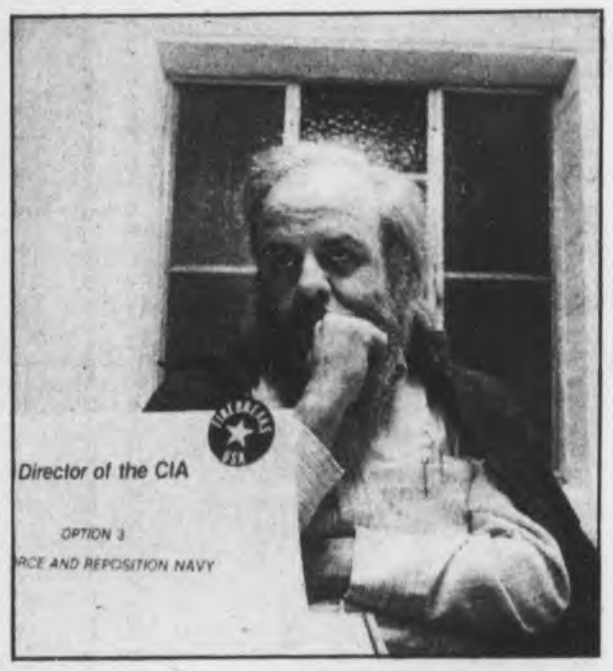
Students were also reminded that they may reschedule one of their final exams if they have three finals scheduled for the same day. A student should consult the University if he does not receive cooperation from faculty in the matter, according to policy.

IN OTHER ALLOCATIONS, Women's Resource Center, with a purpose to promote equality between men and women, requested $375.20 in salary for a work-study position and $100 for advertising expenses. The group was also to receive $200 from an honorarium account to bring in guest speakers.

Finance Committee recommended eliminating the work-study position and increasing the center's expense account for advertising by $34.80. An amendment proposed by Gates permitted the center to retain money for the work-study position and lose the money it was to receive from the honorarium account. The amendment also placed advertising expense for the center back at $100.

Caroline Peine, assistant dean for student development, said she considers the work-study position to be more valuable than monies from the honorarium account because a work-study student would produce more efficiency in the center. After much deliberation, senate approved the amendment and granted the center its original request.

STUDENTS FOR Handicapped Concerns submitted a request for $2,075.20 to help provide better services to temporarily handicapped students on campus. The committee, which helps run the University shuttle service for handicapped students, pointed out that it often has a waiting list of students who need transportation on campus, but have no means of obtaining it.



The committee was eventually granted $1,090.53 with the understanding that it could reapply for the approximately $940 remaining in its budget for the current fiscal year. An amendment proposed by John Kohler, senior in pre-law, provided for a task force to be appointed by the Student Senate chairwoman to research means for alternative funding for the service.

K-State's debate squad also received its full request for $6,599.70. Dwaine Hemphill, debate coach, said his team will be younger and less experienced next year. Hemphill said he would be able to send more people to more tournaments on a smaller budget because the teams will travel on a regional level rather than nationally.

War game focuses on effects of nuclear attack

By SUSAN DENZON
Collegian Reporter

It is not a board game. Nor a card game. Neither is it just any game.

It is a role-playing and discussion game — a war/peace game patterned after the war games played by national security experts. It is designed for everyone, even "non-experts" in the field.

The name of the game is "Firebreaks: War/Peace Game."

Firebreaks, analogous to the firebreaks cut into the path of a raging forest fire, does not advocate a specific strategy to prevent nuclear war. Rather, it involves every participating individual in the search for such a strategy. It also is aimed at provoking widespread citizen discussion of how a nuclear war might start and ways it can be prevented.

"There are no right and wrong choices in the game," Coni Jo Bates, Manhattan resident, said.

The game was designed by Ground Zero, a non-partisan nuclear war education project based in Washington, D.C. It is a group committed to educating and involving the American public about the prevention of nuclear war, according to Roger Molander, executive director of Ground

Commissioners vote down parking permit ordinance

By JANICE CARLTON
Collegian Reporter

Tuesday night's meeting of the Manhattan City Commission was filled to overflowing with landowners as well as members of sororities and fraternities along Fairchild Avenue.

They came to hear the commission's decision concerning the second reading of an ordinance establishing a parking permit zone similar to those enacted in areas north, east, and west of campus.

The second reading, which was unanimously voted down by the commission, received lengthy discussion.

"Parking in front of my house is basically not available from August to May of each year," said Curtis Bonser, 1845 Fairchild Ave.

Bonser said he noticed that most of the cars parked near his home belong to people not living in the area.

"The parking permit system is working in other parts of town," he said. Bonser added that many of the cars along Fairchild remain parked for extended periods, leading him to believe that the area was being heavily used for storage parking.

Rosa Pettle, 1819 Fairchild Ave., also spoke in favor of establishing a parking zone.

"ALL OF THESE greek houses have parking lots," Pettle said. "We see no reason why the zone shouldn't be applied to Fairchild."

Pettle said she believes greek organizations should provide their own spaces in parking lots, with the overflow required to find parking off Fairchild Avenue between 2 and 9 a.m., if the zone would go into effect.

Theresa Korst, sophomore in management and member of Alpha Xi Delta sorority, voiced concern about the ordinance on behalf of greek houses in the area.

"We feel we are unique over here," she said. Korst said the parking problem on other sides of campus is primarily caused by residence hall overflow and noted that hall residents don't pay city taxes.

Korst said greek houses in the area of Fairchild Avenue pay six times the taxes of landowners along the street and greeks should be given equal consideration.

"WHERE WE LIVE, we have limited parking spaces," Korst said. "We really do need the street parking."

Several alternatives to the parking zone were proposed, such as a system of self-monitoring in which residents of the area would report any cars that remained in place for extended periods of time to the police for ticketing.

Wanda Fateley, newly elected mayor, said the area along Fairchild Avenue was a different situation from other areas surrounding the campus.

"I feel the city is not representing its obligation here," Fateley said. "I think we shuld look at each area and create a solution for that area."

Fateley said she believes the parking zone wouldn't adequately address the problem on Fairchild Avenue.

"Our existing ordinance is not tailored to this street," she said.

COMMISSIONERS agreed that the ordinance, as stated in the second reading, was not acceptable and rejected it by a vote of four, with Commissioner Gene Klingler abstaining.

After rejecting the second reading of the ordinance, Commissioner Dave Fiser suggested a committee of residents in the area be organized to reach a solution to the problem. The committee's proposal would be presented to commissioners at a later date.

In other business, the commission received a report on the city's Urban Development Action Grant application from Gary Stith, director of community development.

"UDAG is not satisfied with the letter of commitment from J.C. Penney's department store," Stith said.

Stith said reviewers from the Department of Housing and Urban Development looked at the letters of commitment and discussed them with officials from JCP Realty, one of the developers involved in the proposed downtown redevelopment project.

"It has become obvious that the UDAG proposal will be rolled over," Stith said.

Stith said letters of commitment from developers will have to be revised to meet with HUD approval when the application is re-submitted in July.

"If the developer and the city can work together, I think we'll be ready for the second round," Stith said.

Upon receiving the report, the commission voted to hold a 45-day review of progress on the UDAG proposal, starting May 3.

Wisconsin band director named to replace Biegler

The search for a new director for K-State's marching band has been completed.

Stanley Finck, director of bands at the University of Wisconsin, Whitewater, will take over the position July 1, Robert Steinbauer, head of the Department of Music, said.

Finck will also direct the concert band and pep band, and will head the percussion instructional program.

He will succeed Craig Biegler, who directed the bands this past year after the 1982 resignation of Phil Hewett, longtime band director and percussionist.

Jack Flouer, professor of music and chairman of the University search committee for the new director, said more than 90 applications were reviewed. The committee included graduate and undergraduate students and other music faculty.

Finck, 42, is a 1962 graduate of the University of Iowa. In 1965, he received a master's degree in music education from the University of Arkansas.

Finck has also been principal percussionist with symphony orchestras at the University of Arkansas, at Richardson, Texas, and Wichita Falls, Texas. He worked as assistant director of bands and percussion instructor at the University of Northeast Louisiana from 1971 to 1977.

He has been at the University of Wisconsin since 1977.

Legislature to consider tax hike proposals

TOPEKA — The Kansas Legislature reconvenes today, hoping to finish up the 1983 session by Saturday night.

When it does, lawmakers will have a potpourri of tax increase proposals to choose from, which if all were enacted would raise more than a half billion dollars of new revenue.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee voted late Tuesday to introduce five tax bills which would generate $352 million new revenue. Included was a one-cent increase in the state sales tax, a four-cent motor fuel gallonage tax hike, increases in the taxes corporations and banks pay and a new severance tax measure to gain revenue from the production of oil, natural gas, salt and coal.

Veteran observers said it was the biggest flood of tax proposals — raising the most money if passed into law — to be introduced by one committee at one time in Kansas legislative history.

Kansan pleads innocent to threatening Reagan

TOPEKA — A Fort Scott man pleaded innocent Tuesday to a charge of threatening the president in a statement he allegedly made at the Veterans Administration hospital in Topeka last week.

Homer Marshall III, 24, entered the plea before U.S. Magistrate G.T. Van Bebber, a court clerk said.

Marshall then appeared before U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers, at which time a motion was filed asking for a psychiatric examination of the defendant. Rogers ordered that Marshall undergo tests at the Medical Center for Federal Prisoners in Springfield, Mo.

Authorities said Marshall was taken into custody Friday at the Topeka hospital, where he was an outpatient. A hospital spokesman said he alerted the Secret Service when Marshall told him and others at the hospital that he was going to kill President Reagan.

Reagan proposes 100 MXs for existing silos

WASHINGTON — President Reagan embraced a plan Tuesday to build 100 MX missiles and put them in existing launch silos, promising it "will mean a safer, more secure America" and put pressure on Moscow to negotiate nuclear arms cuts.

Even congressional critics conceded the proposal has a far better chance of winning approval than Reagan's first two attempts to deploy the MX.

"Preserving the peace requires more than wishful thinking and vague good intentions," Reagan said. "Concrete, positive action is required to free the world from the spectre of nuclear conflict."

The plan, drafted by the President's Commission on Strategic Forces, calls for putting the MX, armed with 10 nuclear warheads, in Minuteman missile silos near Warren Air Force Base in Wyoming, and beginning work on a new, single-warhead missile to be ready for deployment in the early 1990s.

Deploying the MX missile and developing the smaller, single-warhead weapon, sometimes dubbed "Midgetman" would cost $19.9 billion over the next five years, according to commission estimates. That would be in addition to $4 billion already spent on MX research.

Snow springs 16-inch surprise on Northeast

A freak April snowstorm sacked spring again Tuesday, crushing blossoming flowers under as much as 16 inches of snow in the Northeast, while the mercury tumbled to record lows in nearly 60 cities from Chicago to Savannah, Ga.

Out West, officials were keeping an eye on a 1½-mile lake created when a mountain collapsed into Spanish Fork Canyon and blocked a river, routing all 22 families from the railroad community of Thistle, Utah, and threatening to unleash a 150-foot wall of water on another town should the mud dam give way.

Snow fell on the 30th day of spring in scattered areas from Arkansas to Maine, with heavy accumulations in parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York and southern New England. Never had snow fallen so late in in the season in parts of Arkansas and New Jersey.

It was a hobo's funeral for the 'king'

CENTRALIA, Ill. — Old hoboes came from Ohio, Colorado, Minnesota, Missouri, Michigan and Illinois on Tuesday for the burial of their "king," M.L. "Hobo Bill" Mainer.

Mainer, who was crowned "King of the Hoboes" last August at the National Hobo Convention in Britt, Iowa, died Friday at age 75 in a St. Louis hospital.

Six former hoboes from as many states came in cars and vans — not on the rails — to place on Mainer's coffin the red handkerchief that symbolizes their vanishing lifestyle.

"He had the vagabond spirit from his youth on up," said Maury "Steam Train" Graham of Toledo, Ohio, a white-bearded former hobo king.

Mainer was a hobo for 13 years. He ran away from home in 1919, the summer he was 12, and rode the rails until 1932 when he decided to settle down and get married.

Weather

It's easy to warm up to this forecast: Today's high will be 55 to 60 and Thursday's 65 to 70. Both days will be partly cloudy, and the low will be in the upper-30s.

Violence not key to peace process

Where are the philosophies of Mohandas Gandhi and the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. now?

The senseless destruction of the American Embassy in Beirut on Monday raises many questions as to why America should continue in the Middle East peace process.

After such an incident, it would be easy to say, "Nuke the bastards." The innocent people killed at the area Monday did nothing to deserve their fate. Many say America has no business in the Middle East. America should solve its own problems and leave the rest of the world alone.

Such isolationistic ideas have no merit in the world today.

If America is to remain a world power, it must continue to open up avenues of communication with other countries. America must continue to seek to help its allies and make new ones. Intimidation — especially by violent means — should be condemned and the process should continue. If America allows itself to be intimidated by such incidents, then the peace process is doomed to fail.

America's involvement in the Middle East peace process must continue — no matter what the cost in property or human lives — until a peaceful end to the problem is reached. Otherwise, the intimidation will continue.

Gandhi and King promoted change through non-violent ways. If those who are sincere about providing a permanent peace in the Middle East are sincere, they will find the answer. It is not found by blowing up embassies.

Concert support urged

Editor,

I would like to make a comment concerning the ticket sales for the upcoming Joan Jett concert.

Currently, less than half of the available tickets for the concert have been sold. Considering there is less than one week left before the show, I feel that we, as K-State students, have shown our support for such events quite poorly.

Union Programming Council special events stands to lose a lot of money by Friday night if ticket sales continue to go as poorly as they are now.

So, I would like to encurage everyone to attend and show his support. If we don't, we may not be seeing any more concerts here at K-State, and I personally would not like to see that happen.

Even if it were Chicago or J. Geils, I'd be there. And I plan to be there on Friday night with bells on showing Joan Jett, Huey Lewis and the News and all of K-State that "I love rock 'n roll!"

The draw of the cards

Dealing from the bottom of the deck is overtly frowned upon in most card playing circles, especially when the person dealing has the trump card conveniently placed at his disposal.

President Duane Acker called everyone's bluff and played his trump card at the Kansas Board of Regents meeting last Friday. And yes, like most card sharks, Acker knew all along precisely where the card he wanted was positioned in the deck.

Acker's trump — a proposal for an academic services fee for the fall semester.

For more than a week, Acker had been saying there was no definite proposal that he would take to the regents regarding a fee increase. The move he made would depend upon the Legislature.

Regents policy stipulates that any fee increases for the fall semester must be introduced at the April meeting. If any action was to be taken, it had to be introduced at last Friday's meeting.

We contacted Acker during the week of April 4 and asked what his proposal to the regents would be. He said he would make no comment until the agenda for the board meeting came out the following week.

WHEN THE AGENDA arrived the following Monday, it read that Acker had asked for a delay in his request for any proposal regarding fee increases until the May meeting. In denying comment the previous week it seemed that Acker had avoided a non-issue.

The day the agenda arrived we also received a 68-word written statement from the president regarding a fee proposal. It read in part: "Because the Legislature has not yet adjourned, we don't know how critical our budget problems will be. This agenda item (delay) permits us to assess the situation after the Legislature adjourns, consult with faculty and students, and make a firm recommendation at the May meeting."

I questioned Charles Hein, director of communications for University Relations, about the matter:

"What does this do to the status of the Holton Hall fee?"

"KU, Emporia State and Wichita State are all requesting lab fees. Where does the K-State proposal stand among these?"

"Won't waiting a month cut down on the amount of student input in the proposal?"

Hein was helpful, but had no answers.

THAT AFTERNOON, HOWEVER, he called back. Tear up the previous statement from Acker, he said. The president would have a new statement tomorrow.

It was time to reshuffle the deck.

We received a new statement Tuesday all right. It was virtually the same as the previous comment, and in essence, said nothing. The ace of spades remained hidden.

At a Wednesday press conference Acker spoke in vague generalities, but admitted there was a "significant chance" for a fee increase. He said again that a delay from the regents had been requested and that no proposal would be made until the May meeting. If a fee increase was necessary, it would be passed in June and take effect in August.

Acker shuffled again, slipped a card or two up his sleeve and headed to Lawrence to the regents meeting.

He played his hand at the Fiscal Affairs Committee meeting, unveiling a package that included a recommendation for both a $3 Holton Hall fee and a $5 to $15 academic services fee. The recommendation included a written justification and financial impact report for both fees.

THE CARDS FELL — ACKER had a royal flush which he dealt from the bottom of the deck, and the students of K-State were left to play 47-card pick up.

Already facing a $6.75 increase (from $9.75 to $16.50) to pay for a proposed coliseum, a 20 percent increase in tuition and a $40 increase in on-campus housing, students will now face an additional $8 to $18 fee for the fall semester.

No, in comparison to everything else, the increase is not that much. And with state coffers that continue to run dry, there's no doubt that students will continue to pay more for their education.

I have no qualms that an academic services fee is needed to provide money for library and equipment acquisitions. If the extra fee is for the benefit of the campus, it's worth supporting.

However, President Acker's tight-lipped approach in bringing the fee before the regents was a disservice to the students of this campus. Such a fee should be openly discussed, not limited to an elite group chosen by the administration.

MOREOVER, the follow-the-leader approach should not be taken, which it was, in advocating a nearly identical fee as the University of Kansas. We should have the courtesy of knowing what this campus needs, not what KU thinks it should have.

Pulling a surprise from under his sleeve was a tacky move by Acker. It was a year ago when discussion arose over proposed lab fees. Yet it took until April 15 of this year to finally unveil a concrete proposal for a fee assessment.

The students of this campus deserve to be kept informed about fees they will be paying and should also have a significant amount of input into the issue. A referendum is not the answer, but both student and faculty senates should be used to gather input and debate the matter at hand.

An open policy is the best way to handle any card game. The person who deals from the bottom of the deck usually finds himself sitting with his back to the wall.

Double jeopardy for aid wrong...

Editor,

Finally, a controversy on campus worth using newsprint for! I am referring, of course, to Student Senate's misguided vote in favor of the Solomon Amendment. Several issues must be clarified in regard to Kipp Exline's letter, "Senate vote on resolution 'correct'" and John Kohler's column, "Explaining 'Solomon.'"

First, there are other issues to draft registration than whether one has three minutes to fill out a card. Two close friends of mine have been or are being prosecuted for not registering because they do not wish to be pawns in the United States' threats to the Soviet Union. Also they believe our civil liberties are threatened by the militaristic nature of our society. The amendment is a good example of the latter.

That the Solomon Amendment threatens civil liberties is an argument completely ignored by Kohler. If the courts wish to sentence my friends to a loss of financial aid, then there is no problem. They should not, however, be required to incriminate themselves, or be punished twice for the same crime — once by the courts, and once, without trial, by their financial aid office.

If our senate wishes to take a stand against constitutional government, then I wish they would be more direct about it. It is for these reasons I want to add my name to the growing list urging a veto of the resolution by Student Body President Jerry Katlin.

...'checks and balances' ignored

Editor,

After just finishing reading John Kohler's guest column, "Explaining 'Solomon,'" my first reaction can only be one of astonishment and wonder. Thank you so much for telling us, individuals opposed to the Solomon Amendment, that we are wrong. Period!

Kohler's whole attitude toward government and the way it should be run makes me extremely thankful to the men and women who set up our form of government in the first place. Why? Let's just quote some of Kohler's column.

"Senate's position was communicated to the ASK Legislative Assembly April 16, which adopted a position in opposition to the Solomon Amendment. So for practical purposes, further student government action is moot."

The concept of checks and balances were put into our form of government just for people such as Kohler.

Oh, and with no intention of belittling Kohler, by the way he formulates logical arguments, I would recommend he gives up pre-law and try something less strenuous — like removing himself from "our" student government.

Vetoing 'Solomon'

A rare occasion occurs when a student body president receives a great amount of feedback concerning a student issue. However, the resolution in support of the Solomon Amendment, passed by Student Senate, allowed me to receive direct student input on this controversial issue.

Granted, the defeated side is the first to voice their concerns and I took this into consideration when making my decision. Following the passage of the resolution in support of the amendment, a flood of student opinion was brought to my attention in the form of phone calls, letters, visits to my office and petitions.

The prevailing side also had the opportunity to have its voice heard. Letters to the editor of the Collegian and the Monday editorial by Doug Ward, editor, conveyed the strong possibility a veto was an option of the student body president.

Yet, following this, I still heard very little from students who supported the resolution.

IT WOULD BE IMPOSSIBLE for me to poll every student on campus concerning the Solomon Amendment. Therefore, I need to rely on those students who I did get the opportunity to talk with. This is the closest I can get to a representative form of government, which goes further than trying to guess the feelings of those I represent.

A great number of students have called, visited or written to express their concern regarding senate's position, and I am grateful they have done so. Student input is a vital part of student government and I encourage students to continue to voice their sentiments regarding future issues which senate will face.

Since a large majority of the opinions voiced were in opposition to the resolution, I feel a clear consensus has not developed; therefore, the stand taken by senate is not appropriate at this time. More research of the issue is needed, and for this reason I cannot sign the resolution in support of the Solomon Amendment.

In this veto message, I have not touched on the subject of whether or not there is a justification for the Solomon Amendment. I feel both sides have their reasons for supporting or opposing the resolution. For the simple fact there is not clear mandate on campus, students at K-State, through the actions of their elected leaders, should not go on record in favor of the Solomon Amendment.

(Editor's note: Jerry Katlin is the K-State student body president.)

Campus news at a glance

Russell, Turner win Truman scholarships

For the second year in a row, two K-State students have been named winners of Harry S. Truman Scholarships. This year's scholars are Brad Russell, sophomore in speech, political science and pre-law, and Tracy Turner, sophomore in economics, political science and pre-law.

Only one Truman scholar is named for each state. Russell was named from Kansas and Turner was an at-large recipient.

The scholarships, established by Congress as a memorial to the late President Truman, are awarded to sophomores planning government careers in public service. Each scholar receives up to $20,000 for a maximum of four years of study. The scholarships begin next fall.

Scholarship recipients must submit an essay for the competition. Turner's essay was "Recognition of PLO: A Step Toward Peace" and Turner's was "Corporate Responsibility: A Return to Carthage?"

Colleges benefit from phone calls to alumni

The Colleges of Education and College of Architecture and Design have completed their portions of the University Telefund, raising funds primarily for student scholarships.

During the telefund, students and faculty from seven different colleges call alumni to solicit pledges.

The College of Education raised $26,117 in pledges which, added to the fall telefund, give $43,836 raised during the academic year — nearly $12,000 more than the last telefund in 1981.

The College of Architecture and Design raised $10,750 in pledges and when added to the fall total, results in $19,522 raised, nearly $4,000 more than in 1981.

Grad student honored by newspaper group

Alan Boyer, graduate in journalism and mass communications, has been named a Gannett Foundation Scholar for the 1983-84 academic year.

Boyer, one of 31 recipients to be selected in nationwide competition, is recipient of a $3,000 scholarship offered by the Gannett Foundation. The scholarship is based on undergraduate and graduate merit, professional experience and commitment to journalism.

Boyer, also a graduate teaching assistant in the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, has held internships at the Atlanta Constitution and Springfield (Mo.) Newspapers, Inc., both Gannett publications.

Bike ride to raise funds for diabetes group

Manhattan Chapter of the American Diabetes Association is sponsoring its annual 20-mile bike ride to raise money for research and education programs and to send diabetic children to summer camp.

The ride is scheduled for 9 a.m. to noon Saturday from the northwest gravel parking lot adjacent to the ball diamond at CiCo Park. Maps of the route will be distributed that morning. Sponsor sheets are available at various Manhattan businesses.

Alumni, guests to attend three reunions

More than 400 alumni and their guests are scheduled to be on campus Thursday and Friday to attend the Alumni Association's annual spring reunions.

The classes of 1933, 1938 and 1943 will gather for their 50th, 45th and 40th reunions, respectively. They will be joined by members of Golden K Club — graduates more than 50 years ago.

In addition, the Alumni Association's Alumni Fellows Program is being initiated this year. The program, sponsored by the Council of Academic Deans, the president's office and Alumni Association, is designed to recognize alumni who have distinguished themselves in their careers.

Alumni fellows will have their own schedule of events, but will attend the All Grads Banquet Friday evening to hear President Duane Acker's annual "State of the University" address.

Continuing Education staff receives honors

University officials recently received several awards from the National University Continuing Education Association, which represents 300 colleges and universities. Each year the organization recognizes outstanding programming achievements at its member institutions.

The Division of Conferences and Institutes presented its Faculty Service Award to Daniel Fung, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, for his workshop in rapid methods and automation in microbiology.

Receiving an excellence award were the Continuing Education personnel who operate Fort Riley's PRIDE Center: William Lockhart, assistant professor of Continuing Education, Ruth Stanley, Continuing Education instructor, and Margaret Hlavacek, Continuing Education temporary assistant instructor.

Carol Smith, Continuing Education conference coordinator, and Mary Sparks, public information coordinator, were presented a first-time award for their creative marketing of the Kansas Folklife Festival. Smith and artist Marijana Grisnik also received recognition for the 1982 Folklife poster.

Others honored for their work were Rob Bower and Steve Falen of the Office of University Publications, and Ted Wischropp, Continuing Education development director, for their design of Continuing Education's new logo; and Melinda Sinn, program coordinator for the Kansas Regents Telenet, received recognition for an article on the telenet system.

The KSU Jazz Sextet... performed at Tuesday's nooner in the Union Catskeller, playing pieces ranging from Dizzie Gillespie to Chuck Mangione.

Band's potential surfaces in Nooner

By TANYA BRANSON
Arts and Entertainment Editor

It was like a restraining order had clapped down on the KSU Jazz Sextet at the Nooner Tuesday in the Union Catskeller. But with enough effort and encouragement, the group pried itself open to let loose on some jazz standards, proving itself a promising band.

Starting out slow, yet with obvious potential, the sextet played, "Blues Walker," a tune Clark Terry adopted. Problems with tuning and mixing were evident in this first song, with the brass not quite warmed up and the drums overbearing.

Review

John Schumacher, senior in geology, led the band on the trumpet. Accompanying him were Rick Fleshman, senior in music education, on trombone; Steve Johnson, freshman in electrical engineering, on tenor and soprano sax; Danny Whitsitt, senior in marriage and family counseling, on drums; Mike Offenbecher, senior in electrical engineering, on piano and Kalen Bebermeyer, sophomore in music education, on bass.

"Little Sunflower," a song Chuck Mangione did in his earlier days, showed a definite improvement in evening out competition between the drums and brass, but alas, still no hope for the audience to hear the bass and keyboards. "Little Sunflower" did provide a means for Johnson on soprano sax and Schumacher on fluegelhorn to prove their talents. However, it was talent rehearsed.

A GOOD TRUMPET solo demonstrated Schumacher's skill as a musician. The slow song, "I Remember Clifford," urged Schumacher to smooth out notes like an iron would erase wrinkles.

With an embarrassed air, the group said the next song, "St. Thomas," was a mixture of calypso and pseudo-reggae. No need to be embarrassed. The pseudo stuff was the key to this band. The members started to let loose, relax and have fun.

This song was a turning point in the Nooner and now the band, save a few relapses into regimentation, started to sound like a jazz band should.

Dizzy Gillespie's "A Night in Tunisia" was a brief respite from the pseudo set, touching on Offenbecher's piano ability.

Yea, now we have pseudo again in the funk song, "Watermelon Band." This may have been the best song, with good rhythm (especially on drums) and a good balance between the instruments.

THE COMBO PUT out upbeat, funky jazz, finally not afraid to slip some personality into the song. Maybe the group calls its songs "psuedo" because it's not technical funk or technical reggae, but when was funk and reggae ever technical? When this band forgot to go by-the-book, it was enjoyable and entertaining.

"Freddy the Freeloader" by Miles Davis was performed for Schumacher who evidently likes slow songs. After tapping out "Watermelon Band" before, my foot went dead again.

Then two songs by Wayne Shorter, "Woodchop" and "Beauty and the Beast," gave the band some life again. Now the bass was heard and it was easy to surmise Bebermeyer must be the player with the most natural ability. All members played their best and turned thoughts of potential talent into positive proof.

Offenbecher on piano and Johnson on soprano sax should be commended for their musical dialog in "Beauty and the Beast."

The troupe ended with the old Duke Ellington standard, "Take the A Train." They had earned the right to play it.

Marketability key to success in job search

Students should market themselves through complete job searches if they expect to land the types of jobs they want after graduation.

For most candidates this will include the mailing of letters and resumes and, when possible, undergoing on-campus interviews.

This involves planning ahead and developing marketable skills, Jim Akin, associate director of career planning and placement, said.

The Career Planning and Placement Center assists students in planning their careers, developing resumes and investigating the job market.

Students should begin assessing interests and developing skills as freshmen, Akin said. At the center, students are assisted in developing individual resumes based upon their interests and skills.

"The resume has to relate to them personally," he said. "It is important not to grab someone else's resume, copy it and send it out. No one knows your skills better than you — develop your own resume."

He said students should develop marketable skills.

House committee OKs $21 million for utilities, delays work-study vote

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The House Ways and Means Committee approved Tuesday $21 million, representing a 10 percent increase, for utility costs at the state university system next year. However, the panel delayed a final decision on a new work-study program for college students.

Except for that item, the committee completed its work on budget issues for the seven institutions under the control of the Kansas Board of Regents. The two major items considered were utility funding and the proposed $700,000 program by Gov. John Carlin to allow students to obtain jobs in private industry while attending school.

For the current fiscal year, which ends June 30, the committee provided an additional $1.9 million for the seven Regents schools to pay for utilities. With that extra money, the total utility budget for fiscal year 1983 will be $19.3 million.

Next, the panel agreed to provide a 10 percent increase for utility budgets in the upcoming fiscal year. The total cost for all schools will be $21.2 million.

Carlin had recommended a 15 percent increase for next year's utility budget. That would have cost a total of $22.2 million.

The committee agreed to the 10 percent increase, noting that 1983 utility costs were estimated to be 9.6 percent above 1982 amounts.

ON THE WORK-STUDY program, the panel authorized its establishment at the seven Regents schools but put off a decision on how much, if any, state money will be provided to fund it.

Repeated attempts to provide some money, from $280,000 to $700,000, were rejected. Finally, committee members agreed to tie the program's funding to increases provided for student salaries. Each of the six universities and the Kansas Technical Institute will have the option of funding the new workstudy program with salary increase money or not establishing the program an permitting student salaries to rise.

"If there is no salary increase, then there would be no work study program," said Rep. Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha.

THE COMMITTEE WILL take up the issue of salary increases, both for students working at the universities and other state employees, in a separate bill. There is talk among some lawmakers of freezing salaries and allowing no increase next year. A 2 percent increase in student salaries would provide about $120,000 for the work-study program.

Carlin originally recommended $700,000 for the new program, saying it would provide valuable training for students while helping them to pay for their education. The House, when it first took up the Regents budget, approved $562,000 for the program but the Senate deleted all the funding.

"There seems to be support for the program, but concern over the dollars in light of our financial sitution," said Rep. Bill Bunten, R-Topeka, the committee chairman. The panel spent about two hours considering the program.

Also Tuesday, the committee approved $25,000 for a new permanent fund for the Board of Regents to help pay the costs of selecting presidents and chancellors at any of the state universities. The committee set a $12,500 limit on the amount that any school could spend from the fund for recruitment and selection of a new chief administrator.

The committee established the fund in response to the recent retirement of the president of Wichita State University and the resignation of the president of Pittsburg State.

Firebreaks

Zero and former member of the National Security Council.

Believing that an informed and involved public would affect national policies on preventing nuclear war, Ground Zero works in cities and communities nationwide, providing educational materials on nuclear war issues.

Locally, the Other Manhattan Project (OMP) takes charge of creating public awareness about the threat of nuclear war and different ways of preventing it. Firebreaks is its main concern for this month.

"THE GROUP FEELS the seriousness of the threat of nuclear war. We believe that each of us should openly discuss the issue, feel responsible and get involved in preventing such war from happening," Dan Curtis, associate professor in math and a member of OMP's steering committee, said. "Firebreaks could be a means of openly discussing nuclear issues."

Bates joined OMP and later became actively involved as its coordinator after listening to Daniel Ellsberg in the 1982 Lou Douglas Lecture Series, she said. She was particularly influenced when Ellsberg said every person matters and could affect legislation.

"I think every American of my age — I'm in my 30s — has grown up in a nuclear age and accepts it as a fact of life. And we feel powerless to change," Bates said. "But after hearing Ellsberg, I changed my mind. I felt different. I felt I could do something. Also, I realize that we're a part of a world village."

"I'M ENCOURAGED to see people with enough courage to step beyond their fears and take positive steps on matters they believe in. It's just a process of peace work," Bates added.

Shaun Moore, visiting professor of architecture from Oxford, England, and OMP member, said he thinks the nuclear war threat is today's most important issue.

"I feel that instead of harboring fears, every individual must come out of his fears and get personally involved in finding ways to prevent nuclear war...before it's too late," Moore said.

Firebreaks is being played this month in more than 1,000 cities and communities across the country. The game, which began April 4, is played by OMP members and several Manhattan residents on Mondays. The players meet at the College Avenue United Methodist Church and sessions last an hour to an hour and a half.

Eight people can play, but it will be more interesting if there are 10 to 25 players, Curtis said.

THIS WAR/PEACE GAME, based on a mock international crisis, is set during April 1988. There are four sessions and in each, players make one "move." The main protagonists are the United States (in blue-inked materials) and the Soviet Union (in red-inked materials).

Players divide into either the U.S. or Soviet Union team and are given prepared Firebreaks game kits with background materials to represent the two national perspectives. Each team has a leader.

With a chart or a map, the team leader presents the scenario and reads the situation report for the session. The mock scenario and situation show the military strategies deployed by the team's country in some parts of the world where conflicts arise.

The players, taking the role of top advisers to the head of state, are given three possible courses of action for their country. They discuss and debate what actions they think are advisable and recommend one of the three.

After each team chooses its option, the leader reads the decision of the head of state. It is possible that the team's decision may not be the same as the head of state's.

THAT DECISION will be the basis for the scenario of the next session. Three moves have been played and the remaining move will be on April 25.

Players seem to have gained something out of the experience.

To Sandy Clay, Manhattan resident and OMP member, Firebreaks is a stimulating mental exercise.

"I was on the Russian side and it was interesting to see how the American side reacted. From our role-play and discussion I could easily see how things could escalate out of control," Clay said.

Neil Schanker, instructor of continuing education and OMP steering committee member, said he likes being on the Russian team. He also finds it interesting to look at the situation from the Russian perspective and negative attitude toward capitalism.

"In everyday life, we always see the American viewpoint. It was something fresh and new, to look at things from the Russian side for a change," Schanker said.

He also said the options made him realize how difficult world politics can be.

Moore finds the Firebreaks statistical information up-to-date and accurate. He cited figures on the six countries known to have nuclear weapons. These countries are the United States, Soviet Union, Great Britain, France, China and India.

"STATISTICS SOMETIMES are misleading. Figures taken out of context can lead to misleading interpretations in the balance of power of weaponry," Moore said. "Take, for example, the delivery systems of the two superpowers. The U.S.S.R. claims to have more in number than the United States. But in terms of quality and sophistication, the U.S. leads. (The Soviet Union has 2,490 while the United States has 2,032, according to Firebreaks statistics.) But overall, I still believe that there is a balance of superior weaponry between the two."

Firebreaks has made Bates think more of the nuclear situation and its bearing on the entire world. It has also made her aware of how complicated political realities are.

"But the game has reassured me that decisions still can and should be fair and just," she said.

As the game draws to its close next week, Curtis said he hopes the attendance will be more than the 10 or 12 people who regularly attend the session. He finds public response disappointing.

Before Firebreaks started earlier this month, OMP sent 25 letters to Manhattan organizations. Response came from only one church organization.

"People seem to be apathetic about it. They don't want to talk about nuclear issues. I don't really understand why," Curtis said. "It might be a sense of powerlessness. They think that it's beyond them. If they only realize that they and their involvement matter much."

Schanker said he thinks people don't seem to care, and have fatalistic attitudes.

"Like, what the heck, we might be dead tomorrow. And this leads to apathy toward the issue and nervousness about the mention of it," he said.

To Moore, the low public response may be partially due to popular beliefs there is little that can be done to influence the decision of government.

"Also, people are too frightened about the possibilities and choose not to be involved with it with the hope that in closing their eyes, it might go away," Moore said.

He said the game gave him a deeper insight into the nuclear issue. In the past wars, he said, there had always been a winner and a loser. But in this kind of war, he said, no one is a winner.

Death toll from embassy blast rises

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Searchers recovered six more bodies from the bomb-shattered U.S. Embassy Tuesday and continued their grim task, with at least 47 people believed killed in the worst attack ever on a U.S. facility here.

There were 24 confirmed deaths and 23 other people were missing and presumed dead.

Embassy spokesman John Reid said eight Americans were confirmed dead and eight others were missing from the massive explosion at lunchtime Monday. Among the confirmed dead was Robert Clayton Ames, the CIA's Near East and South Asian analyst, officials said in Washington in a rare case of naming a CIA agent who worked abroad.

There was no clear picture of how the attack was carried out, but most accounts said a terrorist drove an explosives-laden vehicle into the compound and perished in the blast.

Ten Lebanese embassy employees, visa applicants and visitors were confirmed dead, while 20 others were missing, said Reid. The 47th victim listed was an embassy visitor of unknown nationality, he said.

The privately owned Central News Agency said the bombing was an attempt to kill U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib and his assistant Morris Draper. It quoted unnamed government officials as saying Habib and Draper had been scheduled to be at the embassy when the bomb exploded at 1:05 p.m., but were delayed by talks with Lebanese leaders at the presidential palace in suburban Baabda. U.S. Embassy officials were not available for comment on that report.

Habib went to the embassy at midday Tuesday and later flew to Israel. He did not attend Tuesday's session of the U.S.Israeli-Lebanese talks on troop withdrawals from Lebanon, but Draper did. After the meeting at Netanya, Israel, Draper said the bombing "just makes us more determined to press on" for an agreement.

After Reid's announcement, workers recovered six more badly mutilated bodies and parts of bodies from the destroyed embassy cafeteria, but it was not clear how that affected the casualty count.

Police said 120 people were wounded in the explosion, including 22 Americans.

The bodies were hauled from beneath chunks of masonry and concrete left in huge piles by the bomb, which exploded at lunchtime Monday. It blasted off the center facade, collapsed all seven floors in the central section and caused heavy damage to the two wings.

A crane lifted workers on a platform to the fifth-floor level where they removed a torso that could be seen from the street. The bodies were wrapped in plastic sheets and taken away in ambulances.

U.S. Marines, Navy personnel and other searchers used a steamshovel and two backhoes to dig through the devastation.

A squad of Marines raised the stars and stripes at sunrise Tuesday on a flagpole that escaped the blast, and survivors returned to the scene where they watched the search and recounted their nightmare.

Consular officer Lisa Piasik said the blast struck just as she got to the fifth floor of the embassy for her weekly Arabic lesson. Like most of the section where she works, her first floor office was destroyed.

"If I'd been there ..." she said, her voice trailing off.

A fanatic Lebanese Shiite group called Moslem Holy War claimed responsibility. Two other unknown groups also said they had bombed the embassy, but police blamed the Shiites.

In Tehran, Foreign Minister Ali Kabra Velayiati was quoted by the official news agency as denying any involvement by Iran.

Characters cause confusion in film

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

One of the most popular trends in the cinema is to show law enforcement officials on the take. The good guys usually get to "blow away" these men collecting dirty money, while the audience howls in approval.

Review

Tony Richardson's "The Border" has the pretense of being much more than that by attempting to develop in great detail the character of a border patrolman (Jack Nicholson). Instead of defining his character more clearly, though, the film poses more questions about him than it answers.

For example, Nicholson's dim-witted wife (Valerie Perrine) buys everything in sight in an effort to make her husband happy. She tells him, "We don't have to worry about paying...I have a charge account." She offers him TV dinners while mooning over becoming a TV star.

However, we never find out why she is like this. Nicholson seems as repelled by her banality as the audience, so why they were together in the first place remains a mystery. When he reacts against her fantasies, she responds as if she has never seen him act against her before.

WE DON'T find out what Nicholson was like before and this contributes to one of the main problems of the film. The audience is suddenly dropped into a situation that doesn't quite make sense, and the filmmakers don't supply any answers.

After stumbling upon a group of patrolmen who smuggle Mexicans across the border, occasionally murdering those who try to carry drugs, Nicholson apparently undergoes a change. Since his character hadn't been developed so he could be identified with, all the anguish he goes through means virtually nothing.

Nicholson becomes very concerned with a Mexican woman for reasons that remain, at best, murky. Presumably he becomes infatuated with her after she returns his hubcaps, which her brother had stolen. To Nicholson, she becomes a symbol of integrity in the squalor and deprivation surrounding her.

THE FILM'S climax develops when Nicholson tries to retrieve the woman's missing child. The baby was stolen to be sold into adoption. Nicholson then gets to dispatch the bad guys in fairly routine fashion as the filmmakers linger over the violence — an earth mover slowly drops its shovel, gradually crushing a corrupt patrolman and the ringleader runs into a fence, discharging a shotgun in his face.

The screenplay seems confused as to what this film is about. Never does the film keep a consistent focus for more than a few minutes at a time before shifting to a different idea.

Harvey Keitel and Warren Oates are completely wasted in the roles of border patrolmen on the take. They are given little to do except look like ignorant Southerners.

Staff/John Sleezer

The accumulation of a full night's drawing session by Tod Machin. His collection of "Oz" memorabilia complements his creative abilities.

Mr. 'Oz'
Tod Machin

By JOY CULVER
Staff Writer

Kansas, the Land of Oz (Aaahs), may have proclaimed Highway 54 its "Yellow Brick Road," but a pair of original ruby slippers does not exist in the state.

However, if Tod Machin, senior in art, has his way, that may change. He is in the process of reconstructing a pair identical to one of the original pairs. They may soon be finished and located in Manhattan.

Machin, an avid fan and collector of souvenirs from "The Wizard of Oz," has acquired a large collection of Oz items. One room in his attic apartment is stuffed to the ceiling with pictures, costumes, posters, autographs and his personal artwork.

A life-size mannequin attired in a "Glenda the Good Witch" costume is positioned in the corner. Machin hired a friend, a fashion design major, to make the costume. Currently he is completing a crown and magic wand to complement the costume.

Although he has loved the movie since his childhood, Machin did not become an avid collector until three years ago. After a display of costumes and relics from the movie was shown in Wichita, he was hooked.

"THIS DISPLAY was the first time an original pair of ruby slippers set foot in Kansas," Machin said.

Machin has researched the movie and many of the costumes. For a costume history class, he wrote a 20-page term paper about the design and history of the ruby slippers. He said the slippers are probably the most sought-after motion picture costume item. The last pair was auctioned off for $12,000.

Ten original pairs, varying in sizes, were made for the film. Through his research, Machin has discovered the existence of six pairs, but said there are probably more. Reasons for the different sizes include the necessity of having a pair for Judy Garland, possibly more than one since she may have grown during the filming; a pair for her stand-in; one for the witch and extras for filming.

"I thought they (the slippers) were the most majestic thing," Machin said. "I was so crushed to see they were made of sequins."

FROM HIS RESEARCH, Machin has begun making a pair of the ruby slippers identical to those used in the movie. The shoes fit a girl on campus who is the same height Garland was during the filming, he said. Plans to make a gingham costume identical to the Garland's dress in the movie, and in proportion to this same girl, are also in the works.

Machin has learned about many aspects of the movie and costumes from reading the "Making of the Wizard of Oz," by Aljean Harmetz.

"I'm forever reading that," he said.

Machin said his ultimate goal is to own as many of the original costumes as possible. He does not own any originals yet, but keeps close contacts about places he might be able to purchase them. Meanwhile, Machin is making replicas of the costumes.

"Aside from Dorothy, Glenda the Good Witch is my favorite," Machin said. "I had a terrible obsession with Glenda for a long time. That's why the Glenda dress had to be constructed."

Machin in his "Wizard of Oz" room, complete with "Glenda, the Good Witch" costume.

Machin is a member of the International Wizard of Oz Club and keeps in contact with many of the club's members. As a member, he has contacted and corresponds with several of the cast members from the movie. Ray Bolger, the Scarecrow, and Margaret Hamilton, the Wicked Witch, have written back to him and sent autographs and other movie items.

A replica of Dorothy's ruby slippers.

HE HAS corresponded with 15 of the 124 munchkins used in the movie, three of whom have become close personal friends of his. Machin met one who traveled from California to see her daughter at Fort Riley. The woman came to Manhattan to meet Machin.

Machin does not own a film version of the movie, but has copies on VHS and Betamax. During the past three years, he has watched the movie more than 20 times, in addition to the several times he watched during his childhood. He does not own equipment for showing his VHS and Betamax versions, but can go where such equipment is available.

"The closest place is Wal-Mart," Machin said. "If I want to watch it, I can take my tapes there and sit in front of a TV. But there's nothing like watching it on the big screen."

FOR THE SILVER anniversary television showing of the movie earlier this year, Machin was asked to put up a display in Manhattan Public Library. In his display, he used mostly eye-catching items to attract childrens' attention rather than using some of his rare pieces. While the display was up, he went to watch the children's reaction.

"It brought tears to my eyes," Machin said. "There were two little girls talking to me when I was taking it down. They made it all worthwhile."

Because of his strong interest in the film, many "Wizard of Oz" features spill over into his personal artwork. He has drawn a collection of portraits of Dorothy, Scarecrow, Tinman, Lion and the wizard for a class assignment. When he did the portraits, he drew them all in one night because he

Baking institute's expansion to aid education, research

Using funds left over from its relocation in Manhattan, the American Institute of Baking (AIB) is adding on to the east side of its building at 1213 Baker's Way.

AIB is a service organization for the food and baking industry and provides education and research, Paul Klover, AIB treasurer, said.

AIB moved to Manhattan from Chicago in 1978 because "the institute had lost some of its vitality. It just was not getting the job done," Klover said.

Manhattan was chosen as the new site because of the proximity of K-State, the Department of Grain Science and Industry and its laboratories, Klover said.

"We have a good working relationship with the University. We are involved in a limited amount of cooperative research activity," he said.

AIB and K-State have no formal ties, but the 750 students who attend the institute each year pay fees to have access to Lafene Student Health Center and Washburn Recreation Complex.

The institute offers a variety of courses, the shortest of which is three days and the longest about 19 weeks. Students come from all parts of the United States and the world to attend, Klover said.

AIB has outgrown its current building and is spending $850,000 for the addition.

"We've expanded to the point that, bringing in different kinds of equipment used in the food industry, we just ran out of room," Klover said.

The expansion will house offices, an in-store bakery and classrooms, now in the main building, and should be completed by Dec. 1, Klover said.

Construction is being funded by remnants of a relocation fund drive in 1977, Klover said. Most of the institute's income comes from students' tuition.

"We have a tuition for each of our courses that we offer. Seventy-five percent of our income is generated through course offerings, research and a sanitation inspection service," he said. "The other 25 percent will come in from investment income, membership contributions and gifts."

The institute has a membership of about 600 companies and individuals, who receive AIB publications, a list of course offerings and a price break when attending courses, Klover said.

CRIME STOPPERS 539-7777 CONFIDENTIALLY

This week's Crime Stoppers crime-of-the-week involves the theft of a go-cart.

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, a non-profit organization, provides details of an unsolved crime each week. Citizens are encouraged to provide information needed to assist police in solving this and other crimes. Informants, who will remain anonymous, can receive cash rewards up to $1,000.

Sometime between 6:30 p.m. April 2 and 1:15 p.m. April 3, a go-cart was stolen in the area of Northcrest Trailer Court, located south of Manhattan on Hunter's Island. The go-cart was stored under a canvas tarp and concealed by a wood pile.

The yellow and orange go-cart was described as a Sears brand, equipped with mag-style wheels and a five-horsepower Tecumseh motor. It was valued at $400.

Anyone with information on this crime, location of stolen property or information on any other crime should call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777.

Wart day provides sizzling service for students

Staff/John Sleezer

Freezing the warts... Warts are removed at Lafene Student Health Center by freezing them with liquid nitrogen.

By BRENDA ROTTINGHAUS
Collegian Reporter

A faint sizzle — then a tiny puff of white steam rises from the open palm.

The masculine face registers a twinge of pain and looks away.

"You okay?" Mary Ellen Guest, practical nurse at Lafene Student Health Center, asks.

This male is one of an average 45 students who come to Lafene on Thursdays for "Wart Day" to have warts treated with a freezing process using liquid nitrogen.

The Wart Clinic is a service provided to students in the health fees they pay, according to Marilyn Campbell, director of clinic nurses at Lafene. It has been in operation for more than 10 years.

APPROXIMATELY 1,700 students have come in for treatment since July 1, 1982. Between July 1, 1981 and June 30, 1982, almost 1,900 students were treated.

The clinic is conducted only on Thursdays because it is not feasible to keep liquid nitrogen around every day because it evaporates rapidly, Roger Birnbaum, administrative assistant, said.

Approximately one quart of the chemical is on hand each Thursday. This amount, which would cost less than $1, is obtained from the physics department at no charge.

Warts are caused by a virus, Dr. Thomas Ryan, staff physician, said. They can be spread on the same person from surface to surface or from person to person — although this is not as common.

They can occur on any part of the body, but planters warts, the most common type, occur most frequently on the soles of the feet and the palms of the hand, Ryan said.

CURRENTLY, THERE ARE many ways to clear them up, he said, "from freezing them, to acid plasters, to simply thinking them away."

Ryan explained some people can get rid of their warts by simply thinking bad thoughts about them.

He added that Lafene tries to use treatment methods that will not leave scars such as cutting or burning might do.

"Curing warts is not as easy," he said, indicating that they recur 50 percent of the time.

It takes time, but, according to Ryan, they will frequently clear up and go away on their own. He also noted they are less fre-

Softball team splits double-header with Kansas

K-State and the University of Kansas split a softball double-header Tuesday at CiCo Park. K-State won the first game 2-1, while KU took the second game 7-0.

K-State was held to five hits in the first game, but got two in each of the third and fourth innings. Those hits resulted in one run each inning, which were all the Wildcats needed to beat the Jayhawks.

The Wildcats' run in the third came when right fielder Leslie Taylor led off with a single, advanced to second on pitcher Janel Anderson's sacrifice bunt and went to third on a pop fly to left field by third baseman Rachelle Borders. Taylor scored on the second single of the inning — a shot to left field by second baseman Cathy Hinson.

K-State's second run came in the next inning when shortstop Kelly Scoles singled to left to lead off the inning and advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt by center fielder Pam Hentzler. Catcher Annette Kirkham sent Scoles to third with another single, and left fielder Cindy Wasinger collected an RBI with a ground out that sent Scoles home.

KU scored its only run in the sixth, as the Jayhawks pounded out three singles. Pam Cox rapped a single with one out and was joined on the basepath by teammate Becky Ascencio, who also got a single. K-State center fielder Hentzler saved the game for the 'Cats at this point, making a shoestring catch of a ball hit by KU pitcher Tracy Bunge which could have been a home run had it gone by her.

The Wildcats still weren't out of the inning, though, as Liz Commino walked to load

Tennis teams tumble; men fall to Baker, women lose to KU

Staff/Hurriyet Aydogan

Determination... K-State's No. 1 singles player Christel Felder returns a volley during the team's match against the University of Kansas on Tuesday. K-State lost to KU, 8-1.

Lack of consistency and experience kept the men's and women's tennis teams from regaining winning form Tuesday as the University of Kansas defeated the women 8-1 at the Washburn Courts while the men lost a heartbreaker against Baker University.

The singles bracket proved to be disastrous for the women, as they lost all six matches with the 'Hawks.

In the No. 1 singles bracket, Christel Felder lost a tough match to KU's Stephanie Dickey, 7-5, 3-6, 6-4. Like Felder, Tammie Peugh also went three sets, losing to Christine Parr, 5-7, 6-2, 7-5. Carlye Madelen continued the 'Cats' streak of losses as she dropped a match to the 'Hawks' Laura Runnels, 6-2, 6-3.

K-State continued to struggle as Sue Peugh, Lisa Creighton and Beth Nemac all finished the afternoon with losses. Peugh, the younger sister of Tammie, was defeated by KU's Maureen Gilfoil, 6-2, 6-1; Creighton was whipped by Debbie Stevens, 6-3, 6-2; and Nemac lost to the Jayhawks' Debbie Coleman, 6-2, 6-1.

The doubles competition didn't get any better as K-State dropped two out of three matches. Nemac and Laurie Rorabaugh got the Wildcats' only win of the day, defeating Coleman and Stevens, 6-2, 6-3, to take the No. 3 doubles competition. Felder and Madelen, K-State's No. 1 doubles team, was again unable to hold off its opponents, losing to Parr and Dickey, 6-3, 6-7, 6-4.

On the men's side, the matchup with Baker was even harder to take as K-State lost a disappointing 5-4 decision.

The men fared much better in the singles bracket, winning three of six matches. No. 1 singles player Jeff Jackard started the 'Cats attack as he squeaked by Doug Kaut, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1. Curt Thompson, No. 2 singles, had a much easier time as he defeated Pat Glaunert, 6-1, 6-0.

The Wildcat streak stopped momentarily as Gary Hassenflu and Kris James were both defeated. Hassenflu lost a match to Davis Johnson, 5-7, 7-6, 7-6, while James was beaten by Greg Faulkner, 7-5, 6-4.

Mark Hassenflu ended K-State's streak of victories in the singles when he defeated the Baker Wildcats' Willie Allenbaum, 3-6, 6-2, 6-4.

In doubles, K-State was unable to regain its momentum from the singles bracket, losing two of three matches. Gary Hassenflu and Thompson were successful for the 'Cats as they ripped Baker's Tracy Huke and Kaut, 6-1, 6-0.

The next matchup for both teams will be Thursday when the men take on KU in Lawrence. The women's team will travel to Lincoln, Neb., on Friday to battle the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

KU, WSU defeat women golfers

After a period of dismal weather, the women's golf team finally got the chance to compete after being laid off for two weeks.

The layoff proved harmful to the women's performance as K-State finished third in the Kansas Mini Invitational in Lawrence on Monday.

According to women's coach Lila Levin, the tournament was used as preparation for the forthcoming Big Eight tournament.

"The girls haven't been able to practice as much as we'd like because of the weather," Levin said. "I had intended this tournament to be just one more round of competition before the Big Eight tournament next Monday."

The University of Kansas won the invitational with a stroke total of 344, Wichita State finished second with 363 and K-State rounded out the scoring with 381.

Sharry Dercher was the leading scorer for K-State with an 18-hole score of 90. Terri Alexander and Becky Stromgren finished second and third, respectively, with 93 and 98. Anne Hegarty ended K-State scoring with a 100.

Levin said errors were the key to the 'Cats' third-place finish.

"The women made some costly mistakes on the course yesterday that prevented better scores," Levin said. "I had hoped for better play from them, but I'm keeping in mind that the team is made up of four freshmen and only one senior."

The team will take a five-day vacation before heading for the Big Eight women's golf tournament, scheduled for Monday through Wednesday at Quail Creek Golf Course in Oklahoma City.

Lady 'Cats sign Thomas

Two-time Parade all-American Carlisa Thomas from Jacksonville, Fla., has signed a national letter-of-intent with the K-State women's basketball squad.

The two second-team Parade all-American honors are just part of the awards the Jean Ribault High School senior has amassed in her three-year career for the Trojanettes.

The 5-10 guard averaged 20.5 points, 18.3 rebounds and 14.8 assists in leading Ribault to a 28-3 record this season. She accumulated a whopping 1,817 points, 1,605 rebounds, and 1,224 assists in three seasons.

A two-time Street & Smith magazine all-American, Thomas also garnered all-city, all-conference and all-state honors three years in a row. She also was the team MVP and was Jacksonville (Florida) Times Union player-of-the-year each of those three years. After her senior campaign, the Boys Club of Greater Jacksonville chose her for its prestigious athlete-of-the year award.

"She's awesome," head coach Lynn Hickey said. "Carlisa is one of the finest young athletes I've ever seen. She has the talents to play all three positions right now. We plan on using her as a guard, but she'll have to play forward."

The three-year letterwinner not only earned praise from Hickey for basketball, but also in volleyball and track.

"Carlisa is the type of player who can make or break your recruiting season. Obviously, she's made ours."

Thomas joins 6-2 senior Sue Leiding, who signed with the Lady 'Cats last week, as K-State's second signee.

K-State baseball gets boost with altered tourney format

From wire and staff reports

The spring rains that have washed out much of the baseball season have turned out to be a blessing for the Wildcats.

Because of inclement weather that has canceled games throughout the conference season, the Big Eight has decided to change the format of its post-season tournament.

Steve Hatchell, assistant Big Eight commissioner, said the tournament will be played May 10-15 in Oklahoma City instead of May 12-16. All seven of the teams will be invited instead of only the top four, he said.

Colorado does not have a baseball team.

"We view this as an emergency situation, a one-year thing only," Hatchell said. "The teams have not been able to play enough games for us to determine the true top four teams."

Winner of the conference tournament receives an automatic bid to the national tournament.

The change gives the Wildcats a second chance after starting the conference season with an 0-8 record.

"We're happy to have the opportunity to go," Wildcat coach Dave Baker said. "We want to finish the season good so we'll have a good seed in the tourney. It's nice to have the opportunity, but we want to be in good shape to do well."

And Wildcat shortstop Mark Teague said: "It's a fair way to do it because of the weather. A lot of the teams have played even fewer games than we have. The tournament is a big advantage to us.

There is no way we would be going if we went on our record right now. We don't want to go down there in last place," Teague added.

"We're not far from turning this thing around," Cary Colbert, first baseman, said. "We have a better club than what we've been doing, and I think you'll see a different team against KU this weekend."

the bases. Kim Cobb responded with a single for the Jayhawks, scoring Cox. Anderson got Candi Boyer to ground into a fielder's choice after that, ending the threat.

The Hawks went down in order in the seventh inning, saving the victory for Anderson, who improved her record to 7-8 with the win. KU pitcher Bunge went to 19-4 with the loss.

The second game was less of a contest, as KU pitcher Colette Seitz threw a two-hitter against the Wildcats. The Jayhawks scored three runs in the third inning and four more in the fourth as they got more than they needed to beat the punchless 'Cats.

Anderson took the loss for K-State, giving up six runs — five of them earned — on four hits and four bases-on-balls. Amy Fischer stifled the KU hitters as she came in to relieve Anderson in the fourth inning. Fischer allowed one run — that one in the fourth — on four hits, walking none.

The Jayhawks got leadership from Ascencio at the plate, as the third baseman collected two hits in four at-bats and knocked in three runs. Seitz, Ann Brent and Sheila Connoly all scored two runs for the Jayhawks.

KU's Seitz was the story for the Jayhawks, though, as she held the 'Cats hitless through four complete innings. She struck out one and walked one, while upping her record to 8-1 with the win.

K-State now has a 7-9 record on the season, while KU has had more playing time, acquiring a 27-5 mark. The Wildcats play this afternoon in a double-header against Emporia State in Emporia.

The infamous ninth founding father of SAE—Paddy Murphy—was seen in the greater Manhattan area yesterday. Members of the SAE fraternity were awakened at 2 p.m. Tuesday by the RCPD after reports came in from a truck driver, Elmer Fuddpucker. Elmer said that Paddy had drained the entire contents of his Buckhorn Beer truck while he was relieving himself. Paddy was last seen in Wilma Wacker's field north of Manhattan cow t'ping. An unidentified spokesman for the SAE House has asked that if you have any information pertaining to Paddy's whereabouts to please keep it to yourself.

$50 for a Logo

The Department of Journalism and Mass Communication will observe its 75th Anniversary in 1985. We're going to have a major observance preceded by organization of alumni, etc.

We need a logo now to put on stationery, t-shirts, billboards, the Goodyear Blimp and Mount Rushmore. Your entry, 8" x 10" (mounted or unmounted) turned in to Kedzie 104 by May 10, could win the $50 award for the best entry.

The idea is that we've done a great job of developing mass communicators for the past 75 years and we want to do an even greater job in the future.

Some things to keep in mind:

- We're people oriented (and more than half our majors are women).
- We are involved with all media—newspapers, magazines, radio, television, advertising and public relations, ag journalism, home ec journalism and journalism education in secondary education.
- Accurate, useful information for the public is our major goal.

Eligible: Any Human Being.

Story creates confusion for foreign students

A story written by the College Press Service and printed in Tuesday's Collegian seems to have created some confusion among foreign students on campus.

The facts surrounding the story, concerning restrictions on foreign students, were misinterpreted, according to Allan Brettell, International Student Center adviser.

"We've been getting calls all day" from foreign students concerned about their status, he said.

The story stated that the "Immigration and Naturalization Service announced last week that, as of August, it will give foreign students four years to complete their coursework."

The statement is true to an extent, Brettell said. A foreign student is allowed to stay in the country for the period of time it would normally take to complete the degree he is trying to earn. For example, a student in a bachelor's degree program is allowed to remain in the country for four years to complete the program.

However, if the student needs more time to complete the degree, he can apply for an extension.

The article also stated students would have to return to their home countries before re-registering for visas.

"If they don't finish in that time and they want to continue going to school, they'll have to return to their home countries for two years before re-registering here," an Immigration and Naturalization Service spokeswoman was quoted as saying.

This provision has not yet been adopted, Brettell said. If passed, the Simpson-Mazzoli Act — now in Congress — would require foreign students to return home for two years before reapplying for admission.

Oz

got so involved in the project. He said one of his instructors shares his interest in the film.

"Nobody gets as excited about it as I do," Machin said. "Some of my friends try to, but they fake it."

When Machin graduates, he said he would like to work for the Kansas Department of Travel and Tourism. The department has contacted him about using his collection to help promote the state.

Machin said he is disappointed to see U.S. 54 proclaimed as the "Yellow Brick Road" because the Yellow Brick Road doesn't exist in Kansas. It is part of Oz and is magical and mystical for children. There's nothing special about a highway, he said.

As for himself, Machin said he plans to stay in Kansas, preferably near a college town such as Manhattan.

"I love Kansas," Machin said. "I think it would be sacrilegious for me to live in another state."

Jobs

"There's an increasing emphasis on identifiable marketable skills, in addition to being a quality, all-around person."

Students should market their academic backgrounds, work expriences and other skill areas, such as leadership skills and organizational abilities, according to Akin.

"Participate in organizations and develop leadership skills," Akin said. "Management, sales, marketing and other potential employment frequently require such experiences."

Akin also suggested students study the organization or company of potential employment.

"If you don't know anything about it, the company representative may perceive that you are not interested. Read up on the organization before going to the interview," he said.

Students should use vacations and breaks away from school to investigate the job market.

"Try some drop-in visits with prospective employers," Akin said. "Take advantage of talking informally to various sources. Previous grads, family and faculty are potential pipelines to valuable job information."

Akin said he believes it is important that students have a primary plan and know what they need to do to make themselves most marketable. The primary plan begins in the freshman year and then students should decide what alternatives they have if that plan doesn't work.

"Know what else you can do if plan A doesn't work," he said. "I think students ought to ask themselves what they will do if their first choice doesn't work out."

Employment is slower across the board now, he said, and in a depressed economy people have to work at keeping their morale up. Instead of sending 30 to 40 resumes out at once, send only a few at at time, he advised, so "you always have something to look forward to."

Wart

quent as a person gets older.

For those who have chosen to take action rather than wait around for old age or for the wart to vanish on its own, the treatment is fairly simple and, depending on the number of warts to be treated, requires only a small amount of time.

PERSISTENCE IS IMPORTANT in any form of wart treatment, Guest said, so patients are advised to return for weekly visits.

"Warts are very stubborn and they will stay a long time unless you just keep after them," he said.

According to Campbell, the number of treatments necessary to get rid of a wart varies from one or two to as many as eight or 10. This depends on the wart itself, how old it was before the student started coming in, how large it is and how deep.

She said students are sometimes referred to dermatologists if treatments are ineffective.

The next patient to enter the small room where the treatment was being done was a female.

She hopped up onto the table and quickly pulled off her sock, admitting this was her seventh visit for this particular wart.

GUEST, ONE OF SEVERAL nurses trained in the procedure, began by cutting off the calloused area of the wart itself, which she explained was to get down to the root where the liquid oxygen needed to reach.

Soon, Guest had finished this part of the treatment and reached for a cotton swab, which she dipped into a small thermos containing the liquid nitrogen.

"This is the painful part," the student said knowingly as she turned her head in the opposite direction.

Guest carefully pressed the wet cotton swab on the scraped surface for a few seconds and when she lifted the swab, a tiny frozen dot remained.

Guest said she varies the time slightly for some people depending on whether the wart is in a more tender area with a lot of nerve endings and how sensitive the person is to pain.

Guest waited a short time, then repeated the procedure with the same effects.

The freezing and thawing involved in the treatment is what gets the wart, "plus getting down to the root of the problem," she said.

The entire procedure takes less than five minutes.

Treatment time at Lafene is from 8 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 4:30 p.m. every Thursday.

Reagan offers budget compromise to save three-year tax cut program

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, yielding to rebellious Senate Republicans, offered a 1984 budget compromise Wednesday that provides more money for domestic programs and slightly less for defense than he originally wanted. The proposal keeps intact Reagan's three-year program of tax cuts.

Reagan dispatched three top aides to the Senate to explain the proposal to key Republicans, and Senate GOP Leader Howard Baker said he hoped agreement on a tax and spending plan was within reach.

Several participants in the meeting, speaking on condition they not be identified, said the biggest stumbling block to an agreement was opposition by conservatives to any tax increases over the next three years.

"The hang-up is taxes," said one senator, adding that the moderate Republicans at the session were prepared to "swallow hard" and agree to Reagan's new proposals for spending.

Presidential aides at the session included Chief of Staff James Baker, Counsellor Edwin Meese and Budget Director David Stockman. Their visit to the Capitol marked the administration's first serious attempt to compromise with Senate Republicans who, after rejecting Reagan's original budget, have been arguing for weeks about how to revise it.

These are the elements of Reagan's newly revised proposal, according to documents obtained by The Associated Press:

— Defense spending for 1984 would increase 7.5 percent after inflation, midway between Reagan's original 10 percent proposal and the 5 percent the committee voted for. Over five years, military spending would be slightly lower than Reagan originally called for.

— Reagan would agree to accept about $13 billion more in domestic spending over three years than he originally proposed, but the Budget Committee would have to cut $35 billion through 1986 from tentative spending plans already made.

— The plan assumes enactment of Reagan's proposal for a one-year pay freeze and partial approval for his program to revise the Civil Service Retirement program. The Budget Committee rejected both proposals in earlier votes. It also assumes deeper cuts in Medicare and other benefit programs than the committee originally voted for, as well as further reductions in a broad array of domestic programs.

— On taxes, the plan would preserve Reagan's three-year program of tax cuts, as well as tax indexing starting in 1985. The compromise provides minor increases of only $8.1 billion over the next two years. However, Reagan's original "contingency" tax increase of more than $50 billion to take effect if the economy is flourishing in 1986 would apparently become mandatory.

Tax indexing is the linking of income tax brackets to inflation to eliminate "bracket creep" which pushes a taxpayer into higher brackets if his income keeps pace with inflation.

If adopted, the administration's proposal would leave a deficit in 1984 of $182.7 billion, declining to $127.5 billion in 1986, the documents said.

Dissatisfied:

Workers demonstrate against state freeze on wages, insurance

TOPEKA (AP) — Nearly 1,500 angry state employees gathered Wednesday on the steps of the Kansas Capitol to protest a proposed six-month salary and health insurance freeze.

The unruly crowd ridiculed legislative leaders who tried to explain the proposal and continually interrupted speakers with catcalls and jeers.

"We've decided that's too much," said Jo Ann Klesath, lobbyist for the Kansas Association of Public Employees. "The whole state budget can't be balanced on the backs of state employees."

The state employees skipped their lunch hour to hear from Republican leaders in the Legislature who told the crowd they were trying to be fair with a limited amount of money in the state budget.

"The truth is we have a recession on our hands," House Speaker Mike Haydentold the employees. "No one asked you to bear more than your share of the burden.

"If we raise taxes, you'll get a raise. If we can't, you won't. It's that simple."

On March 30, Gov. John Carlin asked state employees to wait six months for their salary increase. Klesath said the employees accepted the delay, but were angered when Hayden, R-Atwood, suggested recently the employees also accept a freeze in health insurance.

"We've been biting the bullet for two years," Klesath said. "It's been a tough year and we've been fighting back."

Hayden told the crowd he understood the problems of state employees, but did not have any easy solutions.

Klesath said state employees were given a 6.5 percent cost of living increase in fiscal year 1983 but were denied a merit increase. This year, state employees will likely get an increase in the 4 percent range, she said.

Hayden tried to answer questions from the crowd, but his comments were interrupted several times by catcalls and screams of "We want a raise."

Rep. Bill Bunten, R-Topeka and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, was also forced to shout his remarks above

Rats are pets, not pests, at West

By ANITA CONLEY
Collegian Reporter

It all started with a parakeet named T.J. Soon there was Tisha, a Himalayan long-haired guinea pig. That was last year.

Now Julie Peterson, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, and her roommate, Anna Marie Brown, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, have nine pets — all in one small West Hall room.

"We started out getting companions for the original pets we owned," Peterson said. "Animals really have a need to have their own kind around them."

The list of nine include four parakeets, two guinea pigs, two rats and a hamster.

The two keep the animals because they like to be around and work with animals, Peterson said.

Staff/David Stuckey

Up and away... T.J., one of Julie Peterson and Anna Marie Brown's nine pets, heads for his favorite perch — Peterson's head.

Caring for the animals — feeding them and cleaning their cages — takes about 20 minutes a day, Peterson said.

"I think people smell cedar chips and it makes them wonder, but we really try to keep it clean," Brown said.

"They really don't bother the other residents," said Sharon Berry, senior in natural resource management and resident assistant for their floor. "I know the women really try to keep the cages clean."

According to Jeff Stafford, assistant director of Housing, there isn't a limit on the number of caged animals allowed in a room, but he stressed adequate care must be given to all the pets.

Each pet must be registered and approved by the hall director who has a list of animals approved by the Department of Housing to be in the halls.

Keeping the pets costs about $100 per year for food and sanitary materials, Peterson said.

"Overall, it's pretty expensive to keep these animals," she said. "But I think it's worth it. There is always something going on in here."

In fact, two months ago the two parakeets had four babies.

"It's unusual for only two parakeets to mate," Peterson said, because parakeets usually only reproduce when in a flock.

According to Peterson, the parent birds caring for their young is an intricate process. While the mother bird sits on the eggs, the father bird feeds her. After the eggs have hatched, the father continues to feed the mother while she in turn, feeds the babies. The father then gradually takes over feeding the babies.

"In the end the father does most of the work," Peterson said.

Brown originally bought her pets, the two rats, because she had heard they made good pets. Later she found out she was allergic to them.

"My eyes swell and I get awful welts on my hands," Brown said. "But I couldn't stand to get rid of them. I just try to be careful of how much I play with them."

The negative attitudes people have about rats is unjustified, Peterson said, because they are clean, intelligent and curious animals and really make good pets.

Library reports theft of computer terminal

A Dasher 200 computer terminal was stolen Wednesday, April 13, from the circulation office in Farrell Library.

The terminal, including a video display screen and a keyboard, was valued at about $2,000, Leslie Manning, associate dean of libraries, said.

Stolen sometime during the working day, Manning said a note was left in place of the computer saying it had been removed for repairs and would be returned Tuesday.

"It wasn't returned Tuesday," she said. "But they didn't say which Tuesday."

The terminal, which is part of the new checkout system now being installed, was located in the circulation office just inside the library.

Manning said there was some possibility it was stolen after hours, but there were no signs of forced entry.

"We have no idea how anybody could walk out the front door and especially through the security gate with a computer terminal," she said, adding that it might have been taken to another part of the library and then taken out after the building had closed.

Security and Traffic is investigating the theft and a reward has been offered. Anyone with information should contact Security and Traffic or Manning at the library.

Income, liquor, fuel taxes comprise Legislature's package to Gov. Carlin

TOPEKA (AP) — Republicans, who hold comfortable margins in both houses, settled Wednesday on a tax package they plan to send to Democratic Gov. John Carlin as the Kansas Legislature reconvened for a four-day cleanup session following a 10-day recess.

That package includes:

— Raising individual income taxes on those in the upper brackets to generate $2 million more, but eliminating the increase in two years if the revenue is no longer needed. This would be done by limiting the amount of federal income taxes Kansans could deduct on their state returns to $10,000.

— Increasing cigarette and liquor taxes by $25 million, including hiking the state cigarette tax by five cents a package to gain $14.7 million and doubling the liquor enforcement tax from 4 percent to 8 percent, to raise more than $10 million more.

— Delaying a 4 percent pay increase for state employees for six months to save the general fund $10 million next fiscal year.

— Increasing the gasoline and diesel fuel taxes either three or four cents a gallon to gain $42 million or $56 million, but using $28 million of the revenue to match federal funds and giving the rest to local units of governments to repair their roads and streets.

The new revenue from the income taxes and the so-called "sin" taxes and the pay raise delay would gain the general fund $77 million and give the state a general fund balance of $95 million on June 30, 1984, Republican leaders said.

The GOP leadership also has agreed with Carlin's proposals to transfer $30 million from the freeway fund to the state highway fund and to change the funding of the Kansas Highway Patrol from the highway fund to the general fund, gaining another $17 million for the highway fund.

Besides advancing some components of the tax package, the Senate passed without debate and sent to the House on the first day back a new severance tax bill to raise $97 million for the state, replacing one Attorney General Robert Stephan had said probably is flawed constitutionally.

The new measure, which is virtually identical to one sent to Carlin on April 9 when the lawmakers took first adjournment, will be passed by the House on Thursday and forwarded to Carlin before the deadline when he must veto the first bill.

The new bill is being passed because the House made a mistake in not handling the old measure under emergency procedures on April 9. Stephan has advised Carlin and the leadership he believes that mistake could cause the bill to be struck down by the state Supreme Court.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Talkington, R-Iola, said there was no agreement on the package at this point with Carlin or the minority Democrats in the two houses, but Speaker Mike Hayden confirmed the House GOP leadership agrees with it.

Besides approving the severance tax bill, 26-11, the Senate also received into introduction Wednesday five bills which would raise taxes by $352 million if all were enacted.

However, besides the new severance tax bill — which was quickly passed — only the highway funding measure offered by Doyen, which would increase the state's motor fuel taxes by four cents a gallon, is likely to get out of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, which introduced them.

Talkington moved for emergency consideration of the new severance tax bill. He said there was an agreement between Carlin and the legislative leadership not to make any substantive changes in the measure, and the Senate planned to abide by that agreement.

Cyclists pay for typing error in parking fees

The Traffic and Parking Council intended to sell motorcycle permits this year for $10 but because of a typing error they were forced to sell them for $20, Charles Long, chairman of the Traffic and Parking Council, said.

The permits were raised 400 percent from last year's $5 fee because of an overlooked printing error, Long said.

According to Security and Traffic chief Art Stone, the cost for the permits will be reduced to $10 beginning in July.

"Somehow the wording was changed. As soon as the problem was recognized we tried to correct it," Stone said.

The typing error was evidently made in the listing of traffic fees in the Security and Traffic handbook which was sent to the Kansas Board of Regents for approval, Long said.

Because the regents approved the price increase and it would have taken about six months to change the price and have it approved by the regents again, he said, there was nothing the Traffic and Parking Council could do but sell the permits at the inflated price.

The council sold 346 motorcycle permits this year giving the council an extra $3,460.

"This money (raised by parking permits) goes for upkeep and maintenance of parking lots, rebuilding and patching. It also goes for salaries for the individuals who do this work and for officers," Stone said.

Discounts or refunds were not given because the regents approval was also necessary for that, he said, and would also take six months to be approved.

"We are rereading and making sure that the regulations say what they are suppose to," Stone said. "By omission in the past, there wasn't anything in the traffic regulations about motorcycles concerning the cost of parking fees. This might have been some of the problem.

"We don't anticipate something like this happening again," he said.

Ma Bell has no 'hang ups' with this phone

SAN DIEGO — A telephone that recognizes voice commands and needs no dialing may be on the market within two years, a Bell Telephone Laboratories executive said.

"To use the phone, you merely announce 'off hook' followed by the name or number of the person you want to reach; a computer does the rest," said Joseph Laferrera, executive director of the management and administrative systems division of Bell Labs. "At the end of a conversation, you say 'hang up' and the computer breaks the connection."

A person using the dial-less phone will have to train it to recognize voice commands because of differences in dialects from one part of the country to the next, Laferrera told local business executives Tuesday at Pacific Telephone's downtown headquarters.

"Training involves pronouncing a list of predetermined names and numbers into the computer's memory bank," he said.

The Bell Labs invention, still being developed, is likely to be used in pocket-sized, cordless phones for home or office, he said.

Cosmonauts expected at space station tonight

MOSCOW — The Soviet government launched a new first in space missions Wednesday, sending up three cosmonauts for the first extended stay by so large a crew aboard one of its orbiting space stations.

The cosmonauts were sent up in a Soyuz T-8 space transport at 7:11 a.m. CST from the Baikonur space center in central Asia 1,300 miles southeast of Moscow.

The cosmonauts are expected to dock with the Salyut 7 space station, unoccupied for four months, and make their quarters in the Cosmos 1443 supply ship, which was attached to the station March 10.

The docking was expected to take place tonight.

The official media gave no indication of how long the mission would last or whether the trio would try to break the space endurance record of 211 days set Dec. 10 by Salyut 7's last occupants, Anatoly Berezovoy and Valentin Lebedev.

Non-stop sneezer throws in the handkerchief

LITTLE NESTON, England — After three weeks of acupuncture and homeopathic treatment, 15-year-old Andrew Watts had his first day of peace Wednesday following 52 days of non-stop sneezing.

Watts's sneezes, which at their worst reached the exhausting rate of one every 10 seconds, began Feb. 27 after he received a heavy blow under his chin from a hockey stick during a school match.

His mother Patricia, 36, said she took him to a hospital, but doctors could not discover why he was sneezing.

However, after the acupuncture and homeopathic treatment prescribed by Dr. Ken Atherton of Liverpool, the sneezing slowed and finally stopped, she said.

"I am over the moon," Watts said. "It's like being born again. I had almost forgotten what it was like to live without sneezing."

FDA to recall 234,000 bottles of shampoo

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration said Wednesday that 234,000 bottles of baby shampoo, sold widely under a variety of brand names, will be recalled because of bacterial contamination that can infect scratched or cut skin and eyes.

The shampoo was packaged by Pennex Products Company Inc. of Verona, Pa., and is sold under more than two dozen house brands. Pennex began the recall after FDA tests showed the bacteria in one isolated lot. But further tests by the company and by FDA showed the problem to be more widespread and led to the broad recall.

The company has stopped using equipment which it believes is the source of the contamination.

Pennex distributed the product nationally as Soothex and Mara Lynne brands or with a generic label saying simply "Baby Shampoo."

Rooney vows end to career after court ruling

SAN ANTONIO, Texas — A tearful Mickey Rooney vowed to end his 60-year movie career because the U.S. Supreme Court dismissed his suit seeking to give actors a share of residuals paid for their movies shown on television.

Rooney, in San Antonio Tuesday to film a CBS-TV sequel to the movie "Bill," also pledged to throw away the honorary Academy Award he received last week because the high court "refused to give me, a patriotic American, my day in court."

"I won't work in movies any more. I don't want any part of those people after this," Rooney told The San Antonio News. The 61-year-old actor said he considers the Monday decision a "serious betrayal of my rights as an American" because the high court dismissed the 2-year-old case without hearing any of Rooney's arguments.

His lawsuit dealt with movies, like Rooney's old Andy Hardy films, that were made before "TV was even thought of" and before the Screen Actors Guild negotiated a contract in 1960 that grants actors a percentage of TV revenue from movies made after that year.

Weather

Today's cloudy skies (or other unknown elements) will prevent us from seeing clearly now as scattered showers and thundershowers will get in our way. The high will be around 60, with the low in the mid- to upper-40s.

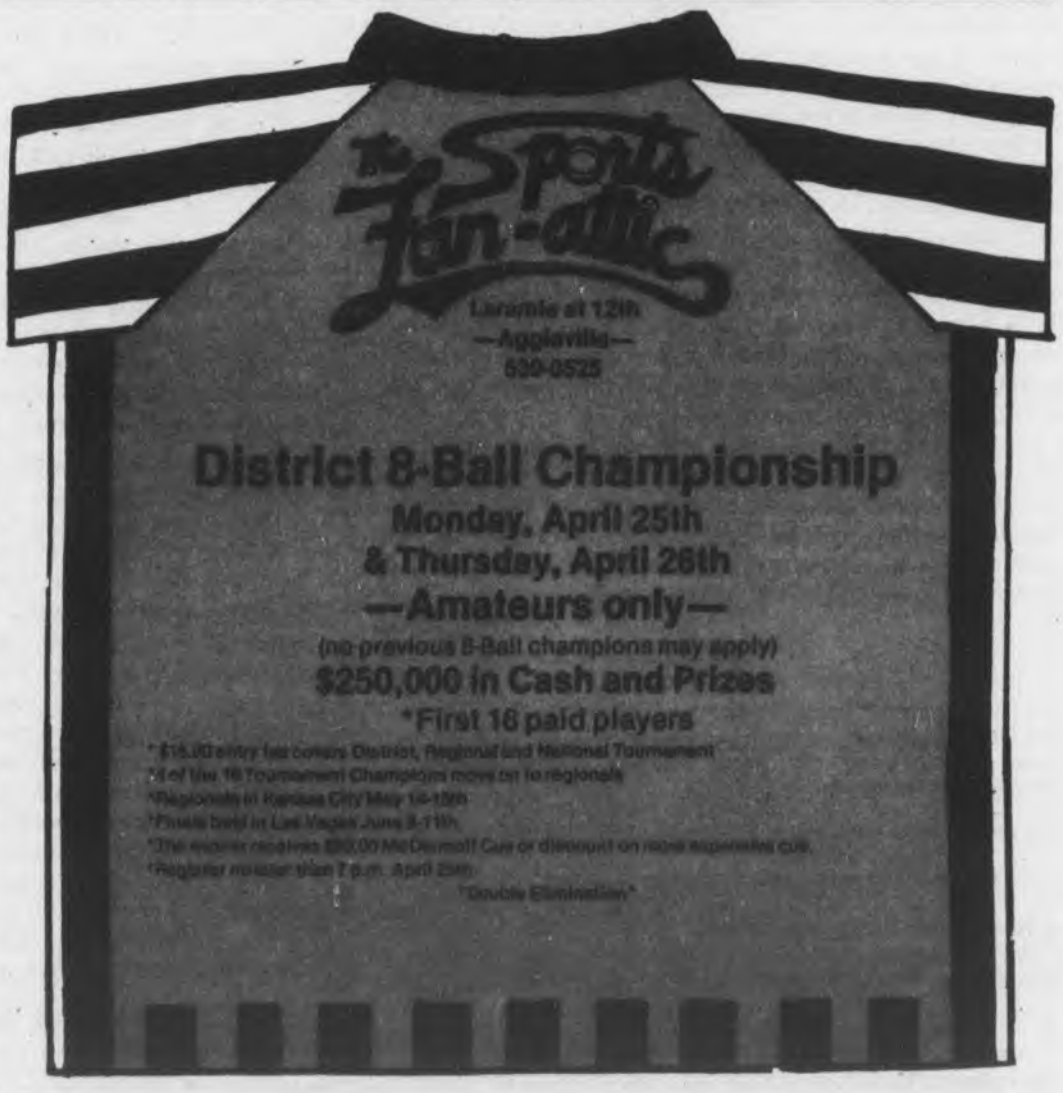
—Paddy Presumed Dead—



Local authorities tried to piece together the number of intriguing events that led to the finding of the remains of the lush and ever so drunk Paddy Murphy.

Paddy disguised as Fred Baver, social chairman for the SAE house, put 1 keg of beer and 5 cases of Jack Daniels chaser on the house account. Paddy was seen later Wednesday afternoon outside of Manhattan by Professor Fritz Furrburger at the animal-husbandry control center. Detective Jack M. Off commented that all that was found was a trail of empty Jack Daniels bottles and the clothes of Paddy, surrounded by 150 smiling sheep.

Judge Bud Wiser has declared Murphy dead by reason of excessive alcohol consumption. Although the body has not been found, Judge Wiser, after being consulted by "experts" from the Lafene Student Health Center, said that "no one could have drank that much and survived."

Friends of Paddy Murphy have announced that there will be a reading of Paddy's last will and testament by the members of Sigma Alpha Epsilon and the Little Sisters of Minerva at 8:00 p.m. tonight.

High-tech funds can buy phones

This could be the opportunity K-State's been waiting for.

Bell Telephone Laboratories latest invention, a pocket-sized dial-less telephone, will be on the market soon.

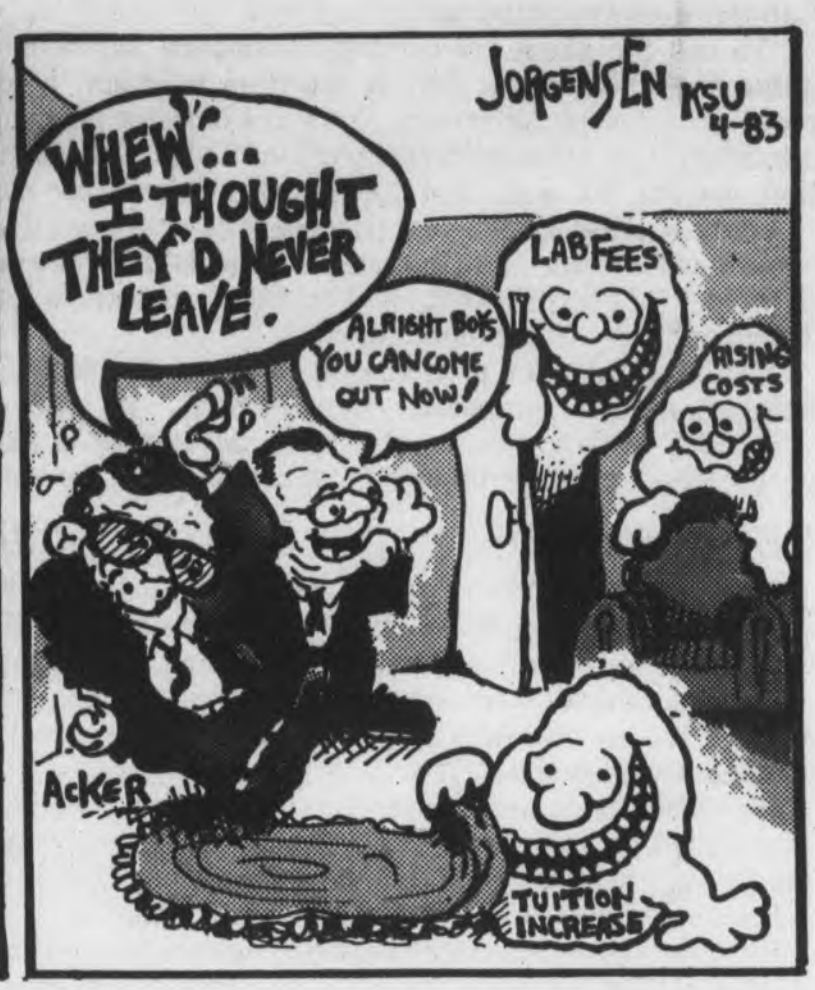
These new phones, Bell claims, can be trained to connect or disconnect conversations by tone of voice commands. All one has to do is announce "off hook" or "hang up" and the computers do the rest.

Just think! If K-State acts fast, it could obtain exclusive rights to the use of this vital instrument.

With the Senate Ways and Means Committee's recent approval establishing high technology programs at regents schools, K-State will now have the necessary funds available to obtain this new instrument.

If the University purchases this invention, it would be a step ahead of other competing regents schools — well on the way to becoming a "center of excellence" in the high-tech field.

The benefits this technological marvel would provide for K-State are unlimited.



For instance, faculty members, besides enjoying the convenience these phones offer, could "train" the phone to advise students, thus saving considerable time.

Students could decrease the amount of time spent studying. Instead of struggling with "tough" tests, especially those comprehensive final examinations, stuents could simply reach into their pocket, say "off hook" and presto, a wealth of information is at their fingertips.

Establising a quality high-tech program, while not an easy task, can be achieved at K-State. The purchase of new dial-less telephones could be an appropriate purchase in achieving that goal.

High price was paid for freedom, education

Editor,

I am concerned about the student reaction about the Solomon Amendment concerning the distribution of financial aid to those who fail to register for the draft. After talking to a number of students, it seems there are many ideas and opinions about the amendment and many of them are very controversial.

Some of the opinions I've encountered are from people always asking, "What material gain I can get from my country, or out of life or from K-State?"

I try to think back often and remember the thousands of Americans who have paid the highest price they could give for their country. Because of them, we have the chance to write down our ideas, seek higher education in the field of our choice and pursue our goals and aspirations.

Our freedom in America cannot be bought once and for all — we must continually be making sacrifices. By expressing our thoughts about the amendment we are using legal tactics to get something changed, and that's good. But we must also be ready to defend these rights.

I'm not writing to judge the Solomon Amendment either which way, but as a reminder for all Americans to remember many things we take for granted here, such as higher education, can be easily taken away from us. We must always be concerned about what we can do for our country and not what we should get from it.

Mind your p's and q's

There may be hope in this world after all.

Just when things were beginning to look grim, along came cheerful evidence that all is not lost and what's right will prevail. After all, what was all this talk about MX missiles and James Watt and the Beach Boys when we should have been worrying about real issues?

Real issues like the 19-year-old youth in Texas who made the horrible mistake of answering "Yeah" instead of "Yes, sir" to a district judge's questions.

The young man had pleaded guilty to a burglary charge. But the judge sentenced him to 30 days in jail because he failed to answer "Yes, sir."

No matter about the killers who go free and the crooks who buy off big-wigs to serve reduced terms or no terms at all. Don't worry about the pat-on-the-hand sentences given perpetators of million-dollar schemes that rob the public — convictions that bring sentences to "country club" minimum-security institutions. We don't need to worry about them.

IT'S ABOUT TIME our courts attacked some serious threats to society, like slovenly answers from 19-year-olds.

"Yeah" instead of "Yes, sir"?

What in the world is wrong with that kid? Who does he think he is? Why, he probably doesn't even answer his father with a "Yes, sir" unless it's beaten out of him.

Because the judge got no respect — only a "Yeah" when he asked some questions of the defendant — he displayed his awesome power on the bench, proving that reason and good sense do prevail in the court room.

It makes sense, doesn't it? After all, judges are the epitome of respected people, and "Yes, sir" is the only way to show it. Anything less is contempt of court.

THERE ARE OTHER ASSURANCES that right will prevail over wrong. Consider, for example, an Oklahoma incident that never made the courts.

A friend of the writer's teaches journalism and serves as newspaper and yearbook adviser at one of the Sooner State's small colleges. His students published an editorial questioning the grading policies used by one of the faculty members. It was only an opinion that appeared on the editorial page of the school newspaper, but the affronted faculty member came looking for the journalism teacher with an ax.

Was he justified? Of course. College students should be taught never to question policies, particularly that of a long-time faculty member in a small college. Speaking harshly and wielding a big ax is an absolute way to take care of the problem. It's like being prosecutor, judge, jury and executioner — all in one — and it bears promise of saving the taxpayers plenty.

THE JOURNALISM TEACHER should have known better than to let his students express an opinion on the editorial page of the school paper. Everyone knows students aren't old enough to be responsible, particularly when they write editorials.

Another positive trend is the ordinary citizen's interest in law enforcement. He can turn himself into a policeman whenever the occasion demands.

Recent news reports carried the story from another campus about a righteous character who took it upon himself to enforce parking regulations in a crowded parking lot. When he saw an illegally parked vehicle, he kicked it violently.

You can bet that is a reasonable solution to the parking problem. Who would want to park illegally and drive away in a car bearing dents and dings from some guy's shoes?

NOW, LET'S LOOK at the other side.

The big problem with the solutions described is their lack of responsibility. It goes beyond a judge's way of requiring respect in the court room, a college teacher's attempt to demand responsible journalism and an ordinary citizen-turned-policeman in a parking lot.

The judge went beyond the law in handing down his sentence for the defendant's "Yeah." What we have here is a kook in a judge's robe — a public servant whose credentials should be re-examined — and, fortunately, he's in a minority.

But when you come down to it, a judge may be the closest thing we have to an absolute dictator. What they say you do — or else.

However, in our system, appeals are possible. In the Texas case, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ordered the defendant released on $100 personal recognizance bond.

WE NEED TO CONSIDER the consequences a professor's tirade can bring. Reason does not suddenly prevail because of threats, with or without an ax. Maybe the Oklahoma professor teaches "History of the Cave Man" and substituted an ax for a club.

The journalism teacher — spared the real ax — is getting it in another sense. It seems budget cuts will not allow his continued services as a teacher. Guess who stays because of his tenure?

The self-appointed Lone Ranger on another campus should be given a silver horse and a sidekick for patrolling the parking lots. Let's skip the gun. He can do enough damage with his feet — enough, at least, that he drew a sentence and fine for his actions.

There are creative and innovative solutions approaches to many issues, perhaps even to some of these problems. But do we need the actions of a touchy judge, testy college teacher and temperamental car-kicker to solve today's problems?

No, sir.

Communication: a two-way street

As the newly elected Student Senate chairwoman, I would like to take this opportunity to let you know more about my position and the senate.

The senate chairwoman is elected by a majority vote of the senators. The most visible responsibility I have is to preside at senate meetings. In addition to this, I select the standing committee chairmen, appoint students to various committees and serve on committees.

I am in the Student Governing Services office in the Union most afternoons and would be glad to listen to any concerns you might have. If you see some things you believe senate should look into, or have suggestions for improvement on some aspect of student government, please come and express your views to me. I would also like to invite you to come to senate meetings to let us know your opinions on issues that we are discussing.

On Thursdays, the Collegian provides an article which describes what will be on our agenda that night, so if you see something that you would like to speak on, please come to the meeting. We allow an open period at the beginning of every meeting so that anyone who is not a senator may have the opportunity to present his views on any issue.

Communications between students and their representatives is very important to the success of a university governing body. Senators need to know your ideas when they are trying to make decisions that will affect every student.

ONE OF THE PROBLEMS in achieving good communication is that students often do not know who their senators are. An attempt at a solution to this problem was initiated last year when we began the practice of posting a group picture of all of the senators in each college in their respective dean's office.

In addition, senators have realized that a greater effort on their part needs to be made, so they have enacted a bill making it mandatory for senators to wear a button identifying them as such on the days of senate meetings. Some senators are admittedly skeptical about the usefulness of this practice, but I have faith in our student body. Let your representatives know how you feel; show them that you are interested in contributing to the decisions that are made.

THE MOST DIFFICULT PART of being a senator is trying to guess what the majority of students would want, so any input received from the student body is greatly appreciated. The only reason they will be wearing these buttons is so you will have an opportunity to address them on a personal basis.

Last week, an especially important process began — the allocation of the student activity fee to groups requesting funding for the 1983-84 school year. This year will be particularly difficult, due to decreasing enrollment estimates, resulting in a smaller amount of money to allocate. Senators will be facing difficult decisions in their attempt to allocate your activity fee fairly.

Every student has paid this fee, so every student has a stake in the decisions that will be made. If you have a special interest in a group or feel that a group should not receive funding, tell a senator or come to the meetings. I guarantee that your opinion will be listened to and considered.

Let me emphasize once again that senators will be wearing these buttons to identify themselves for your benefit. Use this opportunity to your advantage and help us make decisions that will be in the best interests of everyone at K-State.

Criticizing Kohler for 'Solomon' was not necessary, unfounded...

Editor,

It is disgusting that every time a controversial issue is presented before Student Senate, certain members of the student body not only condemn its decision, but condemn the senator as well. Bryan Hanson's letter to the editor ("...'checks and balances' ignored") in Wednesday's Collegian concerning John Kohler is one such condemnation.

As ASK campus director, it is Kohler's job to bring issues concerning college students to senate for recommendation of support or rejection before they can be presented to the legislative assembly for further study.

Kohler did just this. He asked senate for its opinion, which was carried out in the majority decision in favor of supporting the bill. Once this had been accomplished, the recommendation was presented to the assembly by Kohler, where it was defeated by the other regents schools and Washburn University. His job had been fulfilled and the issue should stop at that.

Attacking a senator as an individual is a weak excuse for getting one's point across. The senate is doing the best job possible deciding student policy. If you are one of the complainers, don't just talk — do something about it. Senators are more than willing to discuss issues with their constituents — it makes their decision much easier. Give them a call. Or better yet, exercise your right to vote or get involved yourself. You can't get anything else done sitting on your hands.

In conclusion, I'd like to congratulate John Kohler, senate and Jerry Katlin for the courage and dedication they have put into their decisions on the Solomon Amendment. It is nice to know that we do have representatives that have the courage to make decisions in student government.

...'duty to country' is important

Editor,

After seeing four letters to the editor in the April 18 Collegian opposing the Solomon Amendment, including an editorial by Editor Doug Ward — and none in favor of the amendment — I begin to question the objectivity of the Collegian staff. Nevertheless, I cannot stand by without voicing my thoughts on this controversial subject.

An amendment such as this is bound to be unpopular, especially in the economic state that we face today. But, being unpopular does not mean being wrong.

The simple fact is that every citizen has an obligation to this great nation in which we live. If a citizen is not willing to fulfill his obligation and responsibility to his country, then why should he receive free monies from the very government which he is rejecting by refusing to register for the draft? The draft resisters obviously do not realize that America's freedom is a gift from God that has been and still needs to be defended by man — all men.

Americans need to realize the importance of "duty to country." The Solomon Amendment is a step in that direction.

K-State keeps 'no charge' policy for bad checks

By DAVE BERGMEIER
Collegian Reporter

Although the University of Kansas wants to charge its students a return fee of $5 or $7 for bad checks and Wichita State University wants to raise its fee for returned checks from $8 to $10, K-State plans to stand on its policy of no charge.

Both KU's and WSU's proposals are before the Kansas Board of Regents.

Athough there is no charge, legal measures can be taken against students who pay with bad checks at K-State, Ralph Perry, University comptroller, said.

"We can pursue legal recourse through the county attorney, but we don't because of the costs involved in recovering the bad check," he said.

K-State keeps the student informed throughout the situation and gives the student two chances to pay the defaulted check, Perry said.

THE FIRST TIME the student is sent a letter explaining the situation. Many of the problems stem from the student forgetting to put money into his checking account or the money is in the process of being transferred into the checking account.

"The second time the check comes back or the student fails to pay, we will cancel the enrollment for the semester and hold a student's record until the money is paid.

"We feel that it costs the University little for defaulting on payments because the student's services are ended at the University immediately," he said.

According to Perry, K-State has only about 200 to 250 people who write bad checks each semester and more than 50 percent of those students pay the University soon after receiving the first letter.

KU'S PROPOSAL before the regents calls for the fee to be enacted next fall, Howard Tiffany, KU assistant comptroller, said.

"At KU we send out a form letter to the student who wrote a bad check. This letter asks the student to come in and clear up the matter at once.

"If the student doesn't come in and clear up the matter, we will send out another letter telling the student when the last possible day is to clear the check without a penalty," Tiffany explained. "The penalty is that the university will disenroll the student, we will put a hold on all his records and we won't let the student enroll for the following semester."

KU has had 1,250 insufficient checks that have been returned this semester he said, adding many of the checks get cleared almost immediately.

"THE REASON WE have decided to have a return fee is because of the time, effort and expenses needed in fixing and correcting the situation.

"We have a lot of steps to go through and hopefully this will be a deterrent in the future," he said. "Two years ago, banks charged little for a returned check, but now some banks will charge up to $10 for a returned check and it seemed to work for them in stopping bad checks, so we think it will work for us."

At WSU there has been a return fee policy for quite awhile, Jim Decker, the university's comptroller said.

"At the present time we have an $8 return fee. We do have a proposal before the Board of Regents to move the fee up to $10," he said.

However, WSU does work with students to clear up the matter. If the students don't clear the check, the university puts their names on a hold list and gives them a second chance to clear it, Decker said.

THE STUDENT WILL have to pay a late enrollment fee on top of the return fee if he still decides to attend WSU.

On the average, the WSU receives 300 to 500 bad checks at the beginning of the semester, although, he added, the majority of which are eventually paid off.

Locally, the number of bad checks has gone down in the last few years because of the addition of Check Rite, a check writing service that provides clients a list of persons who have written bad checks and a collection agency, according to Dale Thierolf, president of the Manhattan Credit Bureau, of which Check Rite is a division.

Thierolf said money collected from the checks is given back to the merchant, with the writer of the bad check charged a $9 fee.

If the check writer fails to pay, then the matter is turned back over to the merchant and he can begin legal recourse, with Check Rite assisting with any documents and with recovering money for bad check, he said.

Search for embassy blast victims continues; damage causes difficulties in identification

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Searchers dug a Marine's body from the rubble of the U.S. Embassy Wednesday and wrapped it in an American flag, while grieving Lebanese kept vigil near the shattered building where at least 49 people were believed killed by a terrorist bomb.

There still was no precise count of the dead. The explosion Monday caused extensive destruction and workers were finding body parts and corpses so mangled that identification was difficult.

U.S. Embassy spokesman John Reid told reporters that the embassy's latest casualty toll listed 24 people as confirmed dead and 25 others as missing and presumed dead.

This figure included nine Americans confirmed dead and eight missing, as well as 15 Lebanese embassy employees dead and 17 missing, Reid said. Other embassy officials said there were five to 10 Lebanese applying for visas when the bomb exploded.

Police said the body of Lebanese police officer Hassan Yahya, an embassy employee, was recovered Wednesday.

Red Cross workers also pulled the body of Lance Cpl. Robert V. McMaugh, 21, of Manassas, Va., from the heaps of concrete and masonry at the foot of the devastated building, and put it into a plastic bag draped with the Stars and Stripes.

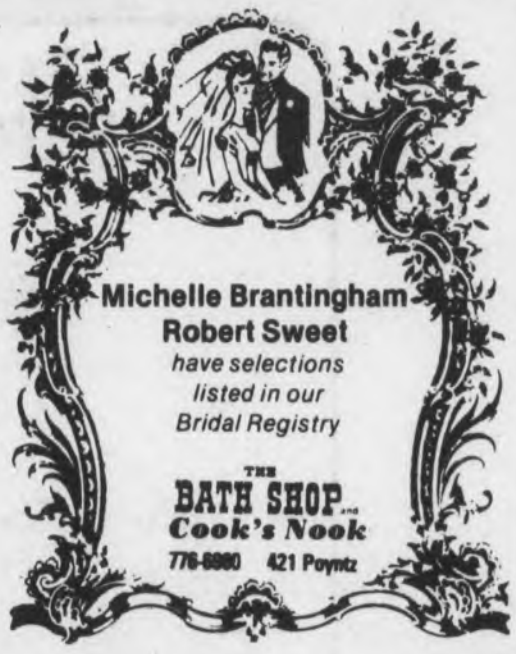
Fellow Marines carried the body away on a stretcher.

Mcmaugh, who had been in Lebanon for six months, manned the embassy's "Post No. 1," a bulletproof glass booth near the embassy entrance where visitors registered their names in a log book.

Searchers are looking for the book, which could help establish a firm count of victims in the apparent suicide bombing of the embassy on the seaside in west Beirut.

Consular officer Dundas McCoullough, 25, who suffered cuts and burns in the bombing, said five to 10 Lebanese visa applicants were in the embassy at the time of the blast, but were not listed in any log. McCoullough escaped from the visa room.

At least three families of missing Lebanese employees, 15 people in all, waited next to the Red Cross in front of the building.



Among them was Fatima Ahmed, about 30, wife of Hussein Haidar, a Shiite Moslem who worked in the embassy's mail room on the third floor. The woman, dressed in black, said she had been fasting since Monday, only drinking water, in memory of her missing husband.

"Waiting here, that's the only thing we can do," she said, her eyes bloodshot with grief. "At least I feel close to him here."

Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem said at a news conference that President Amin Gemayel's government was undertaking "the deepest investigation possible" into the bombing.

Details were still unclear, but most witnesses agreed that a terrorist drove a bomb-laden truck into the embassy compound at lunchtime Monday and himself died in the blast.

Recovery eludes employment market

Jobs still scarce for spring graduates

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Despite some encouraging signs that the nation's economy may be starting to pull out of the worst American recession since World War II, the recovery has yet to show up on campuses and probably won't in time to help this spring's graduates find jobs right away, college placement officers said.

In fact, campus recruiting and the number of job offers to graduating seniors are down again this spring, and experts said starting salaries are lagging behind the declining inflation rate.

Even engineers and computer science majors, who generally have had their pick of jobs in recent years, are having more trouble getting work this spring, the officers said.

"Last year was a tough year and this year's going to be even worse," said Victor Lindquist, placement chief at Northwestern University and director of the Endicott Report, an annual survey of job prospects for college grads nationwide.

"COMPANIES KEEP WAITING for this recovery that the president's trying to jawbone into place but it may be a long time in coming," he said.

Back in January, the Endicott Report forecasted American businesses would offer the Class of '83 11 percent fewer jobs than it did the Class of '82.

"Now," Lindquist said, "it's even worse than we thought."

"For the Class of '83, it'll be the toughest year since World War II," said Jack Shingleton, Michigan State University's placement director and coordinator of MSU's annual national student job survey.

Other campus placement directors report spring recruitment is off as much as 50 percent from last year's depressed levels.

Consequently, the summer job market will be more crowded than ever, with fewer jobs available as companies continue to delay hiring new employees.

"THERE'LL BE 1.3 MILLION students graduating this spring," Shingleton said. "There'll be a million jobs open."

Overall, MSU said students with bachelor's degrees will get 17 percent fewer job offers than a year ago.

Liberal arts majors will have the hardest time finding work, Shingleton's study found.

Things are better for electrical engineers, computer science, business and other engineering grads.

But there are still 12 percent fewer engineering positions available this year than last year, the College Placement Council said.

Similarly, even schools that are faring relatively well this spring are in terrible shape.

"Our recruitment is down about 25 percent and we're the fortunate ones," Lindquist said.

AT NEW MEXICO STATE UNIVERSITY, the number of employers recruiting on campus is down a whopping 44 percent, placement director Steven Salway said.

Company after company canceled recruiting visits, leaving seniors' job search nothing short of "horrendous," he said.

Twenty-five percent of the firms scheduled to interview at the University of Kentucky this spring canceled because they "just aren't recruiting in order to save money," Drema Howard, UK's associate placement director, said.

Alcoa Aluminium, Schlumberger Services and Dow Chemical, among other, canceled their Kentucky visits. Others — including big employers like Exxon, Union Carbide, Ashland Oil and Armco — have cut back the number of interviews they grant students, Howard added.

Likewise, West Virginia University is suffering a 25 percent reduction in the number of visits by corporate recruiters.

"U.S. STEEL HAS canceled eight interview schedules, Gulf Oil has canceled out altogether for the second semester and Alcoa has cut back," WVU Career Services Director Robert Kent said.

"We're down about 36 percent from a year ago in the number of recruiters and we have 18 percent fewer students being interviewed," Oregon State associate placement director Marjorie McBride said.

"In the old days we'd have had 200 to 300 recruiters on campus in the spring. This year it's in the 50s bracket."

McBride is urging students to "get out and contact employers directly," rather than relying on campus interviews. "This year is just the worst I've ever seen," she said.

"We'll be hiring considerably less this year," Phil DeLong, spokesman for American Telephone and Telegraph's college recruitment division, said. "Partly because of the economy and partly because of our divestiture proceedings, we're taking a cautious, wait-and-see attitude."

TEXAS INSTRUMENTS' HIRING is down "about one-third from 1980," George Berryman, manager of corporate college relations, said. "But we anticipate a pickup in the fall and spring of next year."

Hughes Aircraft's spring hiring is down nearly 30 percent, although "we still have a heavy demand for electrical engineers and computer scientists," a company spokesman said.

"Our hiring managers are working slower and taking longer to make decisions, though, because the pace has slowed so much from last year," he added.

"And with fewer recruiters and fewer offers being made, many placement directors have noted that students are accepting the first or second offer they receive," Linda

Default rate for student loans may rise due to scarcity of jobs

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

The U.S. Department of Education should be "realistic" by bracing itself for an increasing number of students defaulting on their federal student loan payment this year, said a top official with the American Council on Education (ACE).

With this summer's job market likely to be the worst since World War II, campus job placement experts are predicting that even engineers and computer science grads will have a tough time finding work.

Many grads simply do not have the jobs, and thus the income, to begin repaying their student loans, ACE spokesman Bob Aaron said.

The default rate on Guaranteed Student Loans has risen steadily since 1978, from 10.3 percent to 12.3 percent, according to the Department of Education.

National Direct Student Loan defaults, on the other hand, have been edging downward for the last five years, from a high of 17.7 percent in 1978 to 15.4 percent last year.

More aggressive collection efforts by the federal government have helped ease the default rate, experts said.

But as the job market for college grads deteriorate this year, default rates could shoot up again, Aaron said.

"IS IT REALISTIC to expect a student with $10,000 worth of debt not to default in today's job market?" he asked.

Student Senate to decide upon budget requests

Groups scheduled to receive consideration in Student Senate's tentative allocations tonight include MeCha, University for Man, International Coordinating Council, Puerto Rican Student Organization, Early Childhood Laboratory and Black Student Union, according to Lori Leu, senate chairwoman. The meeting is scheduled for 6 in the Union Big Eight room.

Student Publications and the College Councils will be on call.

In addition to tentative allocations, senate is scheduled to vote on whether to send a commendation to the dean of the College of Home Economics, Ruth Hoeflin. Hoeflin is leaving this year on sabbatical and is scheduled to return next year and resume duties as a faculty member. Hoeflin has been the dean of the College of Home Economics since 1975 and has been at K-State since 1957.

Approval of a new student health insurance plan is scheduled for first reading.

Senate is scheduled to vote on the issue concerning partial funding of the Folklife Festival to be held in CiCo Park this weekend. The festival is requesting $1,230 from senate to help pay for folk artist support, motel lodging for artists and the production of the festival poster. In return for partial funding, festival tickets would be made available at half price to K-State students.

Mark Terril, Finance Committee chairman, said the committee's recommendation is zero.

According to Terril, it is not Finance Committee's policy to make donations and the committee doesn't believe it is fair to fund anything that students have to pay to attend.

Nuclear waste disposal problem continues; governors refuse to accept toxic dump sites

WASHINGTON (AP) — There was once talk of shooting it into space or burying it under a polar ice cap. While those notions have been discarded, the problem of what to do with nuclear wastes that will remain lethal for thousands of years is a long way from being solved.

Since the dawn of the atomic age four decades ago, the waste has been piling up from construction of nuclear warheads and the generation of electricity at civilian power plants.

Congress, after 25 years of debate, passed a bill last December that sets up a schedule for completing the first burial site for civilian wastes by 1998.

While that gives the government 15 years to find and build the site, past history indicates that all that time and more may be needed.

The problem gained new urgency Wednesday when the Supreme Court upheld a California law banning new nuclear power plants until the federal government devises a safe method of disposing of the wastes. At least 12 other states have some type of restriction on plant construction.

EVEN BEFORE THE DECISION, the Reagan administration was pushing ahead on an accelerated schedule to meet the requirements of the waste bill to demonstrate its commitment to solving the problem.

While the law requires the president to pick three sites for detailed studies by Jan. 1, 1985, Department of Energy officials say they expect to have the three candidates picked by the end of this year.

Then they will begin detailed "site characterization" work leading to the selection of one site for the waste dump by the president on March 1987.

Two of the three sites — in Washington and Nevada — have already been picked. Four states — Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Utah — are in the running for the third site. All four of these sites feature underground salt formations. The department may decide to pick one primary salt formation for study with a back-up in case problems are found.

The selection of candidate sites has stirred stiff opposition.

FIVE HUNDRED PEOPLE turned out for hearings in Nevada last month to protest selection of the Nevada test site and Gov. Richard Bryan promised to veto a high-level dump in his state.

The law allows such a veto, but Congress can override it by simple majorities in both houses.

The DOE plans to spend close to $100 million at each of the three final sites sinking test shafts six to 20 feet in diameter and up to 3,000 feet deep for a detailed look at the geology of the formations.

At the Hanford, Wash., nuclear reservation, the shaft will go into dense basalt rock. At the government's nuclear test site in southern Nevada, scientists will be drilling into volcanic tuff. The salt formations are located along the Gulf Coast and in the Texas Panhandle.

ONCE THE PRESIDENT picks a final site, the DOE will have two years to prepare a license application and design the repository. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission would then have three years to hold hearings and issue a final license.

After construction, the facility would resemble a rabbit den with tunnels leading off from the main shaft where the nuclear waste capsules could be stored 2,000 to 3,000 feet underground. The site must be certified as capable of preventing the release of radioactivity for 10,000 years.

Whenever it is built, the government won't have trouble filling it. Utilities are already storing some 8,000 metric tons of wastes in concrete pools at the reactor sites. By 1990, this waste is expected to triple.

While selection is still under way for the first site, government geologists have already begun examining rock formations for a second burial site. They are looking at formations in 17 states, primarily along the Great Lakes and in the Northeast. The Energy Department must recommend five sites by 1989 for a second repository.

VOTERS IN WISCONSIN aren't waiting that long. Earlier this month, in the first referendum of its kind, they voted to oppose locating the second dump in Wisconsin, one of the states being considered.

Besides Wisconsin, the other states under consideration for the second site are Michigan, Minnesota, Georgia, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Vermont.

The nuclear industry contends that the technology for safe disposal has existed for more than a decade but what is lacking is the political will to pick sites.

However, environmentalists contend that the public is right to be concerned.

"The solution to the waste problem isn't just around the corner. We have some difficult technical and scientific problems to solve," said David Berick of the Environmental Policy Institute, an environmental research group.

'The Key' may unlock door to singer's success

By JIM MELIZA
Collegian Reviewer

One thing about Joan Armatrading — she's not very secretive. Yet, her confessional delivery evades gaudy sentimentalism.

Armatrading's record company, A&M, has been hoping for 10 years that this style might trigger affection in consumers. Few companies have taken that much time and resources to groom someone for success.

With her new album, "The Key," Armatrading may have discovered the right chemistry for commercial viability. More importantly, for all of the corporate manipulation, Armatrading's work remains fresh.

Review

Part of Armatrading's new image is to move away from her folk and blues origins to a more rock-oriented format. Such transitions have wrecked other artists' careers because of vocal inadequacies. However, her husky alto voice has the necessary strength.

One important feature about Armatrading's voice is her ability to dramatize her songs without squealing, screaming or shrieking. Instead she uses it to caress and accuse.

Her throaty phrasing tends to project a vulnerable character framework while retaining a sense of self-determination by booming at just the right time.

Armatrading's forte is creating a series of monologues that combine to reveal a long-suffering, patient woman. Still, she is not afraid to confront injustice. There is no beating around the bush — only a straightforward statement.

Both in "Bad Habits" and "Game of Love," Armatrading approaches love as a compulsion one grows to accept. Love is subject to misfortune as well as pleasure.

"Game of Love" sums up the attitudes of people. Although people deny love's importance, "...they form the line round corners five miles long to be in that two player team."

The punch to these songs are the result of songwriting and production. First of all, Armatrading has restructured her melodies into simpler lines. Replacing her old disjointed lines are more accessible tunes lending themselves to easier memorization.

To accent these new found hooks is producer Steve Lillywhite. His reputation is built upon his work with U2. However, he drops his reliance on the psychedelic drone to adapt a more commercial approach.

Despite all of the rock'n'roll sound, the strongest song is a ballad. "Everybody Gotta Know" epitomizes the frail situation of a confrontation. The feeling of disappointment is expressed best in the lines, "Sometime it all sounds so crazy/Your version of the story that I know/Oh when your memory fails you."

Throughout "The Key," Armatrading refuses to wear her heart on her sleeve; instead, she wears the key to her heart. It will be offered to someone only if they reciprocate. This security measure allows her to be personal without suffering from schlock.

India forsakes Gandhi's ideals as crowds applaud movie

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Thousands die in a violent state election campaign. Hunger strikes last an hour, with protesters fasting in "relay teams." Politicians who cannot draw a crowd can rent one.

At a time when an Academy Award-winning movie epic is acquainting millions of people around the world with the beliefs and values of Mohandas K. Gandhi, many of his ideals have eroded at home.

Gandhi, India's "great soul" and a leader of the independence movement, for years urged his countrymen to spin and wear khadi (homespun cotton cloth), both to weaken the British textile industry here and because he believed people should work for what they receive.

"You're the only man I know who makes his own clothes," photographer Margaret BourkeWhite exclaims in the movie "Gandhi" when the Hindu leader asks her why she wants to take his picture.

Today, synthetic "tericot" is fashionable. Khadi is out.

Dozens of Indian government employees, stripped to their underwear, paraded through the streets of this capital earlier this month demanding synthetic cloth uniforms instead of out-of fashion cotton ones.

A doer as well as a preacher, Gandhi mastered the art of spinning khadi from raw cotton and nearly every day spent a few hours at the spinning wheel that became his symbol.

HE WAS a living saint to hundreds of millions of Indians by the time independence was won from Britain in 1947. To the political leaders who engineered the changeover, he was an ideologue and a weapon but sometimes exasperatingly unpragmatic.

The Mahatma wanted the new Indian flag to bear the symbol of a spinning wheel. He was overruled by the politicians who preferred the mighty "great wheel" of the Emperor Ashoka.

Gandhi's greatest wish was that India remain whole after independence. The politicians of two lands again ignored him and, hoping to avoid the massive violence that nonetheless followed, split the subcontinent into mostly Hindu India and predominantly Moslem West and East Pakistan — later Pakistan and Bangladesh.

MANY POLITICIANS still wear the white khadi "pyjama uniform" in Parliament and on the campaign trail, but only to identify themselves with the Mahatma and the Indian Congress Organization that fought the battle for freedom. Gandhi's picture hangs in government offices.

Some of Gandhi's tactics have been subverted.

When Gandhi, who was assassinated in 1948, began a fast until death, people stopped killing people and governments were moved.

Today, a popular form of protest in India is the relay hunger strike, where people sit and refuse food for as little as an hour or two until their place is taken by others.

M.G. Ramachandran, chief minister of Tamil Nadu, staged a seven-hour hunger strike — he skipped lunch — last month to protest the federal government's failure to give his drought-hit southern state enough rice.

WHEN GANDHI called for massive civil disobedience, hundreds of thousands of Indians stopped work and demonstrated, paralyzing the country.

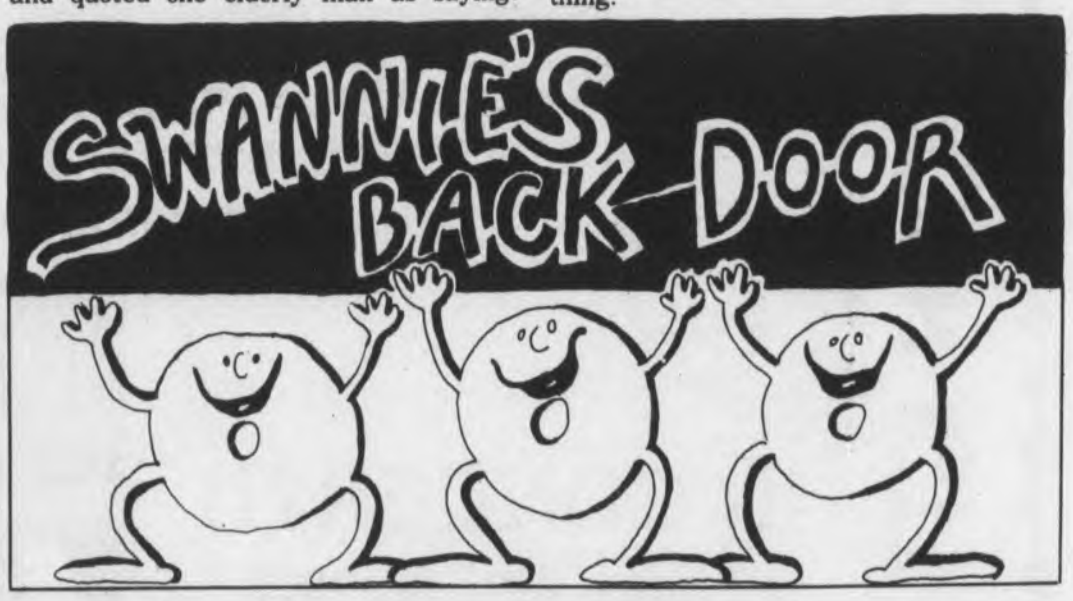
Today, there is India's version of the "rent-a-crowd," which for a wad of banknotes can lend weight to a protest. Just provide the slogans.

On April 13, for example, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's son and political heir apparent, Rajiv, addressed a large gathering here of the Congress Party's "youth wing." Newspaper reports the next day noted a large sprinkling of gray heads in the crowd and quoted one elderly man as saying: "Why am I here? I was brought here."

Gandhi abhorred violence and is best remembered for advocating non-violent resistance.

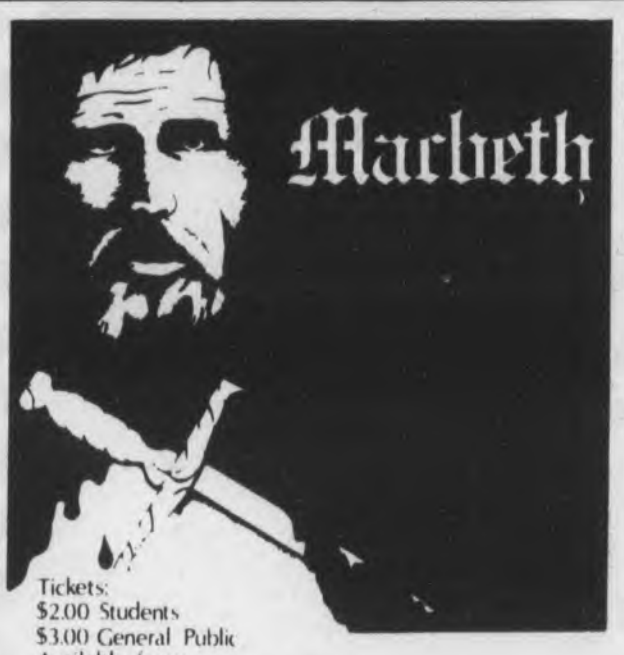
Yet India today is violent.

Not much is taught about Gandhi today in Indian schools, but the memorial where he was cremated remains a must for every visiting dignitary.



Many Indians opposed making the movie "Gandhi," arguing nobody — least of all an Englishman — could do justice to the man. Some later refused to see the film despite its favorable reviews because their memories were of a saint and they did not want that spoiled.

Still, director Richard Attenborough's movie may change the way some Indians perceive Gandhi and his teachings.



"Daddy, I didn't know he did all those things," Vithalbhai Patel, a member of Parliament, said his young son exclaimed after seeing the film.

"This movie will educate our youth about Gandhi," Patel said recently. "It is a good thing."

Policy ensures confidentiality of student records

By SALLY NIBLETT
Collegian Reporter

K-State has an established standard policy for handling student records, and unless student authorization is previously given, those records remain confidential.

"As in any human organization, there may be mistakes," William Feyerharm, assistant provost, said about confidential material mistakenly made public. He said that, although there is not a clear rule, there is a general rule to protect students' privacy.

"I've never encountered a problem in my 3½ years," he added.

Certain information, called directory information, concerning students is considered to be open to the public upon inquiry, according to the policy.

This information includes: name, Manhattan address and telephone number, permanent mailing address, college, curriculum, year in school, date and place of birth, dates of attendance at K-State, awards and academic honors, degrees and dates awarded, most recent educational institution attended, participation in officially recognized activities and sports, and height and weight of members of athletic teams.

DIRECTORY INFORMATION will be released by the Office of the Registrar for undergraduates and by the Graduate Office for graduate students to anyone upon inquiry, unless the student has requested — within 10 days after registering — that specific items not be released.

The K-State Student Records Policy states that, with the exception of directory information, students' records are generally considered to be confidential.

Doug Hurley, associate registrar, said records in the registrar's office really can't be kept completely confidential because of the number of students working with them every day. He said sensitivity of the matter is stressed to the employees and they are warned about abuse of their privileges.

"If there is evidence of abuse, we will release them (student workers)," Hurley said.

SAFEGUARDS, in the form of codes, prevent employees from obtaining access to computer records to change either their own or other students' records, he said.

Each type of student record — such as academic records or medical records — is the responsibility of a designated University official in charge of that certain area, and only that person or the dean, director or vice president to whom that person reports has authority to release the record, the policy states.

Many times there is a problem with parents or friends who call and want to know about a student's grades or grade point average, Feyerharm said. These are not released without the authorization of the student.

Occasionally, employers and bill collectors will call and request information, but without student authorization it will be denied, he said.

"WE'RE PRETTY tight in honoring students' confidentiality," Feyerharm said.

Phi Beta Kappa, scholastic honorary society, will occasionally request specific students' records to see if they qualify, but the selection committee consists of faculty members who are authorized to see the material, he said.

"Faculty members have access to all educational records," Hurley said, adding that each department is responsible for its own records and their confidentiality.

Kay Stewart, assistant to the dean of business administration, said she has experienced no problems of record confidentiality in the College of Business. She said IDs are required for proof before requests for any information or records are granted.

When the game Assassin was popular on campuses, students would come in and try to get other students' schedules to find out where they were, Stewart said. "We were very careful about that and I think everybody is," she said.

Consumer service offers advice to students

By BECKY FOLKERTS
Collegian Reporter

Since the establishment of the Consumer Relations Board in 1971, students have saved over $450,000, Pam Kohman, director of CRB, said.

The CRB, located in the Student Governing Association office in the Union, was organized for the sole purpose of assisting, advising and protecting students in consumer related matters.

"We're an objective organization with consumers and businesses in mind. We hear both sides of the story and approach each situation with concern," Kohman said.

The saving of an estimated $450,000 comes from advice given to students such as what to look for in buying a used car and where to buy the lowest priced food in Manhattan, she said.

According to Kohman, students could save even more money and time if they would utilize CRB's services.

"Ignorance is what causes people problems," she said. "It would save a lot of people a lot of time and a lot of money if they knew about us before their problems arise."

Issues that CRB deals with, Kohman said, are landlord/tenant problems, mail order foul-ups, small court advising, auto repair and warranty and promotion problems.

NATIONALLY recognized by the Consumer Federation of America and by the American Council on Consumer Interests, CRB also assists students when making consumer choices and acts as a liaison between them and businessmen.

"We try and teach people prevention," Kohman said. "First we see if they can correct the problem themselves; if they can't, we'll step in to help."

Kohman said if the problem presented is too big, or could be handled better elsewhere, CRB will refer students to someone who can help.

For instance, she said if a student has a problem with his landlord, "CRB will advise the student about the Landlord/Tenant Act. If the problem is too big for the CRB to handle, an attorney will be referred, who would offer the student legal advice and assistance."

OTHER REFERRALS, such as to the Better Business Bureau or housing department also will assist students, Kohman said.

"We also refer people to the attorney general's hotline for consumer protection concerns," she said.

Kohman said the CRB holds several special promotions. Last year, "The Grinch Who Stole Your Christmas," designed to inform students on wise shopping practices, was held.

The CRB also set up tables in the Union, displaying pamphlets and conducting taste tests and comparison shopping. Promotional speeches to living groups and public schools are other methods the CRB has used for recognition.

April 24 through 30 is "Promote Consumers Week," Kohman said, adding that since the University's major consumer promotion was during Christmas, no special events will be held.

Kohman said it wouldn't have done the students justice to have held the special promotion during the last couple of weeks of school.

"The majority of people we help are off-campus students and it's hard to gather these students together to inform them of our services.

"That's our main problem — not enough people know about us. We've got all this information that could really help out a lot of people if they only knew how to get it," she added.

"Get a grip with gripping spring hinges."

Day-care service gives alternative to home setting

By JANICE CARLTON
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan has a "munchken land." Munchken Land Daycare Center, owned and operated by Manhattan Child Care Management Inc. has given Manhattan residents and K-State students with families an alternative to in-home child care.

Munchken Land, located in the industrial park north of the McCall Pattern Co., looks more like a visiting spaceship than a daycare center.

The dome-shaped building with round windows circling its ceiling provides children with a large area for play, as well as energy efficiency for the owners, according to Mark Stallings, president of Manhattan Child Care Management.

Because the dome is constructed from concrete, utility bills are lower, he said.

"A properly run child-care center is good for a child," Stallings said, adding that the reason Munchken Land was created was to provide an alternative to in-home child care.

Munchken Land, which opened in June 1982, provides day-care services for 36 children, according to Kala Ady, director of the center. Ady said the children come mainly from families in the Manhattan area, with several from surrounding towns.

"The parents are definitely pleased with the care their children receive here," she said.

The center is licensed to accommodate up to 46 children, Ady said. However, there is a specific ratio of staff-to-children according to age. For children up to the age of 2½, there must be one staff member for every five children. For children older than 2, the staff-to-children ratio goes up to one staff member for every 12 children.

Munchken Land employs six people on its staff with K-State interns from pre-school labs providing volunteer services.

Stallings said the site for Munchken Land was chosen based on the availability of land and the site's proximity to the industrial park.

"We thought it would be a good place," he said. "There are a lot of jobs in the park and a lot of space."

Stallings said the center is dedicated not just to care of children, but also to their education. He cited a Feb. 3 story in the Kansas City Times, which said pre-school children were found to be more "socially competent" than children cared for in a home. They adjusted to social interaction easier, according to the article. The finding was the result of a study conducted by early childhood specialists at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah.

To meet the center's goal of providing educational experiences for the children, Stallings said field trips and arts and crafts are part of the weekly activities.

He said Manhattan Child Care management has tentative plans to open another day-care center on Buena Vista Drive on the west side of Manhattan.

K-State rugby gets better with age

By KEVIN DALE
Collegian Reporter

An elegant violence.

At first sight, the game of rugby seems anything but elegant. As soon as one gets accustomed to the game, however, the elegance of the sport does shine.

Rugby is a fluid contact sport which keeps every man on the field moving for 80 minutes. There are no huddles and no TV time-outs. Every man on the field must be ready to tackle, run, catch or kick at any moment. If a player cannot do all, he is not much use to the team.

The K-State Rugby Club has managed to put together a team that can not only tackle, run, catch and kick, but can do well against superior teams. In a short time, the rugby team has emerged as a national power and is ready to challenge the coastal teams which have dominated the sport in the United States for so long.

Wildcat head coach Mike Patten said the team is striving for credibility and recognition.

"I believe everyone wants to win the national championship as much for the school as they do for themselves," Patten said. "We want to prove that people from Kansas can play rugby. Winning the championship will get a lot of people talking about K-State and Kansas rugby. The motivating factor for everyone is to win the championship."

STRIVING FOR a national championship is something many teams are doing, but very few get as far as the K-State Rugby Club.

Two years ago the club made it to the final four. Last year it was one win away from reaching the final four. New Mexico State defeated the Wildcats in the finals of the western regionals. It took sudden-death overtime to do it, and Patten said he believes K-State was the better team.

"We would like to play them again, not so much for revenge but just to show them we are the better team," he said. "We should not have lost that game."

Patten, who has been playing rugby since 1974, likes the sport because of the demands it puts on the body.

"It takes more overall ability than football," he said. "You have to be more agile and have more stamina. You don't need as much strength, but you do need to be in better shape."

CLUB PRESIDENT Bill Sexton shared Patten's attitudes about the game.

"Rugby is a fast-flowing game and not as regimented as football. Rugby continuously demands a lot from an athlete. At any given moment you can go from offense to defense," Sexton said.

Rugby is one of the few amateur sports left in the world. There is a small fraction of rugby teams that has gone professional, but many feel professional rugby is detrimental to the tradition of the game.

"Rugby is a game played by amateur athletes and run by amateur athletes. I believe many of the people playing rugby would quit if it became professional," assistant coach Greg Barnes said.

Patten agreed that money should be kept out of the game.

"THERE IS NO external pressure on the game right now," Patten said. "Rugby is a non-revenue-generating sport. There is no pressure on winning to get money. No one's job is on the line and there is no one trying to make money off a team."

Along the same lines, team members said they would not want the NCAA to take over the sport.

"There would be too many guidelines and conflicts," Patten said.

Barnes and Sexton agreed that rugby is fine without the NCAA.

"I would hate to see us get caught up in it (the NCAA)," Sexton said. "There is too much politics involved in the NCAA. We would have to answer to people who don't know about the game. Also, only about half of the teams in the country are in colleges. This would cause a big split."

"I WOULD LIKE to see us get some recognition from the universities," Barnes added. "But I don't want the NCAA to take us over. I wouldn't want to see rugby run by anybody but rugby players."

Currently, the game in the United States

Women golfers sign recruit

K-State's women's golf team will add the winning talents of state 4A-3A-2A-1A champion Shelley Sherman to its lineup for next year. Wildcat coach Lila Levin announced Sherman had signed a national letter-of-intent Wednesday.

Sherman, a senior at Lyons High School, won the state women's high school golf championship last fall with an 18-hole score of 81, and averaged a score of 87 during fall play. Sherman collected three wins and two second places in tournament play as a senior and won the Mid-State League title her junior year.

Coffeyville Juco names 'Cats' Eads as head coach

Jim Eads, Jack Hartman's assistant basketball coach since 1977, was named head coach at Coffeyville Community College on Tuesday. Eads, 39, was named to succeed Gene Duke, who resigned last month after compiling a 126-97 record in eight seasons at Coffeyville.

Hartman's main force in basketball recruiting, Eads often went unnoticed for his coaching abilities while at K-State and was responsible for bringing fine talent to the school.

Eads, who was in his eighth year as assistant coach, has also done some coaching on the junior varsity level, as he guided K-State's junior varsity to an 11-0 mark in 1975-76, the best in the school's history.

Houston center may leave college for NBA

HOUSTON (AP) — Akeem Abdul Olajuwon, the University of Houston's 7-foot center, said he would forfeit his collegiate eligibility and enter the National Basketball Association draft if guaranteed he would play in Houston, the Houston Chronicle said in a copyright story Wednesday.

Speculation about Olajuwon's future has mounted since the NCAA playoffs when the Cougars lost in the final to North Carolina State 54-52.

Olajuwon, a 20-year-old sophomore from Nigeria, was named the tournament's outstanding player after compiling 41 points, 40 rebounds and 15 blocked shots in the Final Four.

Professional scouts projected Olajuwon would be among the top three players taken in the NBA college draft June 28. To be eligible, Olajuwon would have to renounce his amateur status by May 14.

"If I could be sure I was going to stay in Houston, I would come out," Olajuwon told the Chronicle.

The Chronicle quoted sources as saying Olajuwon met several times last week with Lee Fentress, a Washington, D.C. attorney who represents Philadelphia 76ers center Moses Malone, a close friend and confident of Olajuwon.

"It is a big decision and a difficult decision to make," Olajuwon said. "I will definitely have to make the decision by May 14, but I would really like to have it done by May 12 or sooner."

Olajuwon said his decision rests partly on teammate Clyde Drexler, a junior also rated highly by pro scouts. Drexler has remained non-committal about his plans.

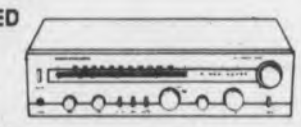
"Because I love to play basketball with Clyde Drexler. And if Clyde decided to turn professional, then I definitely would not have as much fun next year in college."

Olajuwon said he would not refuse to play professionally somewhere else besides Houston.

"If I was eventually drafted by a team in another city, I would have to go there and see how I liked it. I have not seen anywhere else. Maybe I would like it, maybe I would not. But I do know Houston and I love Houston. I would like to stay here."

The Rockets, with two of the first three picks in the draft, have had their sights set on Ralph Sampson, the 7-foot-4 center from the University of Virginia.

Ninth inning rally gives Royals win over Detroit, 8-7



DETROIT (AP) — George Brett drove in seven runs and belted three homers, including a two-run shot in the top of the ninth inning that gave the Kansas City Royals an 8-7 victory Wednesday night over the Detroit Tigers.

With the Royals trailing 7-6, Kansas City's speedy Willie Wilson began the rally with an infield single, a bouncer over the mound. After reliever Aurelio Lopez struck out U.L. Washington, left-hander Howard Bailey, 1-2, replaced Lopez. Brett greeted him with his third home run of the game and his fourth of the season, a shot into the right-field stands on a 2-0 pitch.

Running tough... Scott Peck, member of the K-State Rugby team, hustles toward the goal in a game against Jefferson City earlier this season.

Rugby

is run by the United States Rugby Football Union. The USRFU is just getting organized, and the game is thriving on the tradition of European rugby. Along with this maturing is a gradual change in people's views of the game.

"The image of the game is changing," Sexton said. "We are not just party-mongers. Sure we like to go out and party after a game, but we are serious athletes. There are three halves of a rugby game. There are the two you play on the field and the social half after the game."

"We play as hard and as clean as we can and then we get together with the other team after the game," Barnes said. "Rugby is a giant fraternity. You make friends all over the country and those friendships will last."

"RUGBY IS a sport you play all your life," Patten added. "Everyone from laborers to congressmen play rugby and everyone gets together to have a good time. Everybody thinks rugby players are nuts or the game is played by maniacs. We are very serious about our health. Rugby is a lot less violent and injury-prone than football.

"There used to be a time when we would just go get drunk and obnoxious after games. Now we still party a lot, but we get together with other teams and discuss things after the game. We can learn how to improve our team or talk about other players or techniques. We are just athletes playing an alternative game," Patten explained.

A novice spectator may indeed believe rugby players are maniacs — 30 men running around with no pads or protection hitting each other in what seems like complete disarray. Just when a spectator believes he has the game figured out, a scrum will occur and the spectator is then positive the players are insane.

A SCRUM IS when the biggest members of each team "bind" themselves together and both teams butt shoulders like two giant rams. The ball is then placed between the teams and a player — the hooker — attempts to kick the ball back to his team.

With all this going on, one would think the playersgo into the game with a blood-lust. But this is not so.

"We go in thinking about how we want to play," Patten said. "We don't win through sheer violence. We want to intimidate the other team through pressure defense and maintaining the ball and moving it forward."

Patten said if K-State plays like it did in the Heart of America Tournament, where it outscored its opponents 101-10, it should win this region and advance to Athens, Ga., for the national championships on May 7-8.

"WE ARE GOING to have to play team ball. We must have 15 guys out for the same objective. We also need to adjust to any combination or event that might come our way."

Barnes agreed with Patten's objective.

"We have some tremendous athletes but we need to play as a team to win the tournament," he said.

The team will take a 6-1-1 record to College Station, Texas today. The first game will be against Texas A&M on Saturday. The championship game will be held Sunday.

THE ARMY ROTC 2-YEAR PROGRAM. UP TO $1,000 A YEAR PLUS A COMMISSION.

If you passed up Army ROTC during your first two years of college, you can enroll in our 2-year program before you start your last two.

Your training will start the summer after your sophomore year at a six-week Army ROTC Basic Camp.

It'll pay off, too. You'll earn over $400 for attending Basic Camp and up to $1,000 a year for your last two years of college.

But, more important, you'll be on your way to earning a commission in today's Army — which includes the Army Reserve and Army National Guard — while you're earning a college degree.

ARMY ROTC. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Softball team drops pair at Emporia triangular

The K-State softball team's bats went cold with the cool weather Wednesday, as the Wildcats dropped both their games in the Emporia State Triangular in Emporia. The 'Cats lost the first game to Emporia State, 3-1, and dropped the second to Central Missouri State, 1-0.

Emporia State allowed the Wildcats only one hit in the first game, which resulted in K-State's only run of the day.

K-State pitcher Janel Anderson also had a good day at the mound, giving up only four hits. Emporia State took these, along with one Wildcat error, and came up with three runs.

Central Missouri State didn't treat the 'Cats much better, allowing only two hits. Unlike the previous game, however, the Wildcats couldn't convert either of the hits — one each by Kelly Scoles and Annette Kirkham — to runs. The defensive side of the team, while committing two throwing errors, did a good job keeping CMSU from converting its hits to runs. Anderson pitched again for K-State, and again did an admirable job, giving up six hits.

While CMSU could only come up with one run off its hits, that run was all the team needed to overcome the lack of hitting ability on the part of the Wildcats.

Anderson took both losses for K-State, as her record dropped to 7-11 on the year. K-State's team record is also 7-11, as the 'Cats have dropped their last three games.

K-State coach Ralph Currie summed up K-State's play in what was a mere repetition of the message given from the statistics of the game.

"We didn't hit the ball today," he said. "The seniors are not doing what they ought to be doing. We should play good ball when we get to the Big Eight; we're capable of a better game."

While Currie got down on his squad for its play in the triangular, he also gave due praise to the pitchers the Wildcats faced during the day, saying his team has faced "some real good pitching."

Even though the 'Cats aren't playing up to what Currie thinks they are capable of, the second-year coach said his team may be trying too hard for the elusive wins.

"When we lose a couple of games, the team, particularly the seniors, think we have to do more. And you can only do so much," Currie said.

The next action for the Wildcats is Saturday in Wichita, where the team will take on Pittsburgh State and Wichita State in another triangular.

The shortest distance between two schools is Long Distance.

With friends at other schools you can compare what's in... ...and what's out.

Discuss the itinerary for your next trip, and encourage your friend not to be quite so well prepared. ("I just don't think you'll need your skis in New York City....")

Solicit and/or provide solace and encouragement in the depths of a mid-term all-nighter.

The fact is, being away at different schools just gives you that much more to talk about.

Luckily, when you call anyone in Kansas after 11 pm weeknights, or anytime between 11 pm Friday and 5 pm Sunday, you can talk 10 minutes for $1.63.* Or less, depending on where you call.

Going away to school is even more fun when you share it with a friend. Especially a friend who's away at school!

Reach out and touch someone.

Royals

Brett hit a solo home run in the first inning off Jack Morris. Willie Wilson singled in the third, stole second, was sacrificed to third and scored on a single by Brett. In the sixth, Amos Otis doubled and later scored on a sacrifice fly by Jerry Martin to make it 3-0.

Detroit got one run in the bottom of the sixth on John Wockenfuss' RBI single, but the Royals made it 6-1 in the seventh on Brett's three-run homer that chased Morris.

Gura was rolling along with a three-hitter before the Tigers struck. Chet Lemon started the rally with a leadoff walk, and singles by Glenn Wilson, Tom Brookens and Lou Whitaker produced two runs and chased Gura.

Pinch hitter Kirk Gibson greeted Quisenberry with a sacrifice fly that left fielder Willie Wilson dropped for a two-base error. Whitaker scored on Larry Herndon's grounder, Gibson scored the tying run on Lance Parrish's double and Wockenfuss' single gave the Tigers a 7-6 lead.

Supreme Court to permit states to ban new nuclear power plants

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a major setback to the nuclear power industry, the Supreme Court ruled Wednesday that states can ban construction of new plants until the federal government devises a safe way to dispose of radioactive waste.

The Reagan administration had argued that allowing states to prohibit new plants could seriously jeopardize the growth of nuclear power as a source of electricity.

But after the 9-0 decision, upholding a 1976 California moratorium on new atomic power plants, industry spokesmen tried to play down its impact.

"It's not the death knell for nuclear power," said Linda Hodge, counsel for the Atomic Industrial Forum.

Robert Dobkin, a spokesman for the same trade group, said there is not likely to be any immediate impact on the 57 nuclear plants already under construction nationwide.

Laurence Tribe, the Harvard law professor who represented California, said the decision means states can prevent plants already under construction from beginning operations.

"The decision's underlying rationale is a total victory for the states," he said. The states' power under the ruling "plainly is independent of the question whether the plan has begun construction or not," he said.

However, Tribe did not suggest that states necessarily would try to block those plants from beginning operations. To do so, they likely would have to compensate fully the affected plant owners.

To date, no state has tried to prevent a plant under construction from eventually beginning operations. There are two plants being built in California which were exempted by the state from its seven-year-old moratorium.

The 80 nuclear plants already operating nationwide are not affected by the ruling.

The immediate impact of Wednesday's decision also is muted because expansion of the industry has slowed in recent years. No utility has sought a license to build a new facility since 1978.

The industry's future has been clouded by the high cost of building new plants and safety fears raised by the accident which shut down Pennsylvania's Three Mile Island plant in 1979.

Supreme Court ruling will not affect plans for Wolf Creek plant

TOPEKA (AP) — A U.S. Supreme Court decision Wednesday allowing states to ban new nuclear power plants until the federal government finds safe methods to dispose of radioactive waste will not stop construction of the Wolf Creek nuclear plant, spokesmen for state government and utilities said.

In a 9-0 ruling, the court upheld a moratorium on new nuclear plants enacted by California in 1976.

Kansas Attorney General Robert Stephan called the ruling "magnificent," saying it broadens states' powers in nuclear power issues. Stephan said the decision would not affect development of the Wolf Creek plant.

Pete Loux, chairman of the Kansas Corporation Commission, said of the ruling, "Really, it's kind of a moot point in Kansas, because there are no plans for any new plants in this state. But, in the long term, it does have implications because it says the states do have a say on the safety issue."

Protest

the boos from the crowd. He told the employees 1983 has been a bad year for people across the state, and not just for state employees.

"I admit it's been a bad year for state employees too," Bunten said. "I'm going to remind you that your situation is not all that bad.

"Some of you are a little belligerent and maybe that's justified. But you don't intimidate me."

Sen. Paul Hess, R-Wichita and Senate budget committee, asked the crowd what it thought the Legislature should do to increase revenues and allow lawmakers to raise salaries. The crowd shouted many different alternatives such as increasing sales and corporation taxes.

"I think your comments illustrate what's been going on inside these halls," Hess said. "We don't have the money in the treasury."

All three legislators told the crowd there had been no signifigant number of layoffs of state employees in several years.

"But at least you have a job!" Hess shouted over the crowd's yells.

Some of the employees suggested the Legislature should have passed the pari-mutuel gambling amendment, which would have allowed voters to decide whether they wanted to allow wagering on horse and dog races in the state, to raise money. The measure was killed on the Senate floor.

But Hess said, "Pari-mutuel won't get us out of the soup."

"I feel your frustration and pain, but I also think you need to spend some time with the governor of the state," Hess said.

He said the Legislature probably will freeze state employee salaries until January. But he did not say whether the freeze would apply to health benefits.

Default

"After all, with the kinds of jobs and salaries available, many students will be lucky to keep their heads above water."

Even searching for a job could take months, Aaron pointed out, "and when you're starting a career there are certain start-up costs, moving expenses, clothing and other expenses that have to come before repaying a loan."

But the number of grads filing for protection under brankruptcy laws could increase if the economy doesn't improve, ACE policy analyst Elaine El-Khawas said.

Right now the number of grads who escape repaying their loans by declaring bankruptcy is around 1 percent.

"Most of those are genuine hardship cases," she said.

Some are more desperate than others. In December, a federal court turned down a former Wright State University student who wanted to repay the school just 1 percent of the amount she still owed on her loan. After 36 months, she would have paid back a total of $14.82.

THE COURT decided the former student, who is now a teacher and co-owns some real estate in Ohio, hadn't shown "good faith" when she proposed repaying so little.

In what is perhaps a more typical case, however, a California federal court recently relieved a former San Diego State student of her loan obligation because the woman's nervous disabilities and hearing losses have prevented her from holding a job for long.

Students can't apply for bankruptcy losses until five or more years after the loans originally become due, Department of Education spokesman Duncan Helmrich said.

Even with the predicted tight job market, "they'll still have nine months to find jobs before loan repayments have to start," he said.

MOREOVER, "most defaulters have jobs and just have a 'the government gets paid last attitude,'" claimed Virginia Powell, a U.S. attorney in Philadelphia who has gone after a number of loan deadbeats there.

U.S. attorneys in Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Los Angeles have gone as far as towing away the cars of student loan defaulters.

And the Education Department last fall installed a new computer to help track down the estimated 1 million former students who still owe loan payments.

Such efforts won't unfairly punish "real hardship cases," Powell said, "as long as they keep in touch with the relevant agency and work out some kind of deferment plan."

Jobs

Pengilly, with the College Placement Council, said.

"And salary offers are not increasing like they were several years ago," she added. "For the last few years we saw salaries increasing by 8 to 10 percent a year. This year they've gone up only 1 to 2 percent."

Moreover, few experts expect things to improve greatly in the near future.

"We're seeing a few sectors of the market beginning to improve — like the defense sector — but for the most part the so-called recovery has yet to have an effect.

"And for every one company that may be hiring a few more people this year, there are 10 who are cutting back," Lindquist said.

Even if the recovery begins to whittle away at the unemployment rate, Shingleton added, "the blue collar workers will be brought back first. Then there'll be a considerable lag before companies start hiring white collar people."

Israel fears Syrian defense signals war preparation

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel signaled concern Thursday that Syria might be preparing for war, and the military command reported two Israelis and four Arabs killed in the latest clash along the Syrian-Israeli front line in Lebanon.

The command said Israeli troops intercepted four guerrillas trying to infiltrate Israeli lines south of Sofar near the Beirut-Damascus highway late Wednesday. It did not say if the guerrillas were Syrians or Palestinians.

An Israeli army spokesman reported that a third Israeli soldier was killed Thursday in southern Lebanon in an ambush about 11 miles north of the Israeli border.

The incidents coincided with news reports of increasing Syrian activity in Lebanon, an extensive Soviet rearmament of Syria and recent Syrian war games — cited as evidence of a possible Syrian offensive.

The reports, carried by most major newspapers and radio networks, originated from a background briefing to Israeli military correspondents by Defense Minister Moshe Arens.

The reports said it was not clear whether the Syrians were preparing a spring campaign or were adopting a defensive posture because they feared an Israeli attack.

But in a clear signal to Damascus, the reports said Israel had no intention of launching an attack, and was deliberately avoiding measures that could be read by Syria as a provocation.

"We do not want to have any conflict with the Syrians," said a Foreign Ministry spokesman who was asked to comment.

Israeli military sources said the Syrians were returning to positions they abandoned with the onset of winter snows, but were not reinforcing beyond their strength of last autumn. The Syrians now have more than two divisions in Lebanon or near the border.

The sources said the Syrians could switch from a defensive to an offensive deployment within a few hours.

The military command reported a sharp rise in the number of attacks on Israeli forces in the last two months. It said the winter lull was followed by nine incidents in March in which three Israeli soldiers killed, and eight incidents this month with five dead.

The Israelis contend that the Syrians keep a tight rein on Palestinian guerrillas in territory under their control, and such attacks would be impossible without Syrian collusion.

Protection to double at Jett/Lewis concert; security success lies in recruitment process

By DARCY McPHERSON
Staff Writer

Except for an increased number of staff, security for the Joan Jett/Huey Lewis concert tonight will not be much different from that of past concerts, according to Dee Futrelle, a member of Union Program Council Special Events Committee.

Futrelle, who is coordinating the security for the Jett/Lewis concert and coordinated it for the Chicago concert last fall, said security people for the concerts are recruited from reliable friends or people who have worked previous concerts. A few, she said, are UPC members.

"The key to having a good security system is choosing people we know are reliable adults who know how to be responsible," Futrelle said.

FOR THE JETT/LEWIS concert, more than 70 people will be used as security staff. Only 28 were used during the Chicago concert.

"The reason we're having more people is the style of music. It's more hard rock and the age group will be younger than that at the Chicago concert. We're also expecting a more energetic performance," Futrelle said.

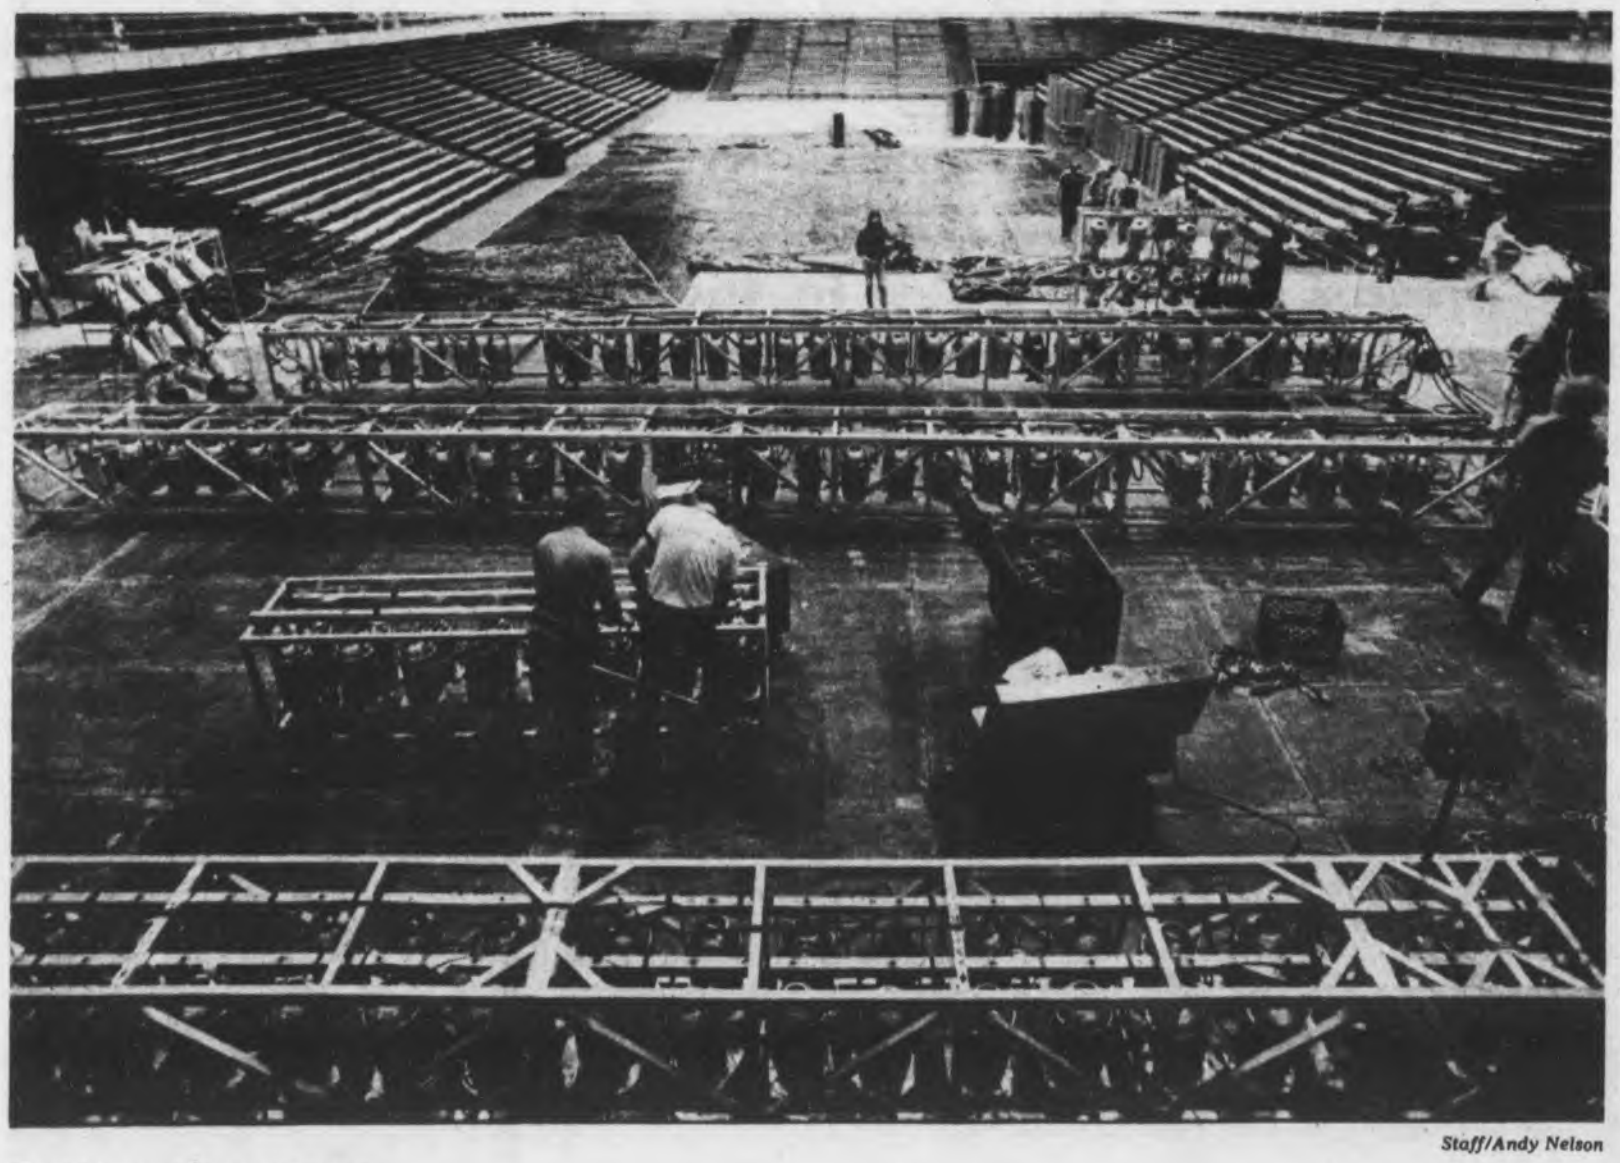
Security will be working the doors, across the stage behind the barrier, backstage, dispersed among the audience and on the lighting and sound boards.

Normally, those working the concerts receive no pay. They do, however, get free admission to the concert and in the past have received free concert T-shirts.

THIS CONCERT IS different. Due to poor ticket sales, no money is available to pay for everyone's T-shirt. Workers are paying $4 toward their T-shirt, she said.

"It's too bad because they work hard and really shouldn't have to pay for their T-shirts. But everyone has been real understanding about it," she said. "The apathy about the concert is obvious on campus, people who are working the concert can see this and realize that we just don't have the money to pay for the shirts. This has never happened before."

According to Futrelle, people will be pat-searched in the same manner they were at the Chicago concert. Purses and coats will also be searched.



She said security people will be looking for alcohol, flash cameras, tape recorders, drugs and green fluorescent lightsticks. If any of these items is found, people will be asked to take them back to cars. As for alcohol and green sticks, persons who have them will be given the option of taking the items away or throwing them away, otherwise the items will be confiscated. Cameras and tape recorders must be taken out or the person will not be admitted.

FUTRELLE SAID THE Chicago concert was the first time pat-search was used.

"After the J. Geils concert we found a multitude of liquor bottles. The Red Cross went crazy with people getting sick from alcohol. This prompted us to begin a pat-search program," Futrelle said.

"Most people were very cooperative at

Student Senate reduces funds for MEChA

By LISA HOOKER
Government Editor

Student Senate considered and voted on tentative allocations for MEChA, University for Man, and the International Coordinating Council Thursday night.

Results of considerations for the Puerto Rican Student Organization, Early Childhood Laboratory and Black Student Union were not available at press time.

After a lengthy discussion, senate voted to allocate $539 to MEChA, a national organization for Hispanic Americans. MEChA's request was for $1,011.90, and Finance Committee's recommendation for $768.90 was amended by cutting its advertising budget from $104.40 to $90 and its state car travel budget from $319.90 to $90.

MEChA requested $319.90 for state car travel to attend five conferences across the state. Although the organization had limited itself to five conferences rather than attending a possible 12, it was charged that the organization had not made a concerted effort to raise funds, whether through activities or charging dues for membership.

Finance Committee's recommendation of funding of $12,770 to University for Man was approved as written. Mark Terril, chairman of the Finance Committee, said senate set up a task force in 1980-81 to look into funding for UFM.

SENATE SUBSEQUENTLY made an agreement with UFM to go on a program that would cut 10 percent of the original base budget of $15,034 from each previous year's budget. Therefore, approximately $1,503.40 was subtracted from the 1982-83 allocation which gave the committee the recommended figure.

Senate also considered funding for the International Coordinating Council and approved an amended recommendation of $3,283.73. The committee originally recommended $3,234.23, but an amendment of the allocation for advertising from $297 to $346.50 was passed.

In senate's Tuesday meeting, it passed an amended tentative allocation for the FONE crisis center. Finance Committee's original recommendation was for $8,227.50, and senate approved an $8,626.35 allocation, which included an increase in the telephone allowance from $1,170 to $1,600 and a cut in advertising from $285 to $253.85.

Acker submits proposal for academic services charge; revenue to buy library materials, computer equipment

A proposal to institute a special academic services fee of $10 per semester per student for the 1983-84 school year was submitted to the Kansas Board of Regents at its April meeting by President Duane Acker.

"If this fee request is approved, approximately $320,000 will be generated (per year) to provide funding for library acquisitions, instructional computing and other equipment," Provost Owen Koeppe said.

The fee proposal, submitted last Friday, is scheduled to receive final action at the May board meeting. Koeppe said Acker "has the option of modifying the $10 request."

Though the fee request could be lowered, Koeppe said he didn't believe a higher monetary request would be sought.

Certain fee increase requests for regents universities were scheduled in advance for the April and May meetings. Student Body President Jerry Katlin said Acker originally asked for a month's delay in proposing the fee increase. This would have meant that the bill would have been first heard in May instead of April, and final action would not have taken place until the June meeting.

"Acker thought if the fee was brought up before the legislative session ended, state financing might be cut. He was concerned about a shift of the financial burden from the state to the student. That's why he wanted to wait until May," Katlin said.

However, after a meeting of Acker, board members, and Chancellor Gene Budig of the University of Kansas the night before the April meeting, it was decided to "bring all fee requests before the April meeting," Katlin said.

KU is proposing the same $10-per-semester per-student fee increase.

Katlin said he was "happy that the request was brought up at the April meeting, since it will allow for more student input. If the issue was postponed until May, students wouldn't have had the opportunity" to voice their opinions.

Koeppe said he hoped students understood that their best interests were at stake in trying to authorize the fee.

"Our feeling is that in some areas we are so desperate for funds that we are left with few alternatives," Koeppe said.

Koeppe said he could not say for certain if the proposed fee would be used in future years to meet funding obligations.

the Chicago concert, and we don't anticipate any trouble. We have advertised the fact that were going to do this, and it is written on the back of the tickets," she said.

There will also be five campus police at the concert, according to Barbara Burke, UPC director.

"We have these people here just in case there is some trouble," Burke said.

"WE REALLY DON'T have authority, nor do we want to have the authority to get into physical battle to remove somebody. We're there to uphold the rules of the fieldhouse and state laws," Futelle said.

"What we do have the authority to do is ask people to put out cigarettes, confiscate any alcohol or drugs and request police to remove someone who is being particularly disruptive.

"We don't anticipate any problems. We have been pretty careful screening our security people. We want this concert to go as smoothly as possible, so we can keep the door open for future concerts," Futrelle said.

The Red Cross will also have 8 to 16 volunteers at the concert to help any one who gets sick or hurt. They will be stationed in one of the ticket booths.

ACCORDING TO BURKE, Joan Jett's road crew seems a bit more concerned about security than other bands have been in the past.

"I think it's the type of audience they expect to attract. They are also used to playing in larger cities and on the coast where audiences may be more rowdy," Burke said.

No cameras, not even press cameras will be allowed to take pictures of Jett in concert, according to Burke. Huey Lewis will allow pictures.

"Jet has her own photographer who supplies pictures to the local media," Burke said.

Neither Futrelle nor Burke said any problems are anticipated at the concert.

Condemned killer wins stay of execution

ATMORE, Ala. — John Louis Evans III won a stay of execution Thursday night as the condemned killer was receiving last rites about two hours before he was to die in the electric chair.

The stay, granted by U.S. District Judge Emmett Cox of Mobile, came hours after U.S. Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell in Washington refused to block the execution.

Alabama Attorney General Charles Graddick, working with the Georgia attorney general's office, asked the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta late Thursday to throw out Cox's temporary stay and allow the execution to proceed early Friday.

Under federal judicial procedures, Cox had the authority to review the Evans case and issue any order he felt was proper, an aide to the state attorney general said.

Evans, 33, was sentenced to die at 12:01 a.m. CST today for the 1977 robbery-murder of Mobile pawn shop owner Edward Nassar. In 1979, Evans came within six hours of electrocution before getting a stay he hadn't sought.

John Glenn declares presidential candidacy

NEW CONCORD, Ohio — In a high school that bears his name, Democratic Sen. John H. Glenn declared his presidential candidacy on Thursday and vowed to push for an immediate freeze of nuclear weapons, repeal of future tax cuts and a return to "the simple values we learned in this small town."

Glenn became the sixth Democrat to formally announce a bid for the White House. Polls within the party rank him second behind former Vice President Walter F. Mondale in the race for the nomination in San Francisco next year.

He chastised President Reagan for talking about values while his administration's deeds "have fallen short of its words."

In his announcement speech, Glenn endorsed "an immediate, mutual and verifiable freeze on nuclear weapons" while placing particular emphasis on the word "verifiable."

Carlin vetoes bill on grounds of restriction

TOPEKA — Gov. John Carlin vetoed Thursday a bill Secretary of State Jack Brier sought because he said he wants Kansans to be assured free access to voting places without being bothered by solicitors.

Carlin said it placed too great a restriction on freedom of speech, specifically mentioning in his veto message that it would have effectively prohibited exit polling by the news media. Exit polling involves asking voters as they leave polling places to voluntarily say how they voted or give their opinions on issues.

Brier said he fears it is becoming cumbersome on occasion for people to vote in Kansas without having people solicit them for everything from raffle tickets to bread sales.

"Specifically, the exercise of free speech would be severely curtailed and limited by the prohibition of the solicitation of opinions," Carlin said. "Certain currently accepted journalistic practices, such as 'exit polling,' would be effectively prohibited by this bill. In Kansas, I am unaware of the need for such a prohibition."

Nixon supports space-age weapons proposal

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Former President Richard M. Nixon said Thursday he supports President Reagan's proposal to develop weapons for use in space.

"The U.S. in this case should go forward," Nixon said, adding that he would suggest sharing technology with "the Soviet Union and other parties interested" if it would reduce the threat of nuclear war.

Nixon was in Kansas City to help raise funds for the Missouri Republican party at events that were closed to the news media. The former president answered questions after his arrival at Kansas City International Airport.

Nixon told reporters he understands the sentiment behind the U.S. nuclear freeze movement but feels it is poorly timed.

Nine indicted for conspiracy in 1979 KKK rally

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Six current and former Ku Klux Klansmen and three American Nazi Party members were indicted Thursday for conspiring to disrupt a 1979 anti-Klan demonstration in Greensboro, N.C., where five Communist Workers Party members were killed.

Another former Klansman was charged on March 24 with participating in the conspiracy. He pleaded guilty that day before U.S. District Judge Hiram Ward.

In Washington, William Bradford Reynolds, head of the civil rights division of the Justice Department, said the nine new defendants were named in a 14-count federal grand jury indictment.

Four were charged with interfering with federally protected rights, resulting in death, which carries a maximum penalty of life in prison.

All the defendants were charged with conspiring to interfere with federally protected rights of the Communist Workers Party demonstrators to participate in the parade.

—BODY OF MURPHY FOUND—
Paddy Murphy, the thought to be dead member of the SAE House, was spotted again by two students Thursday evening. Mike Hunt and his sidekick Mike Hawk were said to have seen Murphy staggering naked down Moro in Aggieville, smelling of sheep. Murphy spotted a beer truck and attempted to "J.F." into its open rear doors when the truck driver suddenly drove away, leaving Murphy to slam into an expired parking meter. Murphy then staggered into a local beer establishment where he was hit with a loaded purse, because of what was thought to be an indecent exposure case, by a little old lady who happened to work for the R.E. Rection Construction Company; Murphy was killed instantly. When the President of the SAE House was asked if he was going to press murder charges against the Little Old Lady, he just burped and passed out in the hallway.
Paddy's relatives have requested a "decent" burial Saturday night. An intoxicated spokesman said today, "My advice to you is drink heavily," as he wiped a tear from his eye, "Paddy would have had it that way."

Permit overcharge must be corrected

Traffic and Parking Council was wrong in failing to correct its error in the motorcycle parking permits.

Last year, permits cost $5. The price was scheduled to increase to $10 this year. However, a typographical error on the list of traffic fees made the permits cost $20 — a 300 percent increase. This made motorcyclists pay the same parking permit fee as automobile owners.

Instead of either correcting the error or refunding the overcharged amount, the $20 fee was collected.

While money is needed by Security and Traffic to maintain parking lots, this error should have been corrected.

Motorcycles take up less space than do cars; therefore, they should be charged less for parking permits than cars.

The plan to reduce the permit fees to $10 next year won't solve the problem. There are motorcyclists who are either graduating or leaving K-State. What good will reducing the fee for next year do them?

The argument that refunds weren't given because it would have taken six months to have the Board of Regents approve refunding the overcharge is absurd. When a person is overcharged for items at a store, a refund (or a lawsuit) is in order. The same can be said in this case.

The motorcyclists deserve a refund. They should pursue the issue until they receive it.

Musical tastes vary

Editor,

I would like to express my concern over the obvious ignorance of the letter to the editor by Christian Wolff in Wednesday's Collegian ("Concert support needed"), as well as the other articles concerning the poor ticket sales of the Joan Jett concert.

To see every excuse except for the obvious one is an oversight which I feel needs to be corrected. The letter claims responsibility of the poor ticket sales on the student body. Did he ever consider the problem may lie in the choice (by UPC) of the type of music or artists involved?

It would seem reasonable to have a concert on campus with music which a college-age crowd can listen to. Other colleges have large outdoor concerts with several big-name bands with progressive rock or jazzy music. This seems to be the best idea — it would be a great event as well as a moneymaker. Joan Jett tends to attract a younger-age group, such as junior high and high school students.

I hope the results of this concert will not affect the future of good, quality concerts at the University.

'Free' enterprise?

"Free? It can't be."

"But the sign says 'FREE.'"

"OK, what's the catch? How can you get away with this? Nothing's free."

"She said, 'It's free.' Oh, the car wash, that is."

Have you ever tried to give anything away these days or doing something for nothing? If so, you've found the general consensus is: "You're crazy!"

One Sunday — actually just last week — a club I belong to had a "free" car wash. By getting pledges for the number of cars washed, the club planned to earn some money for new gear. Although getting people to pledge so many cents per car wasn't exactly easy, convincing people that day that there was no catch — no strings attached and no sales pitch to listen to — was probably the hardest thing I've ever done.

My job was easy enough when I was industriously scrubbing away on the cars whose drivers finally believed the females standing along Anderson and Claflin — plus one stationed in the drive of the Union National Bank parking lot — whose sole purpose was to attract the attention of unsuspecting drivers. Holding signs advertising anything free brings looks of disbelief, amazement, awe and lots of laughs from anyone. But, a free car wash was simply too much for most people to handle.

THOSE WHO DID BELIEVE happened to be people who have never visited a car wash as long as they've owned their car. I've never seen a four-wheel drive Rabbit, but one guy apparently tried to take his through some awful deep mud.

Cries of "Oh my God, here comes a van!" were heard several times that day as the group of washers, tire scrubbers and rinsers watched the foreboding vehicle pull in line. Whispers of, "If we do it right, that side will get it," echoed from both lines of the washing area.

Although I spent most of the day (my arms and back certainly told me about it the next morning) with my hands in water, seeing mud fall from vehicles, I found myself standing behind one of those signs later that afternoon. Since our limit was 300 cars, our aim was to bring in those 300 as soon as possible. People thought we were crazy enough doing the job for free, but why were we trying to get people there? I explained our reasons to several people in the first five minutes of my campaign to get cars into the lot.

REACTIONS WERE DIFFERENT, but most followed the same pattern. The word "FREE" struck the driver's attention, and the individual immediately slowed down. After reading the sign, most became puzzled. Reactions from there were varied. Those who ultimately took advantage of the offer usually slowed down, pulled in and began asking, "Is it really free? How are you getting away with this?" Others simply smiled, nodded their heads and drove on muttering, "Sure. I'm not stupid enough to believe that!"

Foreigners really couldn't understand. "Is really free?" I wouldn't have been surprised if they didn't know what the word meant, especially here in the United States.

A few others smiled and explained their car was just washed yesterday as they drove by with a knowing smirk on their faces. One guy gave me two chances to explain why we were being so crazy.

Driving by the first time, he smiled and shook his head. Not more than five minutes later, he drove by in the opposite direction. Stopping, he asked,"OK, how much is it?" I explained that there was no charge; the car wash really was free. "Just tell me how much it is," he answered, getting a little impatient with the runaround I was giving him.

"It's free!"

HE REALLY COULDN'T handle that. "You're crazy!" he said, pointing at me, shaking his head and taking off.

Regardless of the number of doubters and disbelievers we encountered that day, we finally met our quota around 3:30 or 4 that afternoon. Through advertisement previous to the date, enough people knew about our plans to supply us with the needed number of cars to wash.

After thinking about difficulties getting drivers to take advantage of our offer, I began thinking about how bad things have really gotten. Nothing's free in the United States anymore, and most people just don't know what to expect if something is supposedly free. There are enough people who misuse the word "free" now that the word simply is not trusted. Unfortunately, the word "free" has connotations of strings attached, the never-ending sales pitch, and just plain bad deals.

Hopefully, our attempt restored some faith in the word. After all, the next time I'm campaigning for a free car wash, I would prefer not being thought of as crazy.

Reagan proposal deregulating gas remains intact

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Energy Committee on Thursday kept alive President Reagan's promise to deregulate natural gas, narrowly defeating a Democratic call to continue price controls on about half the nation's supply.

The administration, however, acknowledged that it still has an uphill fight in getting a reluctant Congress to remove the price ceilings on "old" gas, even though it promises that consumer bills would fall next winter.

"I do not in the slightest believe that it is the last battle," said Energy Secretary Donald Hodel, the chief architect of the White House bill. "But we are much further toward a decontrol bill than anyone ever thought we would be two months ago."

By a 10-8 margin, the Republican-controlled committee defeated a resolution by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, to eliminate decontrol of old gas from the panel's deliberations. Consumer rates have spiralled despite a glut in supplies and falling prices at the wellhead.

The administration claims the price distortions are primarily the result of the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act, which kept price ceilings on gas discovered before April 1977 and set up the mechanism for gradually decontrolling by 1987 controls on any new gas.

Sen. Bennett Johnston of Louisiana, the ranking Democrat on the Energy Committee and the only one to side with the administration, said the result is that pipelines in his state are paying prices ranging from 27 cents to $6.05 for the same 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas, depending on whether it is old or new.

"Any kind of statutory system that has that kind of disparity has to be wrong," he said. "I don't think the administration's bill is perfect, but it will probably give consumers lower prices the next two or three years."

Metzenbaum, however, said lifting the price ceilings on the 135 trillion cubic feet of old gas still in the ground will create a windfall profit of $48 billion to $68 billion for the top 20 oil companies. Those companies, he said, own 75 percent of the old gas.

"It will cost residential households an average $1,000 more over the next three years if we decontrol old gas," he said.

The non-binding vote Thursday was on a "sense of the committee" resolution that Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, the panel's chairman and chief sponsor of the White House bill, said was needed to tackle other myriad issues in the legislation.

"I do not regard this as a litmus test of loyalty to the administration," McClure said. "It simply indicates how the committee is going to approach the issue. The close vote signifies the necessity for some kind of compromise."

Backup severance tax bill awaits Carlin approval

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. John Carlin vetoed late Thursday a severance tax bill sent him nearly two weeks ago, killing it just minutes after the House approved and delivered to him a replacement measure nearly identical to the first one.

The backup severance measure went to the governor on a vote of 88-36 without being debated. The Senate had approved it on Wednesday, 26-11.

The House also passed, with no votes to spare, a highway funding bill which is virtually certain to be amended by the Senate and then go to a conference committee to resolve differences between the two houses.

Approved 63-61 after nearly four hours of debate was a measure which would increase the state's gasoline and diesel taxes by three cents a gallon effective July 1, transfer $60 million from the freeway fund to the highway fund over the next three fiscal years and finance the Kansas Highway Patrol out of the general fund instead of from the highway fund starting in Fiscal Year 1985.

The House version also provides for indexing the motor fuel taxes, so they rise or drop as the prices of the fuels increase or decline in the future.

In vetoing the first severance tax bill, Carlin noted in his veto message that "a great deal of concern was expressed regarding the constitutionality of procedures used by the House of Representatives in passing this bill," and that Attorney General Robert Stephan recommended a substitute bill be approved.

He also noted that sufficient time remained for the Legislature to enact another bill and as well as make technical corrections in the first version, and for those reasons he vetoed the bill.

Carlin made no other comment, but he is expected to sign the new bill although an aide said the bill will be closely scrutinized to make sure there are no other errors which might cause it to be unconstitutional.

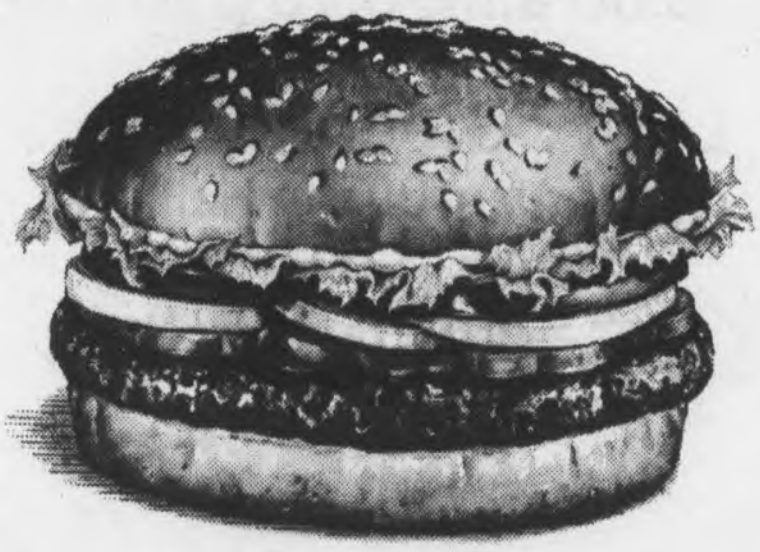
The Senate sent a second part of the funding package to the governor, approving a $10 million increase in liquor taxes, 22-18, but Senate Democrats succeeded in delaying until Friday consideration of a third component which would raise cigarette taxes by nearly $15 million.

The exchange of the two severance tax bills marked the culmination of 28 months of Carlin's battle to have laid on his desk a bill imposing a production tax on oil and natural gas which he could sign.

He is expected to sign this one after it goes through the enrolling process and is ready for his signature, probably sometime next week. However, Press Secretary Mike Swenson said the governor's staff would go over it carefully to check for any possible mistakes before he signs it, even though Carlin has agreed to its provisions.

The severance tax exchange came immediately after the House took its final vote.

It was run only because the House failed to handle it under emergency procedures when it first was passed April 9, and Stephan cautioned that the oversight could cause the state Supreme Court to declare it to be unconstitutional.



"We broke the Senate's record," Rep. James Braden of Clay Center, chairman of the House Assessment and Taxation Committee, told the House when discussion on the bill was limited to his brief explanation of what was in it. "It

Nuclear engineers keep low profile

By JEFF ENDACOTT
Collegian Reporter

People lie down on railroad tracks attempting to stop a shipment of what is believed to be nuclear weapons. Protesters march at construction sites of nuclear power plants and nuclear waste dumps.

Few people want to deal with anything nuclear. It's a frightening issue for many.

At last year's All-University Open House, a man visibly upset argued with students at a nuclear engineering presentation.

"You're a liar," he loudly proclaimed to Jim Crotinger, senior in nuclear engineering, about his pro-nuclear presentation. When Crotinger told the man his information came from documented studies, "He still tried to argue with me for 15 minutes," Crotinger said.

Because of such anti-nuclear opinions, the Department of Nuclear Engineering tries to maintain a low profile, a decision Dean Eckhoff, head of the deparment since 1977, made after lecturing four years about the safety of nuclear energy.

"We (members of the nuclear engineering department) tried to do what we thought was a reasonable approach to answering questions," Eckhoff said, and used an open forum approach when talking to any group willing to listen.

But four years of trying to convince the public nuclear energy was safe without getting positive results caused him to take his low profile.

"I HAVEN'T DONE that recently (lectured about nuclear energy). During the last two years I've been less visible than some people think maybe I should," he said.

Accredited in 1961, K-State's nuclear engineering undergraduate program was the nation's first and is now one of only 30 in the United States. The department's faculty was rated outstanding by the National Society of Professional Engineers in 1975.

The best indication of the faculty's performance, Eckhoff said, is how well students fare after graduating, as a number of them have gone on to distinguish themselves at institutions such as Massachusetts Institute of Technology and California Institute of Technology.

BEING PRO-NUCLEAR in light of objections from the public is a matter of reasoning for Eckhoff. As a scholar in search of the truth, it's necessary to look objectively at the energy sources available today, he said. Coal is limited and the uranium found in nature can be used for nuclear energy to produce electricity for hundreds of years to come.

"If nuclear (energy) doesn't develop in the proper way, you can expect a coal future," Eckhoff said. "Coal is just as good as nuclear, but it's got some problems."

In light of that fact, the nuclear engineering department is also researching the combustion of fossil fuels.

"Most of the anti-nuclear stuff that goes on is really a misunderstanding on the part of most people," Eckhoff said, adding that nuclear energy supporters have a difficult time explaining the laws of physics to the average citizen.

"ONCE YOU UNDERSTAND the laws of physics — as little as I understand them with respect to nuclear power — I think you'll find that keeping a reactor going to do the job it's supposed to do is a difficult job.

"To keep the chain reaction and to keep the power produced, you have to be very clever in what you do. For the thing to run away and to do something that is really catastrophic is almost unimaginable," he said.

According to Eckhoff, nuclear engineers — because of their scientific background — must admit there is a possibility for nuclear accidents. But they don't believe the accidents can happen, he said.

Most involved with the nuclear industry believe the public will eventually accept nuclear energy rather than face the chance of running out of fossil fuels, Eckhoff said. However, the delayed acceptance could cause American dependence on foreign technology.

"THERE IS A feeling in the industry that we will be buying back American (nuclear) technology from France and Japan in the not too distant future," Eckhoff said. The French are now buying and putting American nuclear technology to work.

According to Eckhoff, the French have declared a moratorium on fossil fuel energy plants and are strictly building nuclear power plants. Development of the breeder reactor has been an essential part of France's policy.

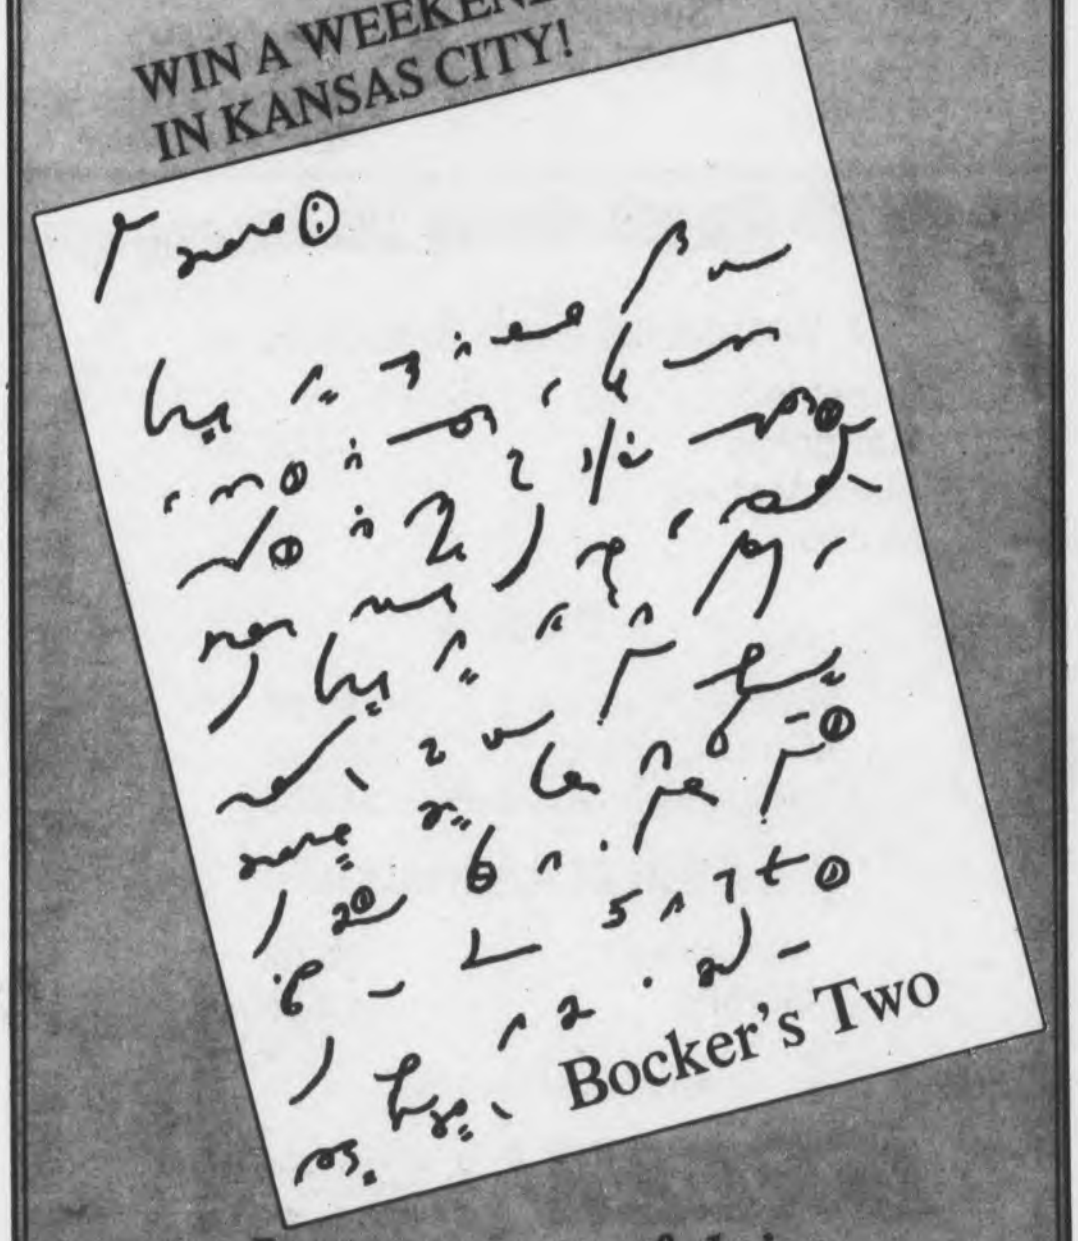
"They (the French) are far in advance of anybody else in the world in breeder development," Eckhoff said.

A breeder reactor increases the amount of uranium available for the production of electricity, he said. Reactors now operating in the United States produce only a small amount of reusable uranium. The breeder reactor produces twice as much nuclear fuel as it consumes every five to seven years, he explained.

BUT THERE ISN'T a market for the new breeder reactors in the United States.

"Electric utility companies are very conservative," Eckhoff said. "They will not buy something unless it's proven."

Nuclear Engineering Department Head Dean Eckhoff... taking a low profile.



To those supporters of nuclear power, the public's safety worries are misconceptions about the danger involved with nuclear power.

Eckhoff said he believes the industry's quality assurance

Lobby group staff quits amid rumors of probe

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Raising protests of financial chicanery and brandishing documents that may have led to a grand jury investigation, the president and national staff of the American Student Association (ASA) have resigned en masse.

"I reached a point where I could no longer justify my involvement with ASA," President Michael Chapman said. He quit April 18, the same day he received a subpoena to appear before a grand jury supposedly investigating ASA's financial affairs.

"I was not proud working for the organization," said Kevin Sullivan, who resigned as legislative assistant. Three other members of the staff — Julie Henderson, Barbara Hill and Clinton Kershaw — quit at the same time.

ASA is a lobbying organization which lobbies for student issues in Congress. Approximately 500 college and university student governments around the country are members. It was begun five years ago as an alternative to the U.S. Student Association, another such group.

ACCORDING TO CHAPMAN, a Washington, D.C. grand jury is investigating loans made to ASA by founder Tom Duffy and his family.

Duffy, now an "ex-officio" ASA board member, wouldn't return reporters' telephone calls. Dan, his brother, said Tom "is "doing some business, traveling around."

Chapman's charges, Dan said, should be discounted because "he had some ulterior motives, because he was about to be impeached."

The U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia would not verify or deny that a grand jury investigation of the group is in progress.

Jim Newton, who describes himself as a "consultant" running the ASA office until the group's fate is determined, said he has received "no official notification about such an investigation."

BUT CHAPMAN, in a letter of resignation sent to all ASA member schools, said he uncovered in late January 1983 a file detailing "highly questionable" Duffy family loans to ASA.

Chapman discovered Duffy and his father, T. Dennis Duffy, loaned ASA approximately $30,000 between December 1979 and March 10, 1980.

By March 10, 1980, ASA had repaid Tom $43,096.94, Chapman said. On the same day T. Dennis donated $15,000 to the group.

"I have qualms and reservations about such business practices," Chapman wrote in his letter of resignation. On the advice of his attorney, Chapman then turned ASA's financial records over to "the proper authorities."

Apparently on the advice of the authorities, Chapman stayed on his job until April 8 for fear further records might be hidden if he left. He officially resigned the day he received the subpoena, confident remaining records would be protected, he said.

THE NATIONAL STAFF left the same day, alleging in a group letter that "the Association has continued to be nothing more than a facade for the questionable business practices exercised by Thomas Duffy."

Newton said, "The rest of the staff resigning should be viewed as a decision of a crew to go down with the captain."

He said the group, which suffered a mass staff defection in February 1981 and lost Chapman's predecessor to another angry resignation, will survive.

"There is very clear and compelling support for the need of an organization with ASA's philosophical direction, and individual people do not stand larger than that commitment," he said.

Newton said he hopes to have new officers installed by the end of April and said the Duffy family's financial involvement in ASA is over for now.

CHAPMAN SAID NEWTON will have powerful help in reviving the group. "When I resigned, Jim called the White House. The White House asked to have a recovery plan to keep ASA alive," he said.

But Chapman said he would "advocate strongly that the organization is dissolved. I have grave, grave reservations about Jim."

Congressional committee members apparently won't miss ASA much.

Tom Wolanin, an aide to the House Postsecondary Education Subcommittee, said he rarely saw any ASA presence during the last three years, even in the budget fights over financial aid and the draft.

"We rarely worked with them," said Sara Thurin, head of COPUS, the well-respected independent college student lobbying group. "They just weren't around."

Jim Stafford, spokesman for the National Education Association, said, "We never heard of them, and they have never come to us for information."

Severance

took them two minutes (to pass the bill Wednesday). This took one minute, 15 seconds."

However, while the severance tax issue was resolved, Senate Democrats sidetracked at least temporarily the Republican leadership's push to enact a tax increase package to balance the Fiscal Year 1984 budget, send a highway funding plan to Carlin and adjourn — hopefully by Friday night.

Senate Democrats blocked a final vote on a bill which would raise the state tax on cigarettes from 11 cents a package to 16 cents. That measure passed the House Wednesday, 84-38, and the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee endorsed it Thursday, while making some minor technical amendments.

However, when the Senate leadership asked approval to use an emergency procedure to go ahead and pass the bill late Thursday, Democrats denied the required two-thirds vote — meaning the bill couldn't be debated and voted upon in the Senate until Friday.

"I want everyone to know that if we go ahead and run these bills it means the rest of the governor's program won't be considered," said Democratic Leader Jack Steineger of Kansas City. "If we pass these bills, it balances the budget and the plan is to send the governor a highway funding package and tell him to take it or leave it."

However, Sen. Paul Hess, R-Wichita, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, noted the liquor and cigarette tax bills were part of Carlin's tax proposals and said the governor still wanted them approved.

Thirteen Democrats and two Republicans — Sens. Norman Gaar of Westwood and Ed Reilly of Leavenworth — joined together to deny using the emergency procedure to go ahead and pass the bill. Three Democrats voted with the Republican majority — Sens. Frank Gaines of Augusta, Leroy Hayden of Satanta and Joe Warren of Maple City.

Twelve of the Senate's 16 Democrats also voted against the bill doubling the liquor enforcement tax from 4 percent to 8 percent to generate $10 million more revenue for the general fund. That bill passed the House, 75-47, Wednesday and the Senate's approval sent it to Carlin.

It marks the first time since 1965 that the liquor enforcement tax — which is imposed on liquor, wine and beer sold in retail liquor stores in lieu of a sales tax — has been increased.

The House kept its highway funding bill at a three-cent per gallon increase on gas and diesel fuel with an index system under which the tax will rise as the prices of those fuels increase.

Fumed Oak: Screams fill Coward's lunchtime play; actresses' talent provides 'bright spot'

By TANYA BRANSON
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Two scenes of constant fighting are almost enough to drive anyone up the wall. In fact, it did drive Henry Gox (Mike Musick, senior in speech) up the wall until he got sick of the rest of "Fumed Oak's" cast and stomped off the stage.

Of course, he was acting. It's too bad the audience couldn't act its way out of the Purple Masque Theatre too Thursday noon during Lunchbag Theatre.

Musick and his accessories, Katie Sinnett, senior in arts and sciences, as Dori; Lisa Kreuger, junior in theater, as Elsie; and Donna Gerber, senior in theater, as Mrs. Rockett, the grandmother, did their job well — acting.

It's just too bad the play by Noel Coward was such a headache, all that screaming and fighting drilling into the audience.

Explanation: Scene 1 is a morning setting and the family is at breakfast. The audience sits in anticipation — what will happen? The family starts fighting, first Elsie and Dori, then Dori and her mother, then Elsie and Dori again, while grandma complains some more. Meanwhile, Mr. Gow is silent and remains silent, for the most part, until he leaves for work.

Scene 2 is an evening scene just after dinner and the family is preparing to go to a movie. Father comes home late for supper and, of course, grandma and wife start yelling and fighting.

But this time instead of remaining the silent sufferer, Henry Gow yells back. Surprisingly, grandma, mom and daughter don't know what to do, so they start moaning, weeping and sobbing the rest of the play. As if the fighting weren't enough!

Then the audience is forced to suffer while Henry yells about all the injustices he has been put through by Dori and his daughter all these years. He's saved up money and is going to desert them, but first he has to yell about it. In the end, he walks off the stage and the three women are left to moan and wail.

I do not enjoy a half hour of that nonsense. The playwright was putting across a message that anger built up will eventually explode and lives frittered away in fighting usually fall away in self-pity (like I believe the three lone women would do). However, the message was wasted because of the distractions.

What was enjoyable about the Lunchbag Theatre was the three women's acting. Gerber was excellent and played her part to the max while fighting, spoiling her granddaughter, standing up to the enraged Henry or soothing the two abandoned women. She also put a sense of humor and expression into her role, which made it the freshest and most enjoyable.

Sinnett was also a bright spot in the play. Though her character wasn't so pleasant, her acting showed talent the play didn't allow to let out. She was especially effective while her husband was accusing her of ruining his life. She acted like a person would be in true life.

I just hope real life isn't too similar to Coward's play.

Artists to share traditions at annual Folklife Festival

By BRENDA SOTTINGHAUS
Collegian Reporter

Margaret "Redfern" Pitzer strives to preserve the ancient basket-weaving patterns of her ancestors.

"With two Cherokee grandmothers, it is only natural that I would have a deep interest in the arts of the Cherokee," she said.

Pitzer is scheduled to demonstrate the ancient art at the Fifth Annual Kansas Folklife Festival Saturday and Sunday at CiCo Park.

Pitzer, 51, of Wichita, said she remembers watching her grandmothers make baskets as a child but said she didn't pay much attention. "I guess you learn more than you think through watching," she said.

She has supplemented those early exposures with reading, visits to museums and research.

According to Pitzer, most of the earliest baskets were made of river cane which grew abundantly in the east. When the Cherokee were forced to move to Oklahoma from their home in North Carolina, a time historians refer to as the Trail of Tears, the cane was no longer available to them.

They switched to honeysuckle and buckbrush, which was more plentiful in their new home, and weaving patterns were altered, Pitzer said.

"ONE OF THE happiest times of my life was when I got the chance to go back to North Carolina where a small band (about 3,000) of Cherokees still live in the Qualla Boundry," Pitzer said.

According to Pitzer, this group is the remains of the 600 to 800 Cherokee who managed to run away to the hills during the removal.

There, Pitzer saw and learned some of the oldest weaving designs of the tribe. Only about nine or 10 of the oldest patterns are still remembered.

She said she tries to do basketry in the style of this North Carolina band as well as the Oklahoma band.

When making her traditional Cherokee baskets, Pitzer said, she likes to use natural plant dyes which she makes herself. She also likes to gather her own weaving materials which grow in the wild.

"THE ART OF basketry is so varied, there is no chance for boredom. Gathering and preparing the materials is as fascinating as making the baskets themselves," she said.

In honor of her Grandmother Redfern, Pitzer not only carries her grandmother's name, but signs her baskets with a small painted red fern and a tiny "P" for Pitzer.

Pitzer has demonstrated her work extensively, taught classes in the art of basketry and sells some of her baskets through the Mid-America All Indian Center Museum in Wichita.

In addition to Pitzer's demonstration at the Folklife Festival, approximately 20 other artists from throughout Kansas will demonstrate their crafts, which include blacksmithing, sheep shearing, wood carving, tatting, spinning, rope making and others.

TRADITION and the passing of skills from one generation to another is the festival's emphasis, according to Mary Sparks, public information coordinator of continuing education. The Division of Continuing Education sponsors the Folklife Festival.

Crafts are only a part of the festival. Two stages of performing Kansas musicians will play continuously both days. Bluegrass, jazz, gospel and Mariachi bands are scheduled to appear.

A committee screens performers before they are invited to the festival, according to Sparks. She said this year's festival has received grants from the Kansas Arts Commission and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Senate

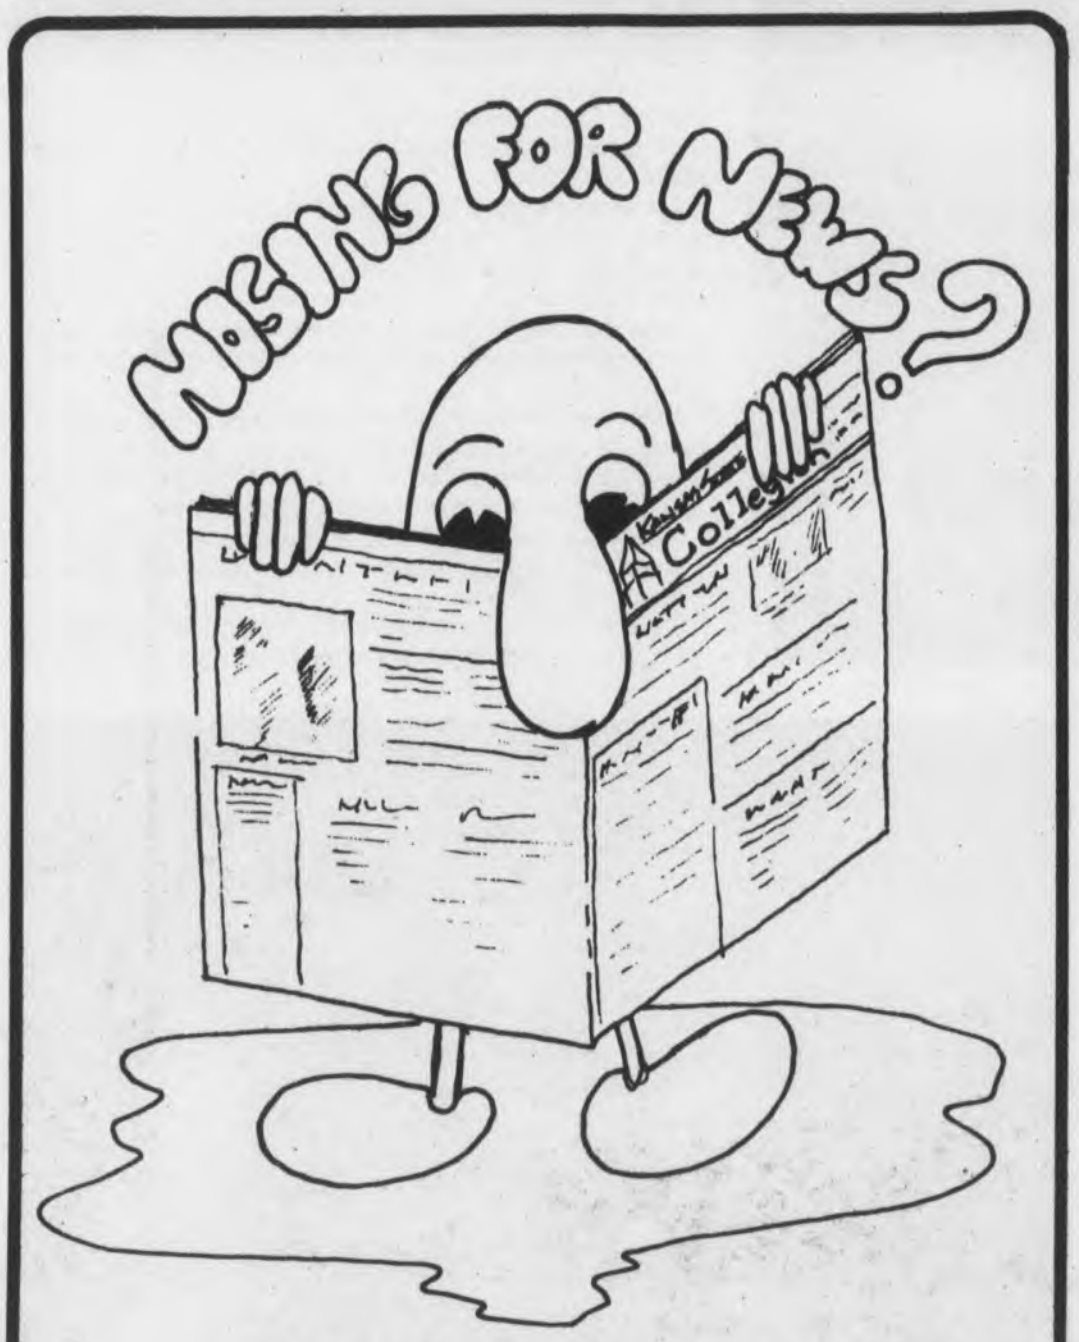
IN OTHER BUSINESS, senate passed in special orders adoption of the Transamerica Occidental Life insurance policy for the 1983-84 academic year. Kathy Lungren, student attorney, said the Lafene Student Health Advisory Committee had considered several policies and determined that the proposal by Transamerica best fits the needs of the students. Lungren said that although the policy chosen by the committee was not the least expensive proposal, the committee believes local service is important and that the company proposing the least expensive rate could not be endorsed.

Annual rates for students applying for student insurance will be $337 for student only, $660 for student and spouse, $1,046 for student, spouse and children, and $714 for student and child.

SENATE ALSO passed in special orders a commendation for Ruth Hoeflin, dean of the College of Home Economics, for her 25 years of service to the University.

A requested allocation of $1,230 to the Division of Continuing Education for the Folklife Festival scheduled for this weekend at CiCo Park was denied. Terril said it is not the policy of Finance Committee "to make donations" and said the committee recommended nothing.

John Kohler, senior in pre-law and Associated Students of Kansas campus director, announced that ASK voted to oppose the Solomon Amendment, although the student senates of Washburn University and K-State stood in support of the amendment.



Senate is scheduled to continue tentative allocations at 6 p.m. Tuesday.

Shakespeare is a master of language, yet however beautiful his words appear on paper, the playwright meant for his masterpieces to flow melodically from the mouths of actors.

The words seemed to flow Thursday night in McCain Auditorium, and more than that, the lines of Shakespeare were spoken in such varying degrees of intensity to further accent Shakepeare's gift of rhyme.

"MacBeth" was presented by the K-State Players and the Department of Speech in a production only to be commended. Hard work was evident only in the sense that each scene, each light, every small detail of dress was in place.

Director Charlotte MacFarland apparently planned well in advance to have such details on hand. She also must be talented to capture such performances from young actors.

While there was hardly a miscast performer, the leading roles of MacBeth, played by Rich Brunner; Lady MacBeth, played by Mary Peterson; and MacDuff, played by Chamblee Ferguson, were brilliant in their diction and expression.

Ferguson outdid himself in the scene when MacDuff learned of MacBeth's brutal slaying of MacDuff's wife and children. The audience couldn't help but be caught up in MacDuff's agony.

Technically, the play was outstanding. The stage was set up in a way to maximize every actor's move and to adapt staging within the medieval background of MacBeth.

The lighting designer and technical director, John Uthoff, added everything to this production with creative, original lighting. Lydia Aseneta designed costumes that looked as if they came straight from Shakespeare's idea of how each player should look.

Three scenes must be commended above the rest for their acting, lighting and staging. MacBeth's coronation was grandiose, although the background was dull colored and only limited numbers of people could fit on stage. Just the pace of the scene, staging, bright costumes and little details at which MacFarland seems to be so good made this scene one of the best.

Banquo's murder scene demonstrated Uthoff's lighting creativity. The use of torches lighted with fire started the scene and as the murder drew close, the stage blacked out with the effective end of Banquo, played by Brian Pratt.

The scene when MacBeth sees Banquo's ghost should be recognized for the careful staging planned to make it smooth and effective.

This weekend shouldn't be spent in Aggieville. "MacBeth" is far more worth the time.

Nuclear

and safety records don't warrant the criticism received.

As a member of the Wolf Creek Energy Station safety committee, Eckhoff said the extent of the documentation of safety procedures is amazing. "Often it seems we do documentation for documentation's sake, rather than making something safe."

QUESTIONS ABOUT THE relative safety of nuclear energy have been the subject of several letters-to-the-editor in the Collegian recently. It is the nuclear engineering faculty's reluctance to reply that has concerned some students.

But, Eckhoff said, there isn't enough space to reply.

"A lot of general statements require almost a volume to respond to," he said. "The other reason we might not respond to letters in the Collegian is that we have found the more you respond, the more you have to respond, and it brings out a larger forum for the anti-nuclear (factions).

"There is really not an overt and concerted effort on the part of the industry to respond to negative criticism," he said. "The industry rides a narrow fence — too much advocacy looks like too much advocacy and that is negative. You have to educate without being an advocate and the people in our business feel that way strongly."

CROTINGER, THOUGH, doesn't hesitate to respond.

Jim Crotinger... "nuclear power is the safest energy form."

After the February Lou Douglas Series lecture by Karl Grossman, the author of an anti-nuclear book, Crotinger said Grossman only presented one side of the nuclear story.

"Those statements were probably qualified by other statements," he said. Grossman used the same sources and information that all anti-nuclear people use, according to Crotinger.

"People are going to have to learn more about science," he said, because if the public was aware of the facts, it would realize nuclear power is the safest energy form. There are pro-nuclear books, but they are rarely found in local bookstores, he said.

According to Eckhoff, journalists mostly present negative viewpoints about nuclear power because positive views aren't news. Sometimes the facts given by the media are not accurate, he said, referring back to a Collegian headline which stated sunburns are less harmful than radiation burns.

"THE IGNORANCE of that statement is amazing to me because radiation burn and sunburn are the same thing," he said, adding more people have died from skin cancer caused by solar radiation than will ever die from coming in contact with nuclear waste.

Ecknoff said he knows nuclear waste is a problem, but with the help of modern technology it is a solvable one. Eckhoff said he believes the government and nuclear engineers would take further steps to find a solution for nuclear waste which would satisfy society, if society supported the use of nuclear energy.

"It's (the disposal of nuclear waste) OK the way it is. It's not the best, but if we do nothing more, it's a safe solution," Eckhoff said.

Vic Simmons, senior in nuclear engineering, considers the question of safety difficult to determine because everyone has his own definition of risk — what one person is afraid of, another may feel safe with.

Electricity was distrusted in much the same way as nuclear energy when it was introduced. Advertisements, though, were used to educate the public about the new energy source.

"When electricity came out they had commercials with Redi-Kilowatt (an advertising character) and said electricity was going to improve everyone's life and living standards," Simmons said.

If nuclear energy had been promoted when it was developed, Simmons said, it would have had a better chance of being accepted.

Memories of summer murders fade

Community resumes 'normal pace'

IOLA (AP) — Eight months ago, death walked the streets of this southeast Kansas community and darkness brought a fear to residents not felt in most small towns.

But the memories of three brutal murders, a woman in her late 50s and two teen-age boys, have dimmed since the nightmare unfolded during the steamy hot days of last August.

In fact, life in Iola, a place where "everybody knows everybody," has resumed its normal pace. There is once again a buzz of activity among its youth at night; the ritual cruising of city streets that is part of the coming of age of all who grow up in small towns across the state.

"We're pretty much back to normal," says Police Chief John H. Maier, 56. "I can't see too much change. Of course, for a while people were doubly cautious."

Still, some residents breathed a sigh of relief last week as Allen County authorities charged an Iola resident for the killings and the beating of a third teen-ager. A grand jury returned a 16-count indictment against the man, Nathaniel "Yorkie" Smith, who turned 37 Tuesday. He was on parole from a 1974 murder conviction and had been out of the state prison just three months when the series of killings unraveled.

"In a small town like this, I don't know whether we have a grasp of how long it takes to put evidence together," says Mayor John Carder, 39. "But I think many people, me included, felt like that if there wasn't an indictment in the first three or four months then it probably was unlikely there would be one. Obviously, the town is certainly relieved."

INITIAL ACCOUNTS from the community reported that gun sales were brisk in the wake of the killings. Dead-bolts and security locks also were said to be in demand. Although some officials maintain that was an exaggeration of the town's overall reaction, most people admit that residents were, without doubt, quite scared.

"At least early on, there were a lot of concerned parents that ferried their kids around to activites and what-have-you," says Carder, a father of four, ages 10, 14, 16 and 19.

"I would say if there was an impact it was more with the parents of teen-age children than the children themselves. They tend to forget about it pretty quickly and play down the situation. But the parents were obviously much more concerned then they were."

IOLA, A COMMUNITY of nearly 7,000, had not experienced a murder since 1971, when two young women were beaten to death and their bodies dumped along county roads. No person was convicted in those killings.

"That's probably a good indicator," says Carder, who is in his third year as mayor. "It happened 12 years ago and most people didn't remember it happened until it was brought up in the discussion about this. Obviously, what happened back then certainly had no lasting effect on the community."

Maier, a 24-year veteran of the Iola Police Department, agrees, but says there was an initial and quite visible change in the town after the August killings:

"The parents checked on their children more and weren't allowing them to stay out late at night. We noticed there wasn't as much traffic at night."

That soon passed.

"PEOPLE HAVE put it out of their minds," says Nancy Mechling, who along with her husband operates a hardware store on the northwest side of Iola's square. From the main door, one can see the county courthouse and jail where Smith is being held.

"By Christmas, you didn't hear about it. The fear the people had originally isn't there anymore," adds Mechling.

Still, eight months after the first body was found, the full details of last summer's slayings have yet to surface. Authorities have kept a lid on their investigation, saying they want to ensure a fair trial for Smith.

At one time, 10 agents for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation worked full-time on the case. They were assisted by the sheriff's force in Allen County and several officers from neighboring counties. It is estimated that investigators talked with 350-400 people during the course of their probe.

Here, based on interviews with various authorities involved, is a recounting of the grisly events that unfolded in Iola:

IT BEGAN early the morning of Aug. 20, a Friday. Gerald Short, 15, was found dazed, sitting in the shallows of the Neosho River near a park where the Allen County Fair was being held. Several boys had spotted Short and alerted authorities.

The teen-ager, a resident of Gas, a town just east of Iola, had been beaten so severely he was taken by helicopter to a Kansas City hospital. He eventually recovered, but lost the sight in one of his eyes.

Aug. 20 was a searing summer day; the temperature rose to 93 early in the afternoon.

About 1 p.m. a county road maintenance worker spotted the body of Short's friend, Steve Mangus, 17, in a quarry about 5 miles northwest of Iola. He had been beaten and shot several times in the head. One shot was fired from directly above the boy's head and the bullet pierced the crown of his skull. Both boys had been sexually assaulted.

SHORT AND MANGUS had been at the fair together exhibiting animals, and were at the riverside park late Aug. 19. It is a common practice for youth to stay with their livestock overnight during the fair.

About 4 p.m., authorities were called to a car wash where they found a automobile belonging to Adeline Fisk, 59, a widow and housekeeper for an elderly man. The car was covered with blood inside and out. The keys were in the ignition, but nothing else was found.

It was more than two hours later that Fisk's body was discovered in a row of trees along a county road about 1½ east of the quarry. She, too, had been beaten and shot in the head, once directly in the forehead.

A small caliber gun was used in both shootings.

THE NEXT DAY, Aug. 21, the final victim was found. Thomas Walsh, 17, had been missing since July 28. His body was discovered about 100 yards away from the quarry on the opposite side of the road in a brushy area. There was little flesh left on the body, and authorities made a positive identification through dental records.

Authorities decline to say what, if any, was the motive behind the killings. However, a billfold and some money was taken from two of the victims.

After an initial flurry of publicity about the slayings, things quieted in Iola. Then the big break came. On Dec. 27, authorities arrested Smith for unlawful possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, theft of a motorcycle and burglary of a truck. More people were willing to talk after his arrest, law enforcement officials said.

Court records in a preliminary hearing on the charges indicate that Smith had obtained a .22-caliber pistol from a woman just after his parole from the Kansas State Penitentiary at Lansing.

Smith, who grew up in Iola, had been convicted of second degree murder in 1974 for killing a man in Kansas City, Kan. He shot and then stabbed the victim in the chest "three or four times," according to Kansas Supreme Court records in the case. He was sentenced to 12 years to life imprisonment and was paroled on May 27, 1982. The murder conviction was not Smith's first brush with the law, however.

In 1965, Smith was convicted in Allen County of felonious assault on a teen-age couple in Iola. A 19-year-old man was shot and a woman was beaten. Smith was given two 10-year jail sentences and was released from the state reformatory in Hutchinson in 1971.

Football team to end training with scrimmage

K-State's football team will wind up its spring drills this weekend with its annual spring Purple-White football scrimmage at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in KSU Stadium. The scrimmage is open to the public, and there will be no admission charge.

Saturday's scrimmage will mark only the 17th practice session for K-State this spring and, according to head coach Jim Dickey, the 'Cats won't use their remaining three practices.

"We had eight weeks of off-season conditioning and that put us ahead as far as strength and conditioning goes," Dickey said. "There really isn't any need to use the other three practices because we feel like we're at a good point to end the year. It'll give our kids a chance to catch up on their studies."

Dickey said he will divide the squad up evenly for Saturday's scrimmage.

"We'll have first team players on both sides," he said. "We'll just go down the depth chart and alternate putting players on one side or the other."

Like coaches of other K-State athletic teams, Dickey said he believes the weather has hurt his squad in keeping it from practicing.

"The only bad part of spring practice has been the weather," he said. "It has really hampered our practicing outdoors. But I'm happy with the players. They have met every expectation in terms of conditioning and strength. We haven't gotten a chance to scrimmage as much as I had liked, but that just means we'll have to have more contact early next fall."

Dickey said he was pleased with the team's attitude so far in the season.

"It's the best that I can ever remember around here. Everybody's working hard toward next year and trying to make it as successful as last year," Dickey said.

Dickey said that the contact his team, particularly the running backs, is going through should help him to make decisions on next year's starters.

"I wanted them to get bumped around pretty good this spring so that I could find some durable ones," he said. "Well, we didn't have as much hitting as I wanted but I still found some guys who can play. We've got excellent depth at all positions."

In that "bumping around", K-State has also suffered its share of injuries. As of April 12, three players had been taken out of the lineup for the remainder of spring practice. These are defensive tackles George Fowler and Bob Kauffelt and tailback Iosefatu Faraimo. Fowler sustained a a torn ligament in his left knee and Kauffelt dislocated his right shoulder. Faraimo, last year's starter in the backfield, has a pulled hamstring and fractured ribs.

Staff/David Stuckey

Going down... David Smith, K-State running back, is tackled by one of his teammates during a practice scrimmage as the team prepares for the annual Purple-White scrimmage at 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

KSU KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Men's tennis team breaks losing streak, beats KU 5-4

The men's tennis team, disheartened after a 5-4 loss to Baker University on Tuesday, came alive to beat the University of Kansas, 5-4, on Thursday.

Because of rain in Lawrence, the meets were played in Topeka, with three of the matches played at the Topeka Country Club and the others at Wood Valley Racquet Club.

Wildcat coach Steve Snodgrass said he believed it was the loss to Baker that brought out the effort needed to beat KU. KU had beaten Baker earlier this season, 7-2.

The Wildcats and Jayhawks split the matches in the singles division. K-State's Jeff Jackard beat Brett Blair sondly in the No. 1 position, 6-1, 6-1. Curt Thompson took Michael Center in the No. 2 spot, 7-6, 6-4, for the Wildcats' second win. The other win for K-State in singles was by Kris James, who beat Franco Cacioppolini, 6-2, 6-1.

KU's wins in the singles division came over Gary Hassenflu, Kent Smith and Mark Hassenflu. Charles Sternes beat Gary Hassenflu, 6-1, 6-1; Jim Syrett downed Smith, 6-1, 6-2; and Tom Black beat Mark Hassenflu, 6-4, 6-3.

The difference came in the doubles division, where Snodgrass changed the pairings. According to Snodgrass, this change made a big difference in the results.

Jackard and Gary Hassenflu defeated Center and Sternes in the No. 1 doubles, 6-3, 6-7, 6-3. Snodgrass said Hassenflu played the best he has all season in this match.

"Gary played with as much confidence as I've seen him play with before," he said. "He played really, really well."

James and Thompson, paired up in the No. 2 doubles, got past Syrett and Black, 7-6, 3-6, 7-5. Smith and Brady Tinker lost to Cacioppolini and Quentin Brewer in the final match, 6-3, 6-4.

The win was of great value to the Wildcats, according to Snodgrass. "It really boosts us going into the next Big Eight meet," he said.

The team is scheduled to be play host to Nebraska in a 2 p.m. dual today and Iowa State Saturday morning. Both matches are scheduled at the Washburn Courts. Heading into the matchups, the Wildcats own a 7-12 record and 1-3 Big Eight mark.

The women's team will also be back in action today, traveling to Lincoln, Neb., for a dual with Nebraska's Cornhuskers. The squad will end its week with a match Saturday against Iowa State in Ames. The women's squad stands at 0-3 in the conference and 7-8 overall.

Snodgrass said the weather has had a significant effect on the performance of both teams.

"The schedule would be a lot better without the make-ups," Snodgrass said. "But it will take us into the Big Eight tournament competition tough."

Golf teams fight weather, anticipate weekend meets

Having been weathered out for the past three weekends, the K-State men's golf team will try it once again this weekend when it participates in the Heart of America Tournament in Warrensburg, Mo.

The tourney is scheduled for Friday and Saturday and head coach Ray Wauthier said he doesn't know what to expect from his team after such a long layoff.

"This is going to be a surprise package," he said. "I'm sure we'll be rusty but, they'll be eager to play in a tournament after such a long wait. Hopefully, that will make up for our rustiness."

K-State's lone tournament action of the season came back on March 31 when it participated in the Park College Tournament in Kansas City. In that tournament, the Wildcats finished in a tie for fifth with a total of 314 strokes. Allen French was the 'Cat medalist with an 18-hole total of 74. Kevin Crow and Robert Sedorcek each had 78s for the 'Cats while Mark Small rounded out the scoring with an 84.

On the women's side, K-State will end its regular season with the Big Eight Conference Tournament Monday through Wednesday in Oklahoma City.

K-State, which finished eighth last year, expects top finishes from freshmen Sharry Dercher and Terri Alexander, both of whom have been averaging in the low 90s in play this season.

Strikeout record ranks third on Ryan's achievement list

HOUSTON (AP) — Astros pitcher Nolan Ryan, only eight strikeouts away from breaking Walter Johnson's career strikeout record, says the feat would rank only third on his all-time list of accomplishments.

Ryan, who goes for the record Friday night against Philadelphia, rates his five career no-hitters and his major league record 383 strikeouts in one season ahead of cracking Johnson's 3,506 career whiffs.

"I'd say (career strikeout record) third behind the fifth no-hitter because it stands alone and the 383 strikeouts because that one stands by itself," Ryan said. "That year took a lot of consistency. There were no pitchers involved in that, which makes it even more credible."

Ryan got his 383 strikeouts in one season pitching for the 1973 California Angels in the American League, which replaces the pitcher with a designated hitter. Ryan's fifth no-hitter came Sept. 26, 1981 in the Astrodome against the Los Angeles Dodgers.

But don't be fooled by Ryan's casual approach to Friday's chance to grab another piece of baseball history. He wants to be the first to break the 55-year-old record.

"I THINK it will draw some attention to me that hasn't been given before," Ryan said. "I think it will make people realize after they study this record and see that I did in 16 years what it took Johnson 21 years, that I have been durable and I have pitched a lot of innings and I have been consistent.

"I think that's probably the thing I feel best about because it will give a little more respect that hasn't been around previously."

A comparative study by Rick Rivers, Astros assistant publicity director, shows that Ryan reached his 3,000th strikeout in his 448th major league game, far ahead of Johnson and other pitchers who attained 3,000 career strikeouts.

Johnson didn't get No. 3,000 until his 664th major league game. The Phillies' Steve Carlton, who also likely will surpass Johnson's record this season, got No. 3,000 in his 530th game.

RYAN ALSO is the major league record holder with an average of 9.45 strikeouts per nine innings pitched. Johnson doesn't rate in the top 10.

Ryan came off the 21-day disabled list last week after recovering from a kidney infection to win his first game of the season, beating Montreal and striking out seven batters.

Although the 36-year-old Ryan expects to be the first to break Johnson's record, he doesn't expect to keep it long.

"I don't see myself as the all-time strikeout leader because I don't see myself pitching into the (age) 40s," Ryan said.

The all-time honor could go to Carlton, he said.

"He pitches every fourth day and we've got a five-man rotation," Ryan said. "I've got to be realistic. If he's going to chalk up 290 innings to my 230 or 240, and basically we strike out the same ratio of people, there's no way I can stay on the same level with him."

Soccer

In the finals Sunday, K-State defeated the University of Oklahoma 2-0. The first goal was scored by Caston and the second was a combination of halfback Joe Sasenick and Krusen.

The soccer club is scheduled to compete in the KU Tournament at Lawrence this weekend. Razuki said K-State and KU will be joined in the tourney by soccer clubs from Rockhurst and Benedictine colleges, among other schools.

"Going as the Big Eight champions is obviously going to give us a great deal of encouragement. We feel better about ourselves and feel we can really do something," Al-Ani said.

Slinging mud: a 'ladylike' pastime

Famed wrestlers fight 'ruthlessly' in staged bout

By SUE SCHMITT
Staff Writer

Three bags of Illinois top soil (pulverized three times) mixed with a lot of water makes mud. And mud makes a great wrestling surface.

The event, women's mud wrestling, featuring the famed Chicago Knockers, drew hundreds of beer drinkers to the Blue River Pub Wednesday night. The air was heavy with smoke and filled with anticipation as the mob waited for the Knockers to take the stage. Competition for ringside seats became stiff as spectators filed in.

"Are you saving the whole damn table?" was a comment often heard as seats became harder and harder to come by.

The bar was filled mainly with men, who were willing to pay the price to see the show.

"There are only about 10 of us in here!" one woman exclaimed.

The crowd roared as the Knockers finally appeared.

"God, look at that," an enchanted fan mumbled.

They were all there, Lady Luck, Rockin' Robin, Misty Blue, The Raging Apache, Super Star, The Sweet Revenger, The Tasmanian Devil and Sassy Sandy.

"There are three rules," Sassy Sandy, the show's emcee, said. "You must get drunk, you must get rowdy and you must get crazy."

Staff/David Stuckey

Ready, go... Two members of the Chicago Knockers professional mud wrestling team await the referee's whistle to start at the Blue River Pub Wednesday night.

THE TASMANIAN DEVIL was the referee for the matches, but did not seem to be well respected by the rest of the team.

"She's about as useless as a wet piece of toilet paper," Sassy Sandy told the audience.

At a regular wrestling match the competitors and their weights are announced to the audience. Mud wrestling is a little different. Names of the competitors and their measurements were announced at the beginning of each match.

"In the black is Rockin' Robin, 36-26-35. The Raging Apache is in the multi-colored blue and purple suit at 36-26-37," Sassy Sandy announced.

"Tits, tits, tits," the crowd chanted as the wrestlers entered the ring.

As the first match started between The Raging Apache and Rockin' Robin, the crowd quickly chose sides as Sassy Sandy gave a breathless account of the fight.

TO THE DESPAIR of much of the audience, the referee announced The Raging Apache the winner. The crowd shouted "bullshit, bullshit, bullshit," in protest.

The second match between Sassy Sandy and Super Star was won by Sassy Sandy. One man was covered with mud after Sassy Sandy slid off the stage and landed on him.

"Oh, my wife won't care — I hope," he said.

What kind of woman would don a swim suit and roll around in the mud in front of a bunch of drunk men? "I don't know, but I don't think I would marry one," a spectator said.

A tag team match was followed by a mixed match where Bryan, one of the team's managers, wrestled the women.

Body slams, flips and other wrestling tactics — fair and unfair — were used by these "ruthless" women athletes. Mud slinging was always a popular move.

BUT THE WRESTLERS weren't the only ones in contact with the mud. Audience involvement was common as mud splattered from the mat and onto unsuspecting onlookers. Those with ringside seats left the bar with at least some mud as a souvenir.

"I started to laugh, and all I got was a mouth full of mud," one woman said.

Many of the spectators were disappointed by the Knockers' performance.

"They're just like those All-Star wrestlers you see on TV on Sunday afternoons, except they're doing it in the mud," one man in the crowd said.

"You know Gordie, the only thing that's real up there is the mud," a disgruntled spectator told a friend.

Although most of the crowd seemed to enjoy the wrestlers' antics, many were dissapointed.

"No T & A; I'm pissed," one unhappy fan said.

Legislature passes highway finance plan, adjourns

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Legislature finally adjourned Sunday night on the 95th day of the 1983 session, after the Senate reconsidered and passed a compromise highway finance plan which Gov. John Carlin and the Republican leadership had agreed to six hours earlier.

The House passed the measure within minutes after it cleared the Senate on the second try. That sent it to Carlin, who said through Chief of Staff Bill Hoch he was not elated with it but would sign it into law because the need for a massive effort to rehabilitate the state's deteriorating roads dictated that everyone compromise.

Hoch conceded Carlin probably will be criticized by some of his fellow Democrats for agreeing to a two-cent increase this year and a three-cent hike next year in the state's gasoline, diesel and special fuel taxes, but added:

"The governor's adversity to a gas tax increase was overcome by his greater and broader desire to at last see something done for our bridges and highways.

"It wasn't easy. It tested the very fiber of the democratic process in Topeka.

"But when the dust settles, I believe the governor will count it among his proudest achievements. It will benefit the state for years to some, and in the long run his duties as chief executive of this state must be broader in scope than anyone else's."

Senate President Ross Doyen said the session "hasn't been easy," but called it "a session we can reflect and look back on and be proud of the work we did."

Speaker Mike Hayden said, "People won't remember what day we adjourned on; they will only remember what we did," a reference to meeting on Sunday for the first time in 36 years after failing to adjourn Saturday night.

The highway funding plan would increase motor fuel taxes in Kansas by two cents a gallon in July and a third cent next January, and also would transfer general fund and freeway fund money into the highway fund to pump $171 million more money into an accelerated program to repair state highways in the next three fiscal years, and also provide $89 million more for city and county street and road repairs over the same time span.

House passage, 77-45, came with the Legislature in double overtime trying to shut down the cleanup session which went five days.

Among the last bills to be passed was the omnibus appropriations bill, which contained $558,000 to administer the new severance tax, which goes into effect May 1, although revenue won't start flowing into the state treasury until September. That was a compromise between the $850,000 the House wanted the Revenue Department to have for adding staff for collecting the tax and the $200,000 the Senate wanted to put in.

The Legislature wound up spending slightly more than $3 million in the Fiscal Year 1984 budget, of which $1.553 million will come from the general fund. The general fund portion compares with Carlin's original recommendation of $1.571 million, meaning the Legislature spent $18 million less than he suggested in January before the full severity of the revenue shortfall was known.

The state is projected to have a balance of $80 million at the end of the next fiscal year, thanks to passage of tax bills totaling $163.8

Hearing to offer forum for public discussion of '84 parking changes

Anyone interested in the proposed fiscal year 1984 Traffic and Parking Regulations will be given an opportunity to ask questions and to voice opinions in a public hearing at 4 p.m. today in the Union Big Eight Room.

In the past, hearings were held in Topeka on the same day for all Kansas Board of Regents institutions to make any changes in parking regulations.

In order to give people an easier opportunity for input, hearings are now held at each university, according to Helen Cooper, designated hearing officer for K-State.

The proposals are primarily minor changes in parking regulations, Cooper said.

Replacement of a parking sticker that has been stolen, lost or destroyed would cost $5 instead of $3 under the current regulations.

There is also a proposed change to enforce parking regulations throughout the entire year, including intersession.

In compliance with new laws, persons with handicapped permits will be allowed to "park in timed and loading zones as long as necessary if handicapped parking stalls are not available. To facilitate access, they may also back into handicapped stalls or park in adjacent yellow, cross-hatched access aisles," the proposed regulation states.

To be eligible for a temporary special parking permit because of a medical disability, faculty, staff and students must have a valid parking permit under the proposed regulations.

Summer school permits are proposed to be reduced to $5 from $6 and motorcycle permits to $10 or $5 per semester from $20 per year.

Other proposed changes include a reduction in short-term permits and more specific directions for bicycle paths.

Foreign grain sales may drop without credit

By MARCIA LONGBERG
Contributing Writer

If credit is not made available to Chile, Jamaica and Venezuela, U.S. grain sales to these countries could drop as much as 30 percent, according to Manuel Rodriguez, a member of the U.S. Feeds Grain Council from Caracas, Venezuela.

Rodriguez accompanied foreign buyers of U.S. commodities who recently participated in a two-week short course on U.S. grain marketing at K-State.

In the past, Chile, Jamaica and Venezuela have been cash customers, purchasing significant amounts of wheat, corn and sorghum from the United States, Rodriguez said.

However, because of the dollar's strength and the generally weak state of the world economy, these countries now need credit.

From 1980 to 1981 Chile imported nearly all of its wheat and all of its 361,000 metric tons of corn from the United States. Jamaica imports 25 percent of its wheat from the United States and all of its corn, amounting to 150,000 metric tons.

VENEZUELA HAS also been a good customer of U.S. grains, Rodriguez noted. In 1980 to 1981 Venezuela imported 90 percent of its wheat from the United States, 772,000 metric tons; and all of its corn, 1 million metric tons. In addition, 200,000 metric tons of U.S. coarse grains were purchased.

"If credit isn't available, we will probably lose part of the market in these countries to our competitors, especially Canada," Rodriguez said. "Canada is being very aggressive now, especially with their feed-grain wheat.

"Maintaining and expanding markets is of vital importance to the American farmer," he said. "The United States is not the only source of feed grains or wheat. Argentina is a competitor for the feed grains market in Chile; Canada is a strong competitor in Jamaica; and Brazil is already exporting meal and whole soybeans."

THE RUSSIANS invaded Lawrence over the weekend and conquered the KU Relays. However, K-State was not to be denied its glory. See p. 15.

ON THE HEELS of a strong ground game, the Purple team overcame an early deficit to defeat the White squad, 20-10, at Saturday's intrasquad football scrimmage. See p. 16.

IN THE FINAL funding bill of the 1983 session, the Kansas Legislature overwhelmingly approved and sent to Gov. John Carlin, a bil appropriating $31 million to a variety of state agencies. See p. 9.

Senate continues work on tentative funding

Student Senate considered and voted on tentative allocations for two groups Thursday after presstime. Finance Committee's recommendations for the Puerto Rican Student Organization and Early Childhood Laboratory were approved with almost no changes.

Puerto Rican Student Organization requested $831 and was allocated $306.22 after a friendly amendment by Finance Committee changed the money allocated for advertising from $139.20 to $132. The committee used incorrect figures in calculating advertising rates, according to Kirk Porteous, junior in radio and television and member of Finance Committee. The original recommendation was for $313.42.

Senate finally considered Early Childhood Laboratory, and although $4,175 was requested for a graduate assistant salary for nine months, Finance Committee recommended zero funding because it didn't believe senate should completely support the laboratory, Porteous said.

He added, however, a task force will be assigned to investigate the possibility of a fee increase for those who use the laboratory. Porteous said the fee of $11.25 per week for each child is not enough and although senate will probably partially fund the laboratory in the fall, the committee hopes to implement a fee increase.

Interviews begin for new attorney; students invited to meet applicants

Three applicants will be on campus this week to be interviewed for the open student attorney position.

Diane Murphy, junior in radio and television and chairwoman of Student Senate's Selection Committee, said she hopes students will participate in the selection of the new attorney by atttending the open meeting sessions to meet and talk with the applicants.

"From 2:15 to 3 p.m. on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday there will be a come-and-go-type setting for students to come and talk with the applicants," she said. Sessions held today and Thursday will be in the Union Director's Conference Room; on Tuesday it will be in the Union Council Chambers.

"The student attorney is the only paid professional student senate hires. Since students pay $25.25 per semester for activity fees, it's important for them to know where their money is going and it's important for them to take advantage of this situation," she said.

Murphy said the opportunity to meet the applicants is a special situation since a new attorney is not hired each year.

"Student input is important in selecting the new attorney," Murphy said. "The more people that take part, the better." Students can contact the search committee if they have comments about any of the applicants. Senate makes the final decision for the position.

According to Murphy, the student attorney doesn't become involved in legal proceedings, but primarily offers free legal advice to students.

In addition to meeting with students during the interview sessions, the applicants will also meet with University officials and student senators.

The new attorney will replace Kathy M. Lungren, who is resigning, effective May 1, and has been student attorney since August 1980.

$50 for a Logo

The Department of Journalism and Mass Communication will observe its 75th Anniversary in 1985. We're going to have a major observance preceded by organization of alumni, etc.

We need a logo now to put on stationery, t-shirts, billboards, the Goodyear Blimp and Mount Rushmore. Your entry, 8" x 10" (mounted or unmounted) turned in to Kedzie 104 by May 10, could win the $50 award for the best entry.

The idea is that we've done a great job of developing mass communicators for the past 75 years and we want to do an even greater job in the future.

Some things to keep in mind:

- We're people oriented (and more than half our majors are women).
- We are involved with all media—newspapers, magazines, radio, television, advertising and public relations, ag journalism, home ec journalism and journalism education in secondary education.
- Accurate, useful information for the public is our major goal.

Eligible: Any Human Being.

Infant improves after second liver transplant

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Thirteen-month-old Brandon Hall, steadily improving from his second liver transplant, was moving around in his crib and responding to his name Sunday, hospital officials said.

"He had a good night, a very restful night and he continues to improve with no complications," said Scott Kent, spokesman for Le Bonheur Children's Medical Center.

The child's vital signs were stable and nurses in the intensive care unit were encouraged by his activity and responsiveness, Kent said.

Doctors said Brandon's lung infection was much improved and that antibiotics prescribed to fight the complication were being withdrawn.

Brandon underwent his second liver transplant in 11 days in a nine-hour operation early Friday after his first transplanted liver began to fail because of circulatory problems. Hospital officials say he is the youngest patient to survive two liver transplants.

War correspondent awarded Purple Heart

NEW YORK — Ernie Pyle, the correspondent who told the folks back home how World War II looked from the GI's foxhole, has been awarded the Purple Heart, 38 years after a Japanese sniper killed him on the island of Ie Shima.

The award was made Saturday at the dedication of the Ernie Pyle U.S. Army Reserve Center at Fort Totten in Flushing, N.Y.

The center is the nation's largest, said Maj. Gen. William Ward, commander of the 77th Army Reserve Command, successor to the 77th Infantry Division, which Pyle was covering when he died.

The dedication also celebrated the 200th anniversary of the Purple Heart and the 75th anniversary of the Army Reserve.

George Bales, a vice president of Pepperdine University in Malibu, Calif., and historian for Pyle's estate, said he was "sensitive, complex, humorous and deeply interested in unimportant people."

Protesters rally to save research animals

A woman paced in a yellow metal cage amidst 5,000 demonstrators carrying stuffed monkey dolls in Boston Sunday while in Madison, Wis., protesters marched in a seven-block-long snake in efforts to save animals they say are abused by medical researchers.

The animal activists' "worldwide" rally, another chapter in the ongoing debate over the ethics of animal research, included demonstrations at federally funded primate research centers in California and Georgia and several planned in foreign countries.

"Up to now we have been patient," Dr. Richard Morgan, the national coordinator of Mobilization for Animals, told the banner-waving crowd in Boston, which was forced off the Common into a dry ballroom at a hotel because of a rainstorm.

"We no longer will be patient. There is no time for patience while animals are dying. We must demand the cruelty will end," he said.

Animal researchers have responded that the accusations of cruelty are "absolutely untrue" and "patently absurd."

Merger planned to bail out Seattle bank

SEATTLE — The Seafirst Corp., which lost $133 million for the first quarter of 1983, plans to merge with Bank America Corp., one of the country's largest financial institutions.

The deal, which would be worth more than $400 million, must be approved by shareholders and regulators, and depends on a change in a state law prohibiting any outside bank from holding more than 5 percent of a state bank.

A bill that would allow the parent company of the Seattle First National Bank, the 19th largest bank, to merge with the parent company of Bank of America, the nation's largest, was expected to pass the Washington Legislature. But the bill bogged down in procedural matters during the weekend.

The merger also would have to be approved by federal officials.

Seafirst has been hounded by crumbling energy loans and mounting losses.

Customers turn 'heels-over-head' for hairstyle

LOS ANGELES — Some customers have flipped over a hair stylist's "Aero Cut," which is turning the personal grooming market upside down.

"It's a good thing I didn't eat any breakfast," Nancy Higa said recently as she was suspended by her ankles for her haircut.

Hairdressing by inversion, a new heels-over-head twist in the quest for beauty, is a fashion idea claimed by stylist Darryl Curby. The Illinois native turns customers upside down on a 9-foot rack at his shop in San Marino.

Curby, 32, is an exercise enthusiast whose inspiration hit while he was hanging upside down in gravity boots.

Curby said trimming hair while people are upside down gives the best results.

"When you layer hair the normal way, in a chair, gravity pulls the hair down flat. You can never know exactly how it's going to lie," he said. "But when you hang upside down, your hair falls perfectly straight. It follows all natural guidelines."

Scholarship cuts to benefit wealthy

Under the myriad of budget-cutting measures offered as a solution to balancing the state budget, education in Kansas may soon become little more than a playground for the rich.

Nowhere is this more obvious than the decision by the Kansas Senate to cut back on the scholarship program at the University of Kansas Medical Center.

The Senate proposal to trim the scholarships to 100, about half its current number, offers at least some monetary relief for students over Gov. John Carlin's recommendation, which would have eliminated the entire program. However, both approaches stifle the progress of education in Kansas.

Rep. Richard Gannon, D-Goodland, in opposition to the bill, said eliminating the medical scholarships would turn the medical profession into nothing more than a "rich man's fraternity."

Just as one cannot build a building by starting with the top floor, education cannot be funded by providing monies only to the rich.

Quality education for every man — rich and poor alike — is the building block of a better future. If one corner of the foundation weakens, the whole structure's stability is threatened.

Education is a vital part of Kansas' future — one whose long-term benefits cannot be sacrificed for short-term, "temporary" budget cuts.

Sadly enough, when education cuts occur, they too often prove devastating for those it would benefit most — the poor and less fortunate whose future rests on the opportunities which a college degree can offer.

Veto showed 'courage'

Editor,

On behalf of the Mennonite Student Fellowship, I want to express our appreciation to Jerry Katlin, student body president, for his veto of the Student Senate's decision to support the Solomon Amendment. Some have argued that "Solomon" is a dead issue, and in some respects, this is true. Still, Solomon is a very live issue for what our support of it says to Washington legislators.

Solomon has been argued against from many different angles. For some Mennonites, the issue focuses on religious belief, as the Mennonite Church has historically maintained a biblical pacifism.

In the case of some Mennonites, like Kendall Warkentine and Chuck Epp of Bethel College in Newton, their religious convictions led them to a position of non-compliance with respect to Selective Service registration. This act of civil disobedience is seen by some as the most appropriate Christian response and the most responsible act they can perform as American citizens.

In some respects, Katlin's veto recognizes the sincerity of these individual's intentions to be religiously faithful, as well as respectful of the freedoms and rights their citizenship affords them.

It took courage to veto "Solomon." We appreciate your leadership, Jerry.

Without scruples

What has happened to the scruples of America?

What has happened to the sanity and integrity that human beings used to classify as an attribute?

For example, as I drove down the highway, a semi roared past me driving at least 70 mph with a diamond shaped "Please drive carefully" sign posted on the rear of his rig.

Also, University officials tell me I will have to pay an increase in tuition next fall because of state funding cuts while they spend $10,000 on studying a uniform sign system on campus. Can't people read a map?

Then, they waste money by taking down old signs and replacing them with colorful brown signs. Who said a sign can't be read if its color doesn't match the others?

They tell me I may have to pay an extra $15 in fees for the fall semester while they waste money and time installing wood frames around building signs. They also try to postpone the decision of whether the fee will be implemented until students will be on summer vacation — therefore, unable to voice their opinions.

BOOKSTORES ARE PROUD of their books — asking appalling prices for them — until it comes time for them to buy the books back, when they tell you your book is only worth less than half the purchase price. Then, almost miraculously, the books revert back to their usefulness the next semester and the stores ask for more appalling prices for them.

Officials complain about students who tear apart the "No Smoking" signs in wooden-structured buildings when they are the ones who spent $5,000 to buy an embossing machine producing signs with removable letters.

Even more "facts":

— University officials will swear on a Bible there is no parking problem. Tell that to the many students who drive up and down parking lots for 20 minutes just to find a place to park. And to think they charge you $20 for that privilege.

— The City of Manhattan tries to complicate things by restricting parking on a growing number of city streets. In the future, nobody will be able to park anywhere — except in the trees.

— Arizona recently started taxing marijuana dealers. Although law enforcement officials can't get the information from the taxers, back taxes must be paid if one is caught without a tax stamp. One government agency seems to give its OK to the dealers as long as they get their money, while another will arrest you for it.

— It takes the banning of the Beach Boys by Interior Secretary James Watt from the Capital's Fourth of July celebration to make President Reagan realize what a bumbling idiot Watt is. Too bad Reagan won't listen when trivial questions require Watt's decision making — such as the future of our national forests.

At least there is one advantage to Watt's platform on our nation's lands — we won't mind letting it be destroyed by nuclear weapons.

— "Traveling" campus ministers (or "prophets," as they like to be called) really think they are "spreading the Word" by ridiculing and being ridiculed by students wherever they go. Who would believe or want to be like one of those idiots? What would happen if a real one came along? Students would probably say, "Well, there goes one of those freaks."

— K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine is one of the best in the country. But, contrary to what students learn — how to help animals — the University still poisons pigeons. They say the pigeons are pests, but I think if you look back and see which one was here first (the pigeon or the University), the birds would say otherwise.

— TRY AND NOT PAY the University for something and see how long it takes for your car to be tirelocked, for transcripts to be held or to be "unenrolled" in school. But, if the University makes a mistake in charging — such as the motorcycle fee — nothing can be done because "We have to go to the Board of Regents and it takes too long." Maybe someone should take over Anderson Hall until the University pays its "misuse fees."

— Security and Traffic has what it calls "undercover agents" at many of the campus activities. But tell me the truth — how many everyday people do you see walking around with small speakers stuffed in their ear and wires hanging from them?

— University Facilities gets mad at students who create "cow paths" through the campus, while Joan Jett and the Blackhearts' buses and trailer-trucks make mincemeat out of the lawn in front of and in back of Ahearn Field House.

Is there a cure? The only cure possible is for the guilty parties to try to acquire some brains — at an auction, a flea market or a garage sale. You might say the brains available at these places would not be of good quality — but look what the guilty ones have now.

Cyclists are real losers in 'error'

Editor,

Re: "Cyclists pay for typing error in parking fees" in Thursday's Collegian.

Let's consider the drastic increases in parking permits and penalty assessments over the past year. As well, let's consider the elimination of that "second chance" Security and Traffic used to allow by not assessing a fine for first-time offenders.

Now, let's pull into the scenario a supposedly overlooked "clerical error" which raised the motorcycle permits from $5 to $20 — 300 percent — an increase of $10 "over and above" the originally quoted '82-'83 permit price of $10. That increase brought Security and Traffic a 200 percent increase in revenue at the expense of the motorcyclists.

"Untold of" revenue, that is, until a few weeks ago, when Security and Traffic was "caught with their pants down" by one impertinent inquirer. The question arises whether or not this error and its repercussions would have ever reached the Collegian unless this student hadn't been so insistent upon finding out why motorcycle permits were so high.

Security and Traffic claims the error was "overlooked."

Surely, the vocal disapproval from motorcyclists, coupled with the inherent knowledge of the $10 price (the original fee proposal) by Security and Traffic's secretaries — who accepted the money — would have corrected any possible typo.

Regarding the six-month lag time for approval by the Kansas Board of Regents: How is it possible that Security and Traffic can decrease the price of permits back down to $10 for July only now — a period of three months — but not over a period of "nine" months (since this academic year began, and the error was supposedly found)?

I ask you, was there really "nothing" the Traffic and Parking Council could do?

Security and Traffic came out the big winner in this case, because, they contend, their hands were tied.

As for the frustration felt by those motorcyclists — or any of us, for that matter — who lose out monetarily because of overlooked errors — I'm on your side, for what it's worth.

Acker delivers optimistic speech about University developments

By KECIA STOLFUS
Collegian Reporter

President Duane Acker, in a rehash of old news, delivered his annual "State of the University" speech at the Alumni Association's All Grads Banquet Friday night.

Acker's speech was a hodgepodge of K-State's latest developments and accomplishments, from campus improvements to football.

Acker noted that in spite of the tight economy, the Kansas Legislature has appropriated K-State funds for the renovation of Nichols Gymnasium, preliminary planning of a new chemistry building and renovation of Weber Hall.

Acker said the long range plan is to build a new chemistry building across the street from Willard Hall, attach it to King Hall and renovate Willard for the College of Business Administration. It will be some time before final completion of the $27 million to $29 million building.

"There's another (improvement) coming down the road that we're going to get done and that's a new coliseum for K-State," Acker said.

Three important decisions were necessary to begin planning for the coliseum, he said.

The students decided first to finance the building. A feasibility study by the KSU Foundation then determined that there was enough enthusiasm and willingness among trustees and alumni to provide an additional $6 million. The state also decided to invest in the coliseum, and Acker said he believes it will be open within this decade.

THE MOST RECENT major improvements on campus, mentioned by Acker, are Durland Phases I and II, the International Student Center, Throckmorton Hall and the addition of a third floor to Shellenberger Hall. He also expressed pride in the veterinary complex, which has served as a model for other such facilities.

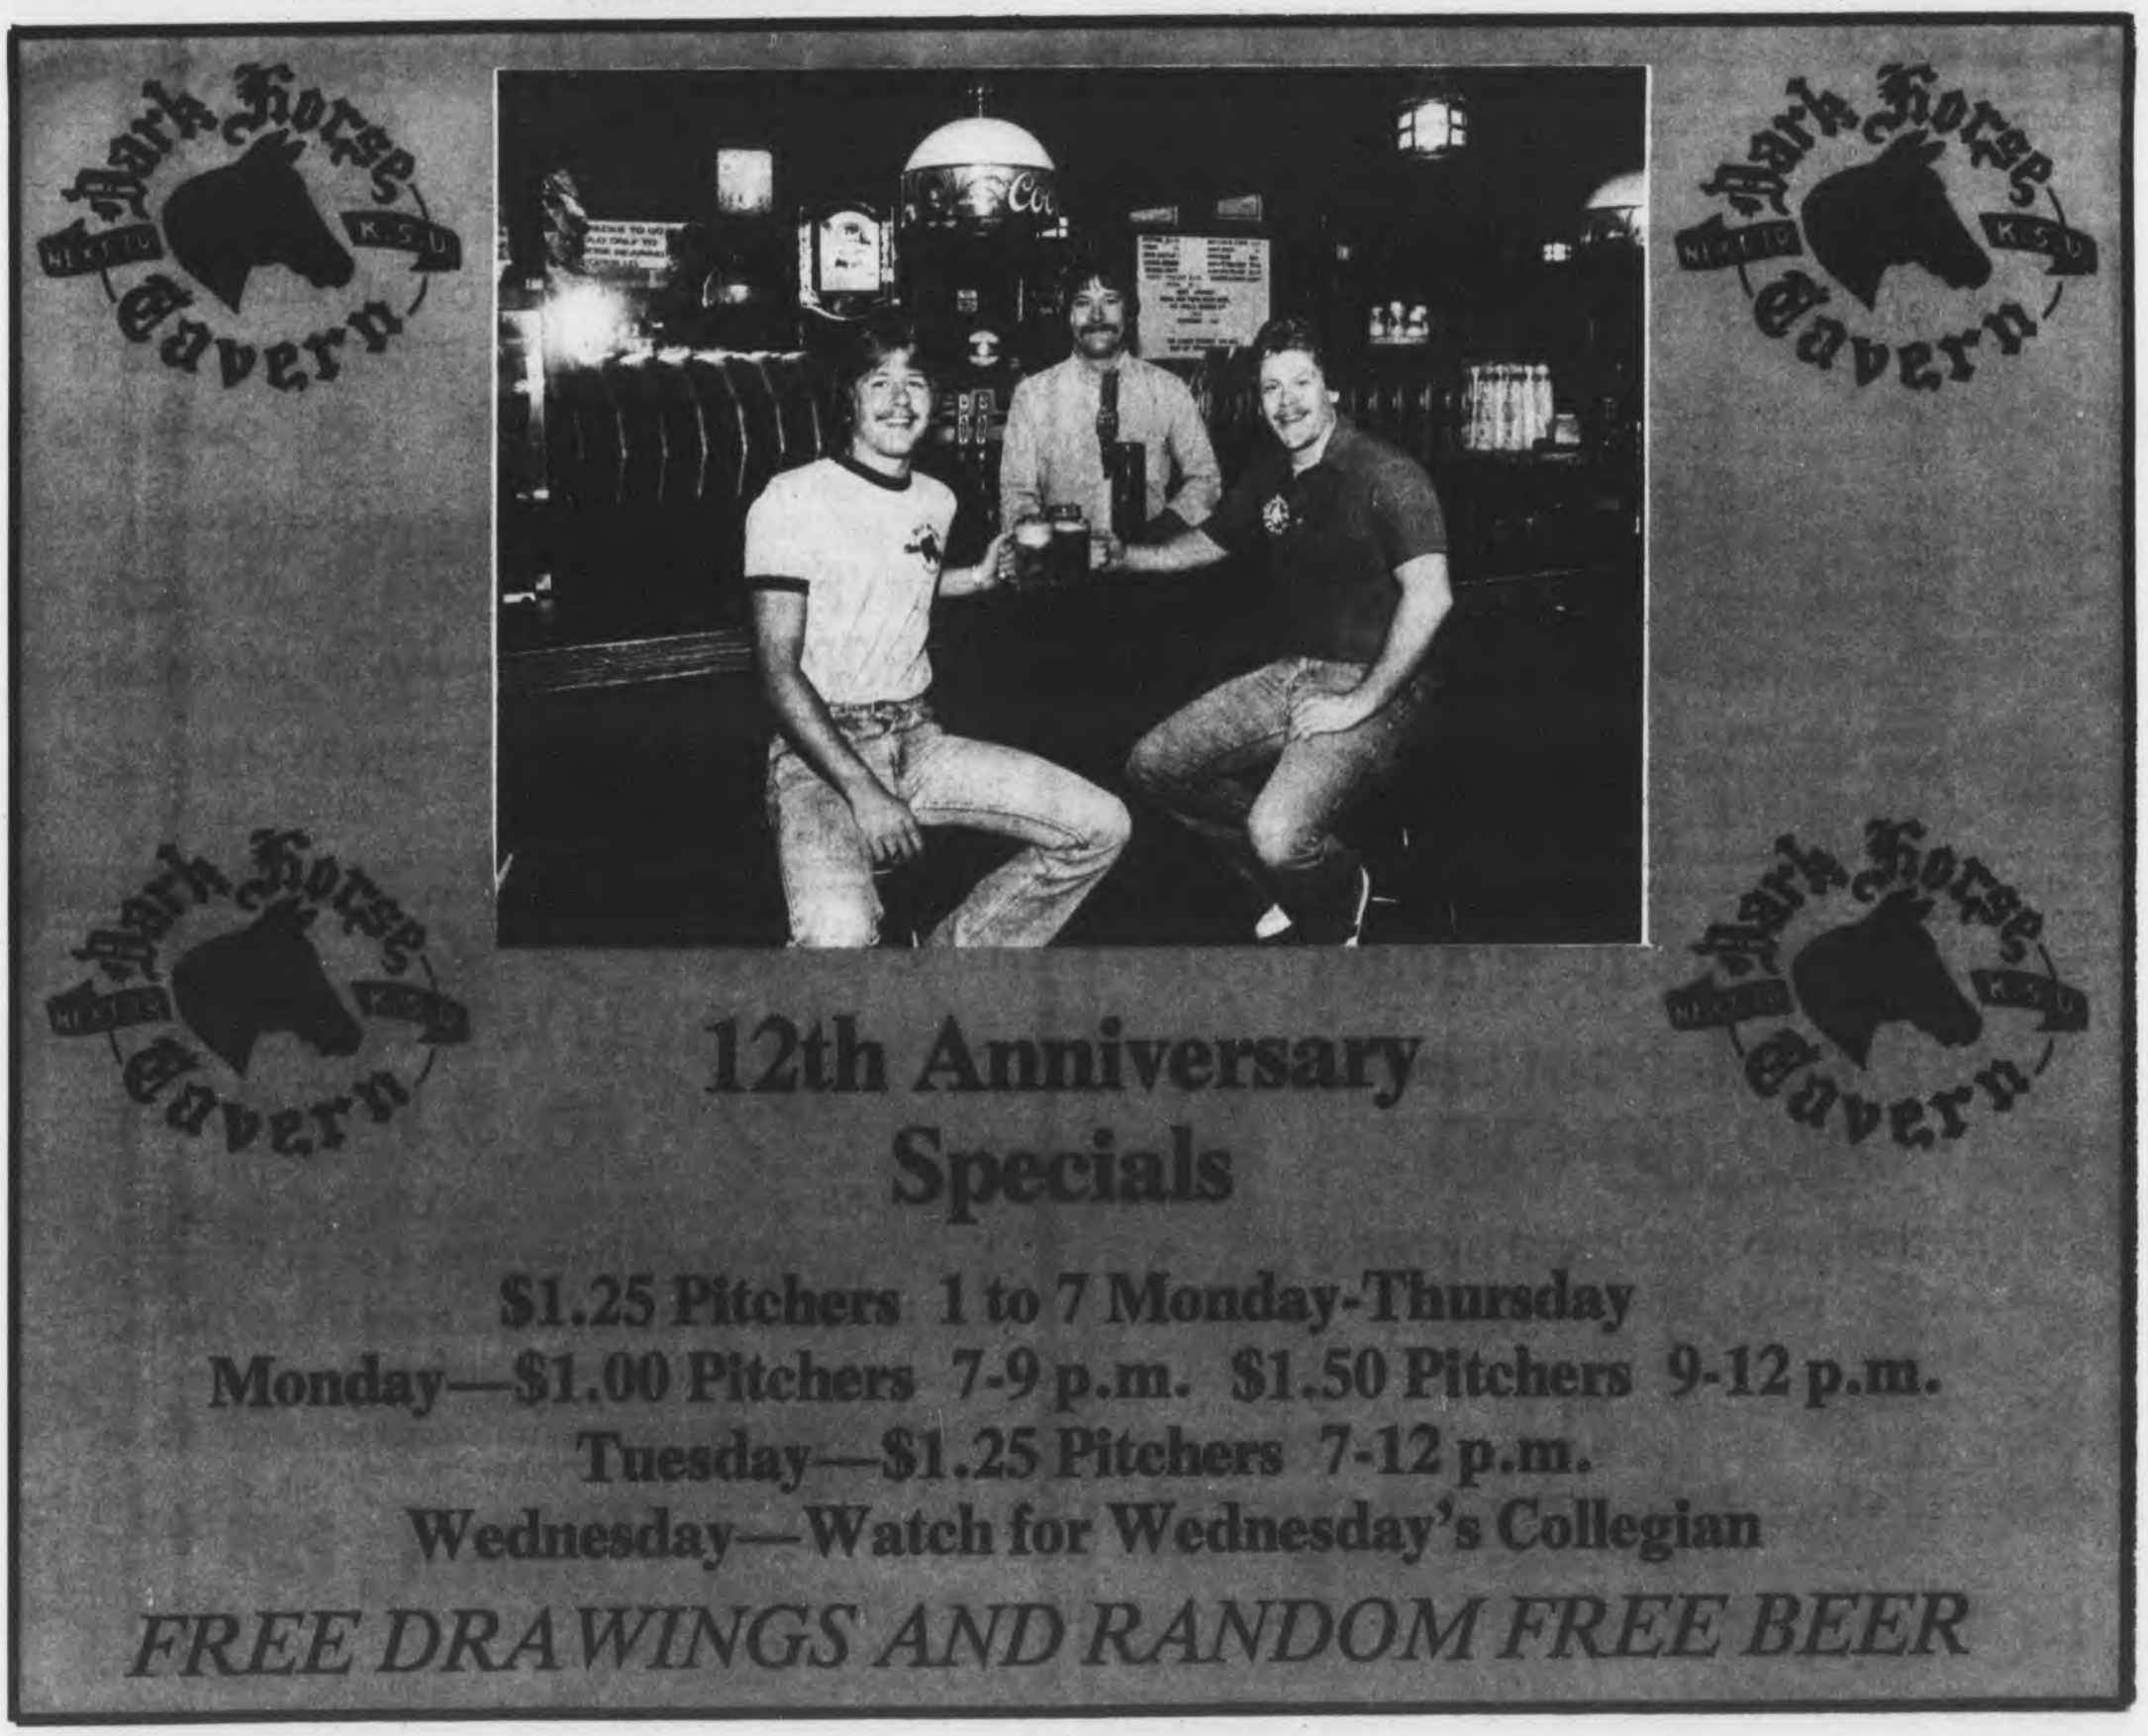
According to Acker, K-State's athletic department is a model for the Big Eight because it offers a fully integrated program with eight sports for both men and women.

"We've moved the Big Eight to where it is equally responsible for both men and women," in athletics. K-State athletics, he said in terms of finances, are "well in the black."

In academics, K-State received $18.6 million in grants for research this year, Acker said, which included $1.5 million to the physics department for atomic physics research.

THAT "PUTS K-State on the map" in the physical sciences, he said.

In addition to having two Rhodes scholars, K-State has, for the second year in a row, two Truman scholars. Only two other universities, Harvard and Yale, have ever had two winners in one year, Acker said.



In reference to other accomplishments, Acker said K-State has benefited Kansas agriculturally by developing two large-yield, disease-resistant varieties of wheat.

K-State is also "the prime producer of teachers" in the state, he added, even with several teachers colleges in the state.

ENROLLMENT, however, has dropped from 19,982 a year ago to 19,500 now, Acker said, due to districting of off-campus instruction "which pulled us out of Kansas City and western Kansas," and a combination of economic factors and a drop in the size of high school graduating classes.

But K-State's student body has an enthusiastic interest and concern for other people, he said.

"There is a level of empathy among the student body that just did not exist in my generation," he said, adding that students "are not bashful about getting acquainted."

Taxation dominates 1983 legislative session

TOPEKA (AP) — Legislative leaders from both political parties wrapped the 1983 session in generally glowing terms late Sunday, saying it was one of the most productive on record but somewhat of a bittersweet success because of the passage of record tax increases.

"This was one of those sessions where it took a while to do it, but we got it done," said Sen. Paul Hess, R-Wichita. "It was a session dominated by one big issue: where do we get money?"

Said House Minority Leader Fred Weaver, D-Baxter Springs, "We put the state of Kansas in pretty good order given the problems we were facing. It has to be labeled as a productive session."

Still, Weaver and Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger, D-Kansas City, said it had been a particularly difficult and trying session for Democrats in the GOP-controlled Legislature.

"It was a partisan session," said Weaver. "The results were positive, but the process was negative."

OF COURSE, ASSESSMENTS of the 95-day session depended upon how each lawmaker viewed the historic tax increases that were pushed through to bolster a state treasury drained by the slumping economy.

"It hasn't been an easy session and I can't say I'm thrilled about it. It's never been thrilling to raise taxes," said Senate President Ross Doyen, R-Concordia. "We were in a difficult position. We had to do something to shore up finances and I think we were sucessful."

Said Senate Majority Leader Robert Talkington, R-Iola: "We addressed the financial situation in a very responsible way. It would have been awfully easy to say cutback spending, lay people off. But we did try to take the approach that we wanted to meet the needs of the people of Kansas."

HOUSE SPEAKER MIKE HAYDEN, R-Atwood, flatly called the session the most productive of the 11 he has participated in since he first came to Topeka in 1972. And he contended there was far more bipartisan cooperation than in the past few years.

"In hard times, under adverse conditions, people bind together," said Hayden. "There was more Republican unity, less partisan difference in the Legislature and the immediacy of the problems all added to the productivity," said Hayden.

Nearly each of the top leaders in both political parties, particularly Republicans, pointed to the multi-year highway funding package as the hallmark of the 1983 session. Democrats praised passage of a severance tax on minerals production. Failure to resolve the state's troubled property tax system through reappraisal and classification were cited as the chief disappointments.

"It's a historic session for three reasons," said Hess. "We cut more out of a budget than any time in state history; we raised more taxes than ever in history and we significantly expanded our tax base. Instead of the big three we now have the big four: severance tax, sales tax, corporate tax and individual income tax."

BUT IT WAS THOSE same tax increases that generated the most criticism from some legislators.

House Majority Leader Joseph Hoagland, R-Overland Park, had a bleak assessment of the session.

"I wouldn't think it's anything to be proud of. It was a session in which we raised an awful lot of taxes and didn't provide the spending cuts I think we should have. We largely accomodated the views of the governor."

Lawmakers said about $45 million had been sliced out of Democratic Gov. John Carlin's proposed budget, more than half of it by reducing the governor's recommendation for public school finance. The Legislature provided about $76 million for schools next year, up $28.4 million from the current year, and will pay for about 46 percent of all public school expenditures next year.

THAT WAS A SOURCE of criticism by Carlin's people.

"We started the session with several priorities, foremost the severance tax and education," said Bill Hoch, Carlin's chief of staff. "The governor is certainly pleased that the severance tax is going to become law, but the governor is disappointed that more couldn't be accomplished for education. That has to be one of the top priorities for next year."

But the 1984 session was the least of concerns for most legislators who cleared out of the Capitol. Their mood, quite simply, was one of relief.

As Rep. Keith Farrar, R-Hugoton, put it: "We did the job that had to be done."

Soviets claim U.S. diplomat expelled as spy

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party newspaper Pravda said Sunday that a U.S. diplomat had been expelled from Leningrad for spying, but U.S. officials said there has not been an expulsion of an American posted in Leningrad for "several years."

Without giving any date for the reported expulsion, Pravda said "Vice Consul D. Shorer" was seized by KGB secret police while retrieving a "magnetic container" of information planted by a Soviet double agent.

A spokesman at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow said Sunday: "The case, if it occurred at all, is out of the past and not anything recent. It didn't happen in the last two years and no one recalls anything like it in recent years."

U.S. State Department spokeswoman Sue Pittman said in Washington: "There has been no recent expulsion from Leningrad in the last several years."

She declined to comment on whether anyone named D. Shorer ever was expelled from the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union occassionally publicizes spy cases long after the fact.

In recent weeks, Western European nations have expelled dozens of Soviets on spying charges and the United States ordered out three alleged Soviet spies.

Polish government arrests underground Solidarity leader

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Communist government on Sunday announced the arrest of a key underground Solidarity strategist, the latest in a series of detentions apparently aimed at undercutting the union's call for May Day protests.

Jozef Pinior, one of five fugitive Solidarity leaders who met with former union chief Lech Walesa on April 9-11, was taken into custody in his hometown of Wroclaw, according to a dispatch by the official Polish news agency PAP.

The report did not specify when Pinior was arrested. The announcement was made one day before Walesa was to return to his job as an electrician at the Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk, where he helped lead the August 1980 strikes that created Solidarity.

The 39-year-old labor leader said the decision to give him his job back was intended in part to help authorities keep track of him and thereby curtail his contacts with the underground.

However, Walesa's readmission to the shipyard also puts him in direct contact with the 17,000 yard workers who are his most avid followers.

Walesa, who reports to the shipyard for a medical examination Monday morning, said: "I feel great. And I feel I owe the working people a huge debt for their patience and support."

Asked to comment on Pinior's detention, Walesa said: "Accidents happen in this kind of work. But 100 others will rise up to replace Pinior."

About 6,000 Solidarity supporters gathered Sunday night at St. Stanislaw Kostka church in northern Warsaw for a Mass. Similar pro-Solidarity services have been held on the last Sunday of nearly every month since the declaration of martial law.

Shultz trip reflects Lebanese importance to Mideast peace

WASHINGTON (AP) — The trip by Secretary of State George P. Shultz to the Middle East reflects a judgment by the Reagan administration that agreement on a troop withdrawal from Lebanon is the key to progress on an overall Middle East peace.

The administration had been reluctant to tie the two issues so closely together because it might encourage Israel to stand pat in Lebanon, knowing it could block overall Middle East talks that could threaten its control of the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

But Arab leaders, such as President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt and Jordan's King Hussein, have made clear to the administration that Reagan's Middle East peace initiative is now virtually dead without a prior agreement on a withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon.

Reagan decided Friday to send Shultz to the region to make a final push for an accord for Israel to withdraw its 25,000 troops from Lebanon, after which he will try to get a withdrawal of Syrian and Palestine Liberation Organization forces.

Shultz planned to leave late Sunday for Cairo. He also will visit Lebanon and Israel, and may engage in shuttle-type diplomacy, if necessary, to get the final agreement. He might also visit Syria.

In an interview published in Sunday editions of The Washington Post, Shultz was quoted as saying Arab leaders may now be regretting Hussein's refusal to negotiate with Israel along the lines proposed by Reagan last September.

"It does seem to me that there's a certain shock that has taken hold, as I read the cables from the various Arab capitals, in which people are saying to themselves: 'Are we really going to pass this up? Maybe we can't afford to do that.

Inmate population at all-time high

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of prison inmates in the United States grew by a record 42,915 in 1982 to reach an all-time high of 412,303, the Justice Department said Sunday.

Spurred by tougher sentencing and more restricted parole laws, the increase was the largest in absolute numbers since counting began in 1925.

It resulted in an 11.6 percent rise, second only to the 12.2 percent surge in 1981, said the department's Bureau of Justice Statistics.

The number of federal inmates reach 29,673 by the end of 1982, up 5.5 percent, a slower rate of increase than the year before when the number rose 15.5 percent. State prisons held 382,630 inmates at year's end, up 12.1 percent.

With federal prisons nearly 24 percent over capacity, the Reagan administration is seeking $94 million from Congress — the largest single-year financing request for new prisons ever. Over a three-year period, the federal government hopes to add 3,320 new prison beds.

Most states also have begun prison construction programs, but the Justice Department said facilities opened in 1982 absorbed only part of the year's increase in inmates.

Citing the swelling tide of new prisoners, Attorney General William French Smith said last month he is studying ways to punish non-violent criminals without sending them to prison. He said the $10,000 a year required to maintain a criminal in prison is too much to pay in such cases. Instead, federal officials are looking at alternative penalties, such as restitution to victims and community service.

Six congressmen fly to El Salvador

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six House members flew Sunday to Central America as the Reagan administration tried to head off growing congressional opposition to its anti-Marxist campaign in the war-torn region.

Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, ambassador to the United Nations, expressed confidence that Congress would not rebuff President Reagan's request for an added $60 million in military aid for El Salvador or curtail reported CIA activities against the leftist government in neighboring Nicaragua.

"What we hope is that Congress will share the responsibility for finding a constructive solution," Kirkpatrick said on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley" show. "I think Congress will, frankly."

Reagan is scheduled to make his first foreign policy address to Congress on Wednesday to repeat his warnings that Nicaragua and Cuba, along with the leftists they support in El Salvador, threaten the stability of the region.

The House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign affairs is scheduled to vote a day earlier on the administration's request for additional military aid for El Salvador.

The panel's chairman, Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., flew Sunday to El Salvador for a two-day visit before the vote. The House Foreign Affairs Committee voted 19-6 last week against Reagan's request.

Also Sunday, five members of the House Intelligence Committee, departed for a CIA-guided tour of El Salvador and Honduras, where the U.S. intelligence agency is reported to be supplying and training guerrillas opposed to Nicaragua's Marxist government.

The tour was arranged by CIA Director William Casey in an effort to show the committee that the agency is not violating a 1982 law forbidding the use of U.S. money for the purpose of overthrowing Nicaragua's government, said Rep. Norman Mineta, D-Calif., one of those making the trip.

"The Reagan administration is obeying law and we will obey the law," Kirkpatrick said.

She said Reagan has maintained the same 3-to-1 ratio of economic and military aid used by previous administrations, while the Soviet Union has shipped thousands of tons of heavy weapons to the region.

Spouses pursue separate careers together

Married faculty members find lifestyle flexible

By JOY CULVER
Staff Writer

While it's not uncommon to meet married students in class, it's more unusual to discover the geography professor is married to that English professor over in Denison Hall.

Uncommon as it may seem, many K-State professors are married to other faculty members either in their own department or in another department or college. After meeting in college, many professors have married and moved on together to pursue academic careers. Glancing through the faculty section of the student directory, it's easy to find examples.

Since both work at the University, a first assumption may be that married faculty members see a lot, maybe too much, of their spouses. However, several couples said this often is not the case, even if they're as close as the same department.

"Ordinarily, we don't see each other during the day," Linda Richter, assistant professor in political science, said. "We both have hectic schedules. They are designed so they don't overlap."

RICHTER'S HUSBAND, William, also a professor in the political science department, said they usually do not teach on the same days, depending on the semester.

"Most of the time we're both busy," he said.

Sandra and Charles Bussing are another faculty couple who seldom see each other on campus. Since they teach in different departments this is more understandable, according to Charles, assistant professor in geography. Sandra, instructor in English, has her office and classes in Denison, the same building as his classes, but usually doesn't see her husband.

His class schedule is primarily Monday, Wednesday and Friday, while her classes meet mostly Tuesday and Thursday. Because of this varied work schedule, they usually don't drive to work together.

GRADING LOADS, as well as work schedules, differ. While Sandra spends many long weekends grading papers, Charles Bussing's grading periods are dispersed throughout the semester. This schedule sometimes means even less time spent together.

Because they both teach at the University, Sandra said they often talk about and share problems between them. She said it is easy to understand each other's time commitments; they can also exchange information for their classes. Another advantage is having mutual friendships because the majority of their friends are other faculty members.

"Living in a university community is intellectually stimulating," Sandra said. "It's a very satisfying kind of lifestyle."

Sandra and Charles aren't the only two Bussings at K-State. Their son, Greg, a freshman in engineering, said he knows many faculty members because of his parents. Last semester, when Greg had a class next door to one of his mother's classes, he said he often saw her.

EVENTUALLY, Greg may have to take an engineering communications course which his mother teaches. But he said he would not take the class from her.

Greg said his parents, who have instilled in him a quest for knowledge, can sometimes help him with his homework. However, he added that he doesn't get any special privileges from any of his parents' faculty friends. However, he said because he knows these teachers, he is more comfortable asking questions in class.

OTHER MARRIED PROFESSORS do see each other more often. Ann Smith, instructor in biology, said she generally sees her husband, Christopher, during the day. Her lab room is only two doors down the hall from his office, but their offices are in different corners of Ackert Hall. They usually walk or drive to campus together, but don't eat lunch together.

"Chris plays basketball every day during lunch," Ann said.

While the Smiths both teach in the biology department, they teach in varied areas. Ann teaches a human body class and teaches a population biology class. These areas still have some overlap, Chris said.

"With this lifestyle, we have a lot of common ground," Ann said. "It's helpful because we can understand the other person's position. It's easy to identify with stress and easy to be supportive."

BOTH SMITHS have taught at the University for 13 years, after moving 14 times in their first 10 years of marriage. Ann started out as a part-time instructor, which was convenient for her because their children were still fairly young.

Over the years she has acquired a full-time position. When they started working in the same department of the same college, they worried about what other people might think.

"First we thought people would think we were not independent," Chris said. "But we found that wasn't a problem."

Being in the same department might facilitate the ability to conduct research together, depending on the subject matter. But neither the Smiths or the Richters have done formal research with their spouses.

CHRIS SMITH SAID while he and his wife were in graduate school, however, they did help each other with research projects.

Although both Richters are interested in South Asia studies and have traveled abroad together, they have never researched the area as a team. William said they have different work styles which often makes cooperative research difficult. Linda said it's more difficult for a husband and wife, as opposed to two colleagues, to work on a project together.

Linda Richter said it might be interesting to team-teach a course together, although they have never seriously considered the idea. Currently, she teaches Sex and Politics, which could be a team-teaching possibility, since William outlined the course 12 years ago. But they have not made any plans to do so.

"It helps that we have very similar interests and ways of looking at things," Linda said.

Should they ever decide to move, these married professors said it would be difficult for both to obtain positions at another university, considering the current economic situation. Charles Bussing said since both he and his wife want to teach, each would have to consider the other in the decision to move.

"Both of us had to make career sacrifices to be at a place together," Linda Richter said.

Teaching tends to be more than an eight-hour a day job but most faculty couples cited flexible schedules as an advantage to their lifestyle. The Smiths said a lot of evening work is often neccessary to get everything done.

"Faculty members' lives are flexible," Ann Smith said. "It's open-ended; you can work at your own pace and schedule. It is good for research."

Gruesome execution may bring changes in death penalty law

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — State officials defended and family members attacked Alabama's method of execution after it took a gruesome 10 minutes and three 1,900-volt jolts of electricity to kill condemned murderer John Louis Evans III.

Evans, 33, on Friday night became the first person to die in the electric chair since 1965. He was sentenced to death for the 1977 robbery-murder of Mobile pawnbroker Edward Nassar.

"Based on what I saw, I would think that everybody would rather have a different (execution) method," said Ron Tate, a spokesman for the Alabama Department of Corrections.

Tate did not witness the execution at Holman Prison in Atmore, but said he saw Evans' charred, smoking body in the brightly yellow-painted chair immediately afterward.

"It wasn't a pretty sight to see, I'm sure, but it's the only thing we have," Tate said. "I think everybody was looking forward to a nice, little, tidy package deal, but it was altogether different from what all of us expected."

The electric chair was tested repeatedly before Evans was strapped into it. Prison officials had assured reporters that one 30-second surge of electricity would be enough to kill the inmate.

The first jolt was administered at 8:30, the last at 8:40, and Evans was pronounced dead four minutes later.

Before Evans' execution, a bill to change the method to lethal injection had been introduced in the Legislature. But state Attorney General Charles Graddick, who succeeded in having the U.S. Supreme Court dissolve a lower court delay of Evans' death, opposed a change.

Janie Nobles, a spokeswoman for Graddick's office, said Graddick has taken that position because of the likely court challenges that would prevent the new method from being applied.

Appropriations:
Legislature approves overall funding bill

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Legislature on Sunday overwhelmingly approved and sent to Gov. John Carlin a bill appropriating $31 million for a variety of state agencies in the final funding bill of the 1983 session.

The measure, called the omnibus appropriations bill included a $558,000 compromise allocation to the revenue department to administer the mineral severance tax.

The package agreed upon includes $100,000 funding to be split equally between community mental health and retardation centers; $1.5 million for a drastically reduced Division of Post Audit — the Legislature's financial watchdog on state agencies; and 23 staff members to create a Mineral Tax Bureau which will provide the Revenue Department a means to administer the new severance tax law.

The Senate had voted to leave just $200,000 and 10 new staff members in the omnibus bill to pay administrative costs incurred by the state Department of Revenue in collecting the severance tax next year. The House version of the bill called for $850,000 and 31 new employees.

As approved, the revenue department will receive $66,923 to collect the tax in the remainder of the current fiscal year, which ends June 30. Then, the agency will receive $558,000 for the next fiscal year which begins July 1.

A key provision of the omnibus bill related to the Division of Legislative Post Audit. The lower chamber wanted the division eliminated, but under a compromise hammered out between the House and Senate, the audit staff will be cut from its current level of 40 down to 20 and a $1.5 million budget was authorized for the agency.

The House wanted to overhaul and dismantle the audit division and voted to abolish Post Audit as a separate agency and transfer its duties to the Legislature's research department.

The Division of Post Audit is a branch of the Legislature and conducts financial and performance audits of various state agencies and programs as required by law or at the direction of the Legislature's Post Audit Committee.

Lawmakers who pushed for the overhaul said the Post Audit Division had become tangled in routine auditing work and was often too busy to provide special audits for lawmakers in a short period of time.

Other items in the omnibus bill are:

—An extra $6 million for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services to fully fund the Aid to Dependent Children program. That funding would be in addition to about $79 million provided earlier this session for the program.

—$30,000 for the attorney general's office to force more natural gas production from the Hugoton gas field in southwestern Kansas. Much of the money will be used to retain a legal firm with expertise in natural gas regulation. Attorney General Robert Stephan is exploring the possiblity of a lawsuit to challenge the right of producers to have large unused reserves of gas for interstate markets.

—$21.2 million to pay for utility costs in the next fiscal year at the state university system and the Kansas Technical Institute. The money represents about a 10 percent increase over current utility funding.

Grain

THE COUNCIL is attempting to persuade countries to use U.S. grain standards, Rodriguez said.

"We are also working to convince Chile, Jamaica and Venezuela to adopt U.S. grain standards," he explained. "If they will adopt U.S. standards, trade will be much easier.

"Another spinoff would be that by having them adopt U.S. grain standards, our competitors, who are trying to penetrate the market, would have to come up to U.S. standards, and our customers would begin to think in terms of U.S. quality."

According to Rodriguez, the importance of establishing export markets for U.S. grains cannot be overemphasized. "The domestic market is mature, it is not expanding. In order to sell all the grain we grow, we must have foreign markets."

The U.S. Feed Grains Council, an organization which groups U.S. feed-grain producers with its overseas offices and its internationally oriented Washington staff, is in the position to expand markets abroad.

The council identifies constraints that hinder the flow of U.S. grains into foreign markets and carries out in-country activities which help to minimize the constraints.

"We also, through technology transfer, help the end user of U.S. commodities," he added.

"While the course was on, I was informed by the course participant, Mr. Young K. Lee of Sunkyong International in Korea, that the National Livestock Cooperative Federation of that nation had this week contracted 100,000 tons of corn to be delivered the end of April or the first days of May," Rodriguez said.

The council has an office in Korea which works to promote these types of transactions.

Council exposes students to fine arts

(Editor's note: This is the first of two articles dealing with the Fine Arts Council and its members.)

By LINDA GROSS
Staff Writer

Obtaining funding for fine arts groups used to be a knock-down, drag-out affair.

Before the establishment of the Fine Arts Council, Student Senate allocated money to the different groups and senate allocation meetings became heated events.

According to John Chalmers, professor of finance and former vice president of Academic Affairs, groups needing allocations would pack the meetings with supporters and "try to stare them (senators) down. It got to be internal politics. It became a question of who could bring in the biggest groups."

As a result, the groups wore down the finance committee with the squabblings. Finally, in 1969, senate decided it couldn't adequately establish priorities among the competing groups and asked Chalmers to establish the FAC, whose responsibility was to determine priorities and distribute funds.

Since many students come from small communities and don't have much exposure to the fine arts, they might not get the exposure unless the University provides it, Chalmers said.

Therefore, it is up to the FAC to "give students desperately needed exposure to the fine arts."

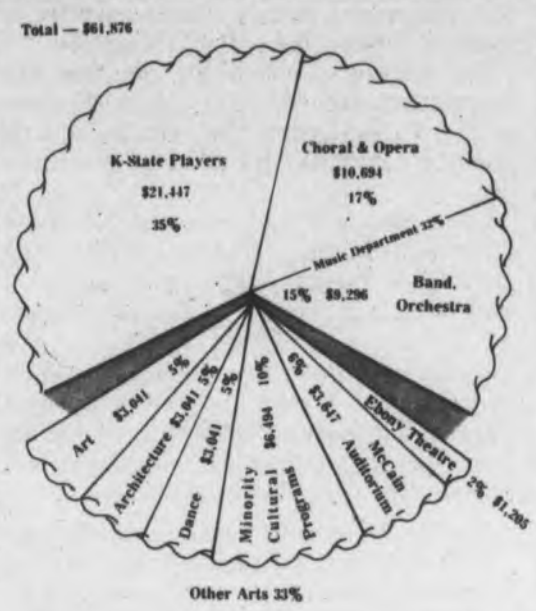
FINE ARTS PROGRAMS should provide opportunities for students to participate in the arts themselves, either as an actual participant or as an observer, Chalmers said.

"I can't draw a round circle using a half dollar," he joked, "but I want to be exposed to good paintings. So my participation in this area will be that of an observer."

From 1969 to 1975, FAC received a lump-sum allocation from Student Governing Association and divided it among the fine arts programs: K-State Players, band/orchestra, choral/opera, art department, the College of Architecture and Design's fine arts lecture program and minority cultural programs.

FAC determines priorities, funding

IN SEPTEMBER 1975, SGA established a $1.60 line item to fund fine arts programming. This was to be accompanied by "an itemized account of FAC expenditures and increased student input towards the Council."



According to Chalmers, before FAC was established there were always opportunities for full senate discussion about fine arts programming. When FAC was formed, Chalmers said it tried to get students who "were intensely interested in FAC — frequently students came from one of the groups on the council such as theater or architecture, but didn't have a parochial attitude toward that group."

FAC is composed of representatives from each of the fine arts programs, two senators and two at-large student members and is presided over by Owen Koeppe, University provost and ex-officio member.

FAC DECIDES FUNDING priorities on the basis of "consensus," Chalmers said. Though votes are taken, they are "almost always unanimous because every point in each budget is discussed beforehand."

With a limited amount of funds and because each department believes it needs student funding the most, reaching a "consensus" is not always a smooth process.

Fine arts programming today primarily consists of band/orchestra, choral/opera and K-State Players. To a lesser extent it includes the minority cultural programs, the College of Architecture and Design Lecture Program, the art department, the dance program (added in 1976), Ebony Theater (separated from minority cultural affairs in 1979) and McCain (added this year).

HISTORICALLY, FAC consensus has provided the Players and the music department with two thirds of the fine arts funds and the remaining third divided among the other six groups.

Of the $61,876 which FAC received this year, K-State Players received $21,447, the music department received $19,990 and the remaining $20,469 was split between six groups.

The six groups and the amount they received are: dance, art and architecture, $3,041 each; Ebony Theater, $1,205; minority cultural programs, $6,494; and McCain, $3,647.

Between 1973 and 1981, K-State Players, band/orchestra and choral/opera have seen increases in their budgets by 46.7 percent, 28 percent and 59.5 percent respectively; while architecture increased 12.3 percent, minority cultural programs increased 19 percent and the art department decreased 15 percent.

ACCORDING TO MARK TERRIL, SGA finance chairman and a student member of FAC, 1982-83 is the first year the less-funded groups received a larger percentage of the total than the three major groups.

"This may be because of a general feeling that those (less-funded groups) had been slighted in the past," Terril said. "The three large groups have historically received greater priority in funding within the Fine Arts Council.

"Once a group has money it is easy to justify it — and hard to eliminate it.

"I can see them (members) looking out for their own best interest," Terril said, but added that the makeup of students on FAC should be able to alleviate one or a few groups dominating the distribution of funds. But "things don't always go that way."

"Unless someone really yells about it (the distribution of funds), who are we (students on the Council) to say if it's right or not?" Terril asked.

With the addition of new groups over the years, funding has been spread even more thinly among the groups despite this year's 30-cent increase in the lin-item fee, Charles Stroh, head of the art department, said.

With more groups to fund and a declining enrollment pinching funds, he said, there are sufficient funds to provide high quality programming in only a few areas.

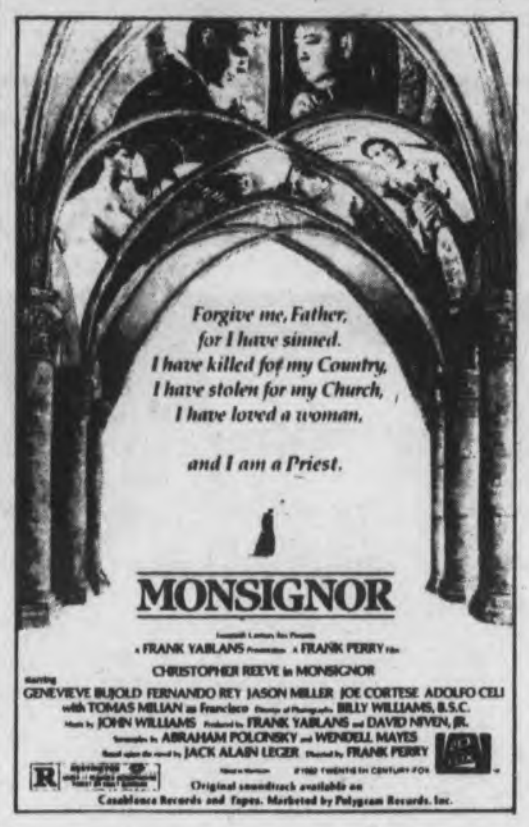
THE JOB INTERVIEW
Important now, more than ever.

A tight job market and hard economic times mean fewer job interviews. When you do land an interview, you want to give it your absolute best shot.

Prepare yourself. Study the company. Anticipate questions. Rehearse in your mind answers you might give about your qualifications and contributions you might make to the company. Find ways to volunteer pertinent information about yourself that might not be asked by the interviewer.

Be positive. Put your best foot forward.

And by all means, dress to make a positive impression.



We can help you—as we've helped numerous K-Staters in the past. We know what's in style, what works and what doesn't.

Festival blends old traditions with new questions

Music, dance, food, art, crafts — life — along with the sounds of children playing, people laughing, questioning filled CiCo Park Saturday and Sunday during the Kansas Folklife Festival.

Entering the park, the rich aroma of freshly prepared foods floated through the air. Lively music could be heard, almost in harmony with the noisy crowd. Two stages were occupied simultaneously with a variety of musicians, some entertaining, others teaching.

Bob Suckiel taught his audience about the history of the railroad through his folk songs. Being a railroad worker, Suckiel said many of his songs were composed and exchanged by workers during the long hours on the tracks.

Inspirational music was presented by the New Light Inspirational Choir, a group of 30 members based out of Kansas City.

The smooth sound of bluegrass was performed by Prairie Fire. THe wide variety of instruments the band used to perform — banjo, violin, fiddle, guitar, and mandolin — gave it an original bluegrass sound in the style of Flatt and Scruggs.

Around the craftsmen, one could hear question after question. Young and old alike asked about crafts some had never seen before or other crafts some remembered from mothers or grandmothers.

PATIENTLY, Grace Goff answered inquiries about her tatting. She showed each person the "easy" steps of making the circular design she plans to put on a quilt.

"My mother taught me to tat before I went to school. But my grandmother taught me the most. If I needed anything, she made sure I got it," Goff said.

On display was a solid white quilted bedspread, with white tatted hearts of various shapes and sizes carefully sewn on. She said it took her about 616 hours to make. Another item Goff brought was a "60-by-80" tablecloth, which she estimated has over four miles of thread in it, with 750,000 double knots.

Next to the tatter was a spinner. Concentration is the key to spinning, Marilyn Jones explained to a beginner. The student was learning that working the foot, which spins the wheel, and keeping the wool taut, are the two most difficult things about spinning.

KEPKA BELTON brought to the festival the art of Kraslice, or hand decorated Easter eggs. A fourth generation Czech, Belton learned the craft from her grandmother, who used a box with a potato and a spoon.

As a school teacher, she passed her ability to her students. She then devised and patented what she calls a "lap egg studio," which the participants can use on their laps while decorating eggs.

For a nostalgic keepsake, human hair was used by Lenora Dodds to weave intricate flowers.

Jo Ann Dangerfield accompanies the Inspirational Choir performance at the Kansas Folklife Festival.

"My grandmother taught me the art. She was more or less the type to say, 'You're going to learn to' — I'm sure I was willing at the time," Dodds said.

From rags to rugs was the craft demonstrated by Mary C. Knox. She has been doing it for most of her life.

KNOX SAID she grew up during the time of "wall-to-wall rag carpeting," but woven rugs are her favorites.

"It only takes about one or two hours to weave a rug, but preparing the material takes the longest," she said, adding that she uses tube socks, nylons and nylon panties.

Occupational skills such as blacksmithing, sheep shearing, wheat milling and working with leather were demonstrated both days. Each craft and each item made were as individual as the person who made them.

The Kansas Folklife Festival brought together the young and old. The old passed on the knowledge that their elders had passed to them. In return, the young gave to them the exciting knowledge that folk crafts and heritage will not end with them, but will be passed on from generation to generation.

Performers praised for effort but overall, concert flops

By TANYA BRANSON
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Maybe Manhattan just isn't ready for rock'n'roll. If the Joan Jett/Huey Lewis concert was any indication, anyone with an amplifier should get out of town.

Low advance ticket sales was the first clue and an Ahearn Field House seemingly filled with an abundance of adolescents was the next clue. It was mostly a dead concert, except for a few brief moments when Jett convinced the crowd to participate in some songs.

Review

Jett and the Blackhearts urged strains of rock'n'roll out of their guitars Friday night with Huey Lewis and the News as special guests. Lewis was more than bearable while Jett was commendable.

Lewis and his News started out great with one of the songs, "Change of Heart," demonstrating talent and originality. The band's strengths were in ability and talented numbers, but its show was something to be desired.

Lewis had a good voice, lending accent to songs such as "Just a Little Lie to Remember You By" and "Sooner or Later." Solo time was amply given to most all members of the six-man band. Outstanding was Johnny Colla, guitarist and saxophonist, and Chris Hayes, guitarist.

In "Just a Little Lie to Remember You By," Hayes played an excellent solo, pouring out effort and expertise, something to applaud. But did the crowd appreciate it? Not hardly; Lewis was right when he said, "Come on Manhattan, you can do better than that."

Perhaps the lack of crowd response was a factor in The News' forced performance. While there could be several reasons for a so-so performance, ranging from being road-tired to having done the same concert on uncountable times, crowd feedback didn't contribute to make it better.

The News was too rehearsed, too preplanned, almost to the point where each person in the band except Lewis had a road map to guide him through the songs. Although they have talent abounding, it was only fresh during the spotlighted solos.

The only song, and the band's best song, which both The News and the audience seemed to enjoy, was "Workin' for a Living" off the "Picture This" album. With Lewis' Dylan-ish ability on the harmonica, it is the best song on the album and was the best song in concert.

Jett and the Blackhearts started a 16-month tour with the song "Bad Reputation." Although there were evidences of first-stop kinks to be worked out, her concert was an extraordinary effort to urge the audience off its seat and into the music.

Jett, looking small on stage in a tight jumpsuit, but with personality protruding, was actively trying to make her first stop a good one. The problem wasn't so much in her performance or music, it was in Kansas ears too used to pop-rock to appreciate a guitar band.

The stage show was good and the music is what could be expected from The Blackhearts. Spontaneity was evident and the members of the band — Gary Ryan on bass, Ricky Byrd on guitar and Lee Crystal on drums — seemed free to do as they pleased with all respects to Jett of course.

One of the best songs, better than her standard, "I Love Rock'n'Roll" was "Victim of Circumstance" which hit a happy medium of vocals and guitar, something many of her earlier songs had failed to do. They either were guitar-dominated or Jett vocals-oriented.

Before playing the song, Jett yelled into the crowd, "There are troublemakers and then there are those that just seem to get in trouble." The crowd must have been of the latter, because the response was more than welcoming.

Things were starting to roll now, with Jett's voice still strong, though faltering slightly, and the crowd looking livelier. The Blackhearts played "I Love Rock'n'Roll" giving the crowd time to shout back the vocals. The band also did this trick with "Do You Wanna Touch Me?" Jett urging the crowd to yell even louder "yeah, oh yeah, oh yeah."

"Crimson and Clover" was another audience pleaser. It was demonstration of the special effects and lighting the Blackhearts had taken the time to stage.

Her last song was "Star, Star" by The Rolling Stones. While most of her songs were written by someone else, none are so blatantly someone else's. If one could erase memories of Mick Jagger, then she might have done it well. Anyway, she was trying.

KU Relays:

Wildcat track teams shine

By JUDI WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

LAWRENCE — If it's not the rain, it's the wind.

Although rain has been hindering both the K-State men's and women's track squads in the past weeks, it was the gusty wind that posed some problems on Friday and Saturday at the 58th Annual Kansas Relays.

In several events the K-State athletes found the wind to their disadvantage, but in other events, like the sprints, the wind helped push several athletes to top finishes.

The pole vault competition was one in which the wind created some problems.

The pole vault competition was already expected to be tough, with the top three Big Eight vaulters competing with two of the top performers from the Soviet Union, but the wind was an unanticipated competitor. The wind swirled in all directions in Memorial Stadium creating problems as the vaulters propelled themselves over 17 feet in the air in an attempt to clear the bar.

But Doug Lytle conquered the wind and captured second place in the vaulting competition with a finishing height of 18-4. The mark, also reached by Alexander Krupsky from the Soviet Union, set a Kansas Relays record. The previous record was held by Brad Parsley from Abilene Christian when he vaulted 17-8 in 1980.

Another top performer for K-State at the Relays was Pinkie Suggs. On Friday, Suggs captured first place honors in the women's shot put competition and Saturday finished second in the discus.

Suggs throw in the shot put was 49-10, which was 5½ feet farther than the throw by Karen Wood from Nebraska who finished second. In the discus competition, Suggs nudged out by Becky McGranahan of KU. McGranahan's throw was 156-5 while Suggs' throw was 154-10.

On Saturday, Veryl Switzer redeemed himself, after failing to qualify for the long jump finals on Friday, by winning the 100-meter dash with a first place time of 10.43. The time was a personal best for Switzer who started quick out of the blocks and was motivated by challengers at the end.

"I worked on my techniques because I haven't sprinted in a while," Switzer said. "I feel this is a positive aspect, maybe it will help me long jump."

Veryl Switzer races to finish first.

"I didn't think the field was too tough (in the 100-meters) but if you win the Kansas Relays, that's something," Steve Miller, head track coach, said.

In the men's 110-meter and 400-meter hurdles, Julius Mercer finished third and second respectively. In the 110-meter hurdles, Mercer was clocked at 13.9 and finished behind Albert Jones whose finishing time was 13.6 and Mark McKoy of York whose time was 13.7.

Mercer came on strong at the end of the 400-meter hurdles but didn't have enough distance to beat Jon Thomas of Indiana. Thomas' time was 50.76 and Mercer's was 51.63.

Deb Pihl once again showed strength in the distance runs of both 1,500 meters and 3,000 meters. In the 3,000-meter run, Pihl finished with a time of 9:42.00 to place third behind Svetiana Ulmasova of the Soviet Union and Wendy Van Mierlo of Illinois State.

ACCORDING TO MILLER, Pihl was a

Pole vault duel: Soviet's Krupsky defeats Lytle

By TRACY ALLEN

LAWRENCE — It was the United States vs. the Soviet Union, the Americans against the Russians, Doug Lytle vs. Alexander Krupsky.

The scene was set. It was the 58th Annual Kansas Relays and the crowd was getting anxious as it watched an intense group of young men fall over a bar. The young men — three Americans and one Russian — were all vying for the first place finish in the pole vault event.

With the addition of 12 championship athletes from the Soviet Union, the 1983 Relays was supposed to be a showcase of the best athletes in international track competition. On Saturday, the meet was what most experts predicted, as numerous Relay and school records were broken at the meet.

Leading that list of records was the pole vault which featured the best NCAA vaulters — KU's Jeff Buckingham, Oklahoma State's Joe Dial, K-State's Lytle and the top two performers from the Soviet Union, Krupsky and Sergei Kulibaba.

The day started off in a slow fashion. With the wind blowing at 20 to 25 miles an hour, 18 vaulters struggled through the gusts in hopes of the right to compete in the final eight. The torrent winds didn't keep Lytle and Krupsky from making the meet exciting, as they kept fans and teammates on their toes for the entire 2½ hours.

Doug Lytle celebrates in mid-air after clearing 18 feet in the pole vault. He later vaulted to a new school record of 18-4 and second place.

Deb Pihl rounds a corner with a pack of runners in the 3,000-meter run. Pihl placed third.

Nadezhda Olizarenko and Jim Ryun close the Relays by running a Soviet-American friendship relay.

Purple team wins football scrimmage

By BRAD GILLISPIE
Sports Editor

Propelled by a strong rushing performance, the K-State purple squad defeated the white squad at Saturday's intrasquad football scrimmage, 20-10.

Maurice Pearl, Greg Dageford and Todd Moody led the Purples' 216-yard running game. Pearl and Dageford ran the ball 11 times apiece, with Pearl picking up 64 yards and Dageford gaining 59. Moody rushed 13 times for 45 yards.

The Whites drew first blood in the game, scoring on their first possession after winning the coin toss. The drive was powered by the passing of Donnie Campbell, who threw for 49 yards in the drive with passes of 17 yards to Mark Toliver, 13 yards to Eric Mack and 19 yards to Darrel Wild. James Ricketts capped the drive with a one-yard plunge for the score.

After the Purples were forced to punt on their first possession, the Whites marched back down the field on short gainers interspersed with Campbell passes. The drive stalled at the 11-yard-line, where Steve Willis kicked a 23-yard field goal to put the Whites up 10-0.

THE PURPLES continued to have their difficulties, as they ran off only nine plays on their next possession before a Scott Fulhage punt put the Whites back deep in their own territory. This time the Purple defense stiffened. Campbell was sacked by L.E. Madison for a six-yard loss on the first play of the series and the Whites could not do more for the remainder of the half.

The Purples finally got something going on their final possession of the half, driving 53 yards before their attempt stalled at the 3-yard line. The big play of the series was a 17-yard run by Pearl that took the Purples to the White 5-yard line. John Chandler put the Purples on the board with a 21-yard field goal with nine seconds left.

The second half looked much like the first, as the Purples took the ball to begin the period and promptly punted it away after being unable to move it.

DISASTER STRUCK for the Whites the next series, however, as Ricketts fumbled the ball away on his own 32-yard line. The ball was recovered by the Purples, who took nine plays to score. Dageford took the ball over the goal line from the two. The kick by Steve Willis tied the score at 10.

The Whites came roaring back as Carlos Adams took a handoff from his own 35 and ran it out to mid-field. Adams was given the ball five more times in the series, picking his way to the Purples' 37. Campbell fumbled, however, and the Purples once again recovered the ball.

Weber and Toney Brown combined for a 27-yard pass to begin the Purples' drive. The Purple running game got the ball down to the White 17. The drive stalled out again, however, and Willis put the Purples ahead 13-10 with a 34-yard field goal.

AFTER BOTH TEAMS exchanged punts, turnovers again struck the Whites. Campbell threw a 12-yard pass to Eric Bailey, who fumbled the ball. The Purples fell on the ball at the White 36-yard line.

Moody and David Smith rushed the ball to power the Purples' scoring drive. Smith picked up 10 yards on the second play; Moody then took over, gaining 11 yards to the 13. Five plays later, Weber threw a pass to Gerald Alphin, who ran the ball in for a touchdown with 3:44 remaining in the game. The score was the last of the game and put the Purples up 20-10.

The White rushing game was led by Adams, Mark Hundley and Ricketts. Adams and Hundley each rushed the ball nine times, with Adams picking up 39 yards and Hundley gaining 34. Ricketts also had 39 yards, carrying the ball 13 times.

CAMPBELL'S PASSING was the mainstay of the White offense, as he threw for 88 yards, completing 8-13. Weber completed 8-14 for the Purples, amassing 93 yards. Brown was the top receiver for the Purples, catching three passes for 51 yards. Wild caught three for 39 yards for the Whites.

On the kicking side, Fulhage did the punting for both teams, booting the ball six times for a 43.3 yard average. His longest kick was 50 yards.

The defense, posing skepticism for some due to loss of graduating players, proved to be less of a problem than anticipated. Madison led the Purples with three unassisted tackles, two of them for losses of 11 yards. Bill Keeley led the Purple linebackers with two unassisted tackles and four assists, while Jack Epps had three unassisted and three assisted tackles in the backfield.

The Whites were led on the line by Greg Strahm, who had four unassisted tackles and two assists. Bob Daniels had six unassisted tackles from his linebacker spot, and Scott Wentzel had four in the backfield.

The scrimmage ended the spring training for the Wildcats, who begin their 11-game 1983 schedule Sept. 3, with a home game against Long Beach State.

Pitching, hitting help K-State softball team claim sweep of Wichita State Triangular

By TRACY ALLEN
Assistant Sports Editor

WICHITA — With improved hitting and the strong pitching performance of Janel Anderson, the K-State softball team got back on the right track this weekend as it swept the Wichita State Triangular Friday and Saturday.

The Wildcats' strength at the plate was unstoppable as they rapped out 20 hits in the four-game span.

In the first game against Pittsburg State, the 'Cats used a fifth-inning boost and the arm of Anderson to keep Pittsburg on its feet through most of the contest.

Pam Rufener got the Wildcat's attack started as she started the inning off with a single. Leslie Taylor continued the drive as she singled to put runners at first and second with no outs. Cindy Wasinger, who has been out a week due to a sprained ankle, reached first on a fielder's choice. With one out, Anderson walked to load the bases once again.

Third baseman Rachelle Borders retaliated with a double, scoring Rufener and Taylor.

Annette Kirkham reached first base after an error by Pittsburg's shortstop, setting up K-State's third run by Anderson who reached home plate after the error.

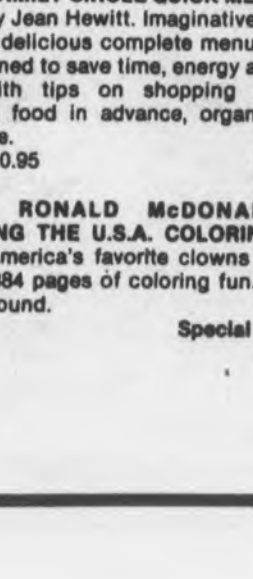
Anderson, the Wildcat's celebrated southpaw, pitched one of her finest game's ever as a Wildcat. The senior from Overbrook pitched her first no-hitter of the season.

In the second game against Wichita State on Friday, the 'Cats' power at the plate again was the determining factor as it gave them a 4-0 win.

Like the Pittsburg State game, K-State scored all of its runs in the fourth inning.

Kirkham began the inning with a single to left field which brought up Kelly Scoles who reached first base on an error. Outfielder Pam Hentzler's single loaded the bases, bringing up Rufener. She singled, knocking in Kirkham.

Taylor followed Rufener's single with a shot to left, scoring both Rufener and Wasinger and giving the 'Cats a 3-0 edge. Anderson ended K-State's scoring as she scored on a sacrificed fly, raising the 'Cats' lead to 4-0.



"There was good pitching, no errors and we gave up only two hits," said Wildcat head coach Ralph Currie. "They're playing a little better, a lot better. We didn't make
